Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) uniformed and (b) civilian chaplains there are in each of the three services, broken down by denomination. [92680]

Dr. Moonie: There are currently 293 service chaplains and 275 civilian 'officiating' chaplains serving with the armed forces. The table provides a breakdown by denomination.

[1] As at 20 January 2003.

[2] As at 1 December 2002.

[3] As at 1 January 2003.

[4] Figures include both officiating and honorary officiating chaplains.

[5] 28 various denominations (breakdown of figures not readily available).

The term civilian chaplain is misleading. Support to serving chaplains in the Royal Navy and RAF, and on many Army units, is provided by 'officiating chaplains'. These are not full-time ministers but local clergy who in addition to their parochial duties will provide part-time support to military units without a chaplain, cover when the serving chaplain is deployed, and help and advise members of other denominations when a suitable commissioned chaplain or representative of the appropriate denomination is not available.

Service Discharges

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 27 November 2002, Official Report, column 324W, what was the breakdown by rank of those discharged under QR9.413 in the last 15 years. [92701]

Dr. Moonie: The breakdown by rank of those discharged under Queen's Regulations 1975 Paragraph 9.413 'Not required for a full Army career' in the last 15 years is shown in the following table.

Year	Rank
	CPL + above	LCPL	PTE	Year total
1988	69	174	249	492
1989	97	130	240	467
1990	34	49	57	140

2001 and 2002	5	14	31	50
Total	651	857	1,017	2,525

Due to the low numbers involved, the figures for 2001 and 2002 have been combined and the information is not broken down by rank above Corporal (Cpl.), because this could identify individuals and breach disclosure and confidentiality policy.

Service Personnel (Discharges)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers subject to manning control in the last 10 years then elected their right to discharge and were discharged under QR9.373. [92700]

Dr. Moonie: The number of soldiers who were subject to manning control, then elected their right to discharge, and were subsequently discharged under Queen's Regulations, paragraph 9.373 'By right having given the appropriate notice' is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Storm Shadow

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when Storm Shadow will enter service with the RAF. [91034]

Mr. Ingram: Due to technical problems experienced in the development of Storm Shadow we are reviewing the programme's timescales with MBDA.

We are working hard with MBDA to ensure that the RAF gets this important capability into service as soon as possible, while not jeopardising the long-term performance of the system.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Affordable Housing (Infrastructure Provision)

Helen Southworth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action he is taking to ensure that planning of the siting of affordable housing takes into account infrastructure provision with special reference to (a) transport, (b) schooling (c) medical and (d) other local service needs of the residents. [93003]

Mr. McNulty: Planning Policy Guidance Note 3: "Housing" (paragraph 31) advises that in deciding which sites to allocate for housing, local planning authorities should assess their potential and suitability for development having regard to a number of matters such as the capacity of existing and potential infrastructure, including public transport, and social infrastructure (such as schools and hospitals); and the ability to provide sufficient demand to sustain appropriate local services and facilities.

Brent Cross Shopping Centre

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to make a decision on the planning issues concerning the proposed extension of Brent Cross shopping centre; and if he will make a statement. [93072]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister is currently considering the responses received to his reference back letter of 29 November 2002 and hopes to issue a decision shortly.

Container Ports

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his policy is on approving the development of non-brownfield sites for container port use. [91698]

Mr. McNulty: The general policy of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in respect of development for which planning permission is necessary is to encourage the use of previously developed land for development in preference to building on greenfield land. Each planning application has, however, to be considered on its merits and there may be circumstances in which the use of brownfield sites for container port use is not appropriate.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what reasons underlay the technical adjustment of £1,000,000 to correct the treatment of an Ordnance Survey interest payment in his departmental expenditure limit. [92510]

Mr. McNulty: This adjustment was to correct an inputting error in the budgeting treatment for Ordnance Survey in the Main Estimates 2002–03. It did not reflect any alteration to scheduled net interest transactions made by Ordnance Survey in 2002–03. These were in respect of:

interest receivable from the National Loans Fund in respect of Ordnance Survey's cash deposits there; interest payable by Ordnance Survey to the National Loans Fund, on its deemed loans. These loans were in respect of 50 per cent. of net assets on the vesting of Ordnance Survey as a trading fund on 1 April 1999, repayable over the period 1999–2012.

I refer the hon. Member to Notes 5 and 12 on pages 63 and 67 of Ordnance Survey's Annual Report and Accounts 2001–02, which refers to these transactions for the two previous years. The Ordnance Survey's Annual Report and Accounts 2001–02 have been placed in the Libraries of the House

Empty Homes (Select Committee Report)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to have completed his evaluation of the report in the previous session of Parliament of the Transport, Local Government and Regions Select Committee on Empty Homes. [92646]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister sets out our evaluation of the Select Committee's report on Empty Homes in our response which were presented to Parliament in May 2002 (Cm 5514), copies of which were placed in the Library.

We are taking forward a number of recommendations made in the report as part of our programme of work.

Environmentally Protected Sites (Planning Permission)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what criteria he applies in deciding to overrule public inquiry reports refusing permission for industrial development of environmentally protected sites. [91696]

Mr. McNulty: Decisions on every planning application are made on their merits, taking account of the facts of the application, national planning policy, development plans, the recommendations of a public inquiry inspector and any other material considerations.

Fire Station Equipment

Mr Clifton-Brown: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will take up the offer from Mike Bennett of Vantage Point, Mitcheldene, Gloucestershire, to make available fire station premises with two modern fully-equipped red fire engines. [85182]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is very grateful for all offers of assistance during the current fire dispute. We understand that in December officers from Gloucestershire Fire and Rescue Service and the Army examined Mr. Bennett's fire appliances but decided not to use them. Since then two members of the Fire Service College have examined the appliances, with a view to using them in training, to replace appliances from the college that are currently being used by those providing emergency fire cover.

Geographic Information

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment the Intra Governmental Group on Geographic Information has made of the size of the geographic information market in the UK. [92511]

Mr. McNulty: The Intra Governmental group on Geographic Information (IGGI) has made no estimate of the size of the UK Geographic Information market.

Green Belt

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he has taken to address the concerns about the protection of green belt land from speculative development expressed in Early Day Motion 1236 in the previous Session of Parliament. [92648]

Mr. McNulty: Government policy on the green belt is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note (PPG) 2, which states that protecting the countryside from encroachment is one of the main purposes of including land in the green belt. In addition to the usual strict controls on development in the countryside, in green belts there is a "general presumption against inappropriate development", which is by definition harmful to the green belt and conflicts with the purposes of including land in it.

The Government reaffirmed their commitment to the protection and enhancement of the green belt in my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister statement on sustainable communities, housing and planning in the House of Commons on 18 July 2002.

Housing (Stock Transfer)

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which local authorities have taken forward large scale voluntary transfer, broken down by party control; and what assessment he has made of the benefits of Large Scale Voluntary Transfer. [92010]

Mr. McNulty: The list shows local authorities that have completed large scale voluntary transfers of their housing stock broken down by current party control. My right hon. Friend The Deputy Prime Minister will shortly announce the Government's comprehensive long term programme for sustainable communities. This will include an outline of how the Government sees stock transfer as contributing to the delivery of the decent homes target.

Islington

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what discussions he has had with Islington council on the disposal of the freehold of buildings which house Government-funded regeneration programmes; and if he will make a statement. [92326]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has held no discussions with Islington council on the disposal of the freehold of buildings which house Government-funded regeneration programmes.

London Ambulance Service

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many cycle response units are in service with the London

Ambulance Service; in which London boroughs they are situated; how many are due to be introduced in 2003; and if he will make a statement. [91654]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

The London Ambulance Service has one cycle response unit comprising three cycles staffed by a team of up to six technicians or paramedics.

At this time the unit covers only the highly pedestrianised and congested area around Covent Garden and Leicester Square. There are no current plans to introduce cycle response units elsewhere in London.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many vacancies there are within the London Ambulance Service for frontline paramedics; and if he will make a statement. [91676]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

The London Ambulance Service (LAS) has 2,181 staff in post, out of an establishment of 2,298. There are therefore 117 vacancies. The LAS is training staff to reach the establishment figure. The LAS is on target with its recruitment programme for 2002–03, made possible by an increase in funding from commissioners.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of frontline London ambulance staff have been issued with anti-stab vests; and if he will make a statement. [91677]

Mr. Hutton: I have been asked to reply.

The London Ambulance Service (LAS) has taken the decision to equip all front line staff with stab vests, given the very real threat of violence towards staff. Extensive trials have taken place and a suitable vest has now been selected. The LAS anticipates that all front line staff will have been issued with a personal made to measure stab vest by June of this year.

Planning Appeals

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to introduce the same rights of appeal for objectors and applicants within the planning system. [92710]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to introduce a right of appeal for objectors against the decision of a local planning authority in determining an application for planning permission. The views of interested parties are taken into account in drawing up development plan policies and when reaching decisions on individual planning applications. The Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill contains measures which will make the planning system more accessible and transparent, and give greater opportunities for local residents and third parties to participate more effectively in the planning process as a whole.

Planning Guidance

Helen Southworth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what action he will take to ensure that the PPG 3 sequentiality guidance is effectively applied to protect greenfield sites in the light of the judgment in the Court of Appeal in Rowlinson v. Warrington Borough Council. [93004]

Mr. McNulty: Planning Policy Guidance Note 3: "Housing" makes clear the Government's commitment to meet the country's future housing needs in the most sustainable way, by giving priority to re-using previously-developed land within urban areas, bringing empty homes back into use and converting existing buildings, in preference to the development of greenfield sites.

It is normally for local planning authorities to determine planning applications made to them. In doing so they are required to take account of all considerations which may be material, including the guidance in PPG3.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is not convinced that it is necessary to take any further action in the light of the decision in Rowlinson v. Warrington, which was determined on the facts of the case.

South East Region

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many people are employed by (a) SEEDA, (b) SEERA, and (c) GOSE; and what has been the annual budget of each organisation since its inception. [91694]

Mr. Leslie: People currently employed (full and part-time):

Thames Crossings

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the proposals for new Thames river crossings east of Tower Bridge; what their current status is; what the timetable is for consideration; and which public authorities will be responsible for promoting and determining each case. [92086]

Mr. McNulty: Proposals for new East Thames River Crossings within the London boundary are a matter for the Mayor of London and Transport for London. These are:

Thames Gateway Bridge, at Galleons Reach linking Barking and Thamesmead—two lanes each way for general traffic and one lane each way dedicated for use by public transport vehicles; a business case is being prepared for the scheme; the Mayor of London and Transport for London are responsible for timetabling and promotion.

Silvertown Link—a road bridge or tunnel between the Greenwich peninsula and Silvertown; Transport for London are continuing to develop the scheme as part of their river crossings package; the Mayor of London and Transport for London are responsible for timetabling and promotion.

Docklands Light Railway extension to Woolwich; a draft Transport and Works Act Order for the DLR scheme has been deposited; the Mayor of London and Transport for London are responsible for timetabling and promotion.

In addition, the Channel Tunnel Rail Link (CTRL) Thames Tunnel, a twin-bore railway tunnel between Swanscombe and West Thurrock, is currently under construction and is due to open with the rest of CTRL Section 2 in 2007.

There are no other formal proposals for new crossings at this time.

Transfer of Undertakings

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to extend TUPE regulations to local authorities who transfer staff to contractors following contractual agreements. [92546]

Mr. Leslie: Clauses 101 and 102 of the Local Government Bill will confer new powers on the Secretary of State and the National Assembly of Wales to require best value authorities in England and Wales, when engaged in contracting-out exercises, to deal with staff matters in accordance with directions. It is intended that the direction-making powers will be used to ensure that contracting exercises are conducted either on the basis that TUPE will apply or, in circumstances where TUPE does not apply, that staff involved should be treated no less favourably than had the regulations applied, unless there are exceptional circumstances. The clauses also ensure that TUPE transferees from local authorities will be offered either retention of the Local Government Pension Scheme or a broadly comparable scheme.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Education Staff (Herefordshire)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many (a) secondary school teachers, (b) primary school teachers and (c) classroom assistants are employed in Herefordshire. [91735]

Mr. Miliband: The following table provides full-time equivalent (FTE) January 2002 figures for maintained schools in Herefordshire.

Full-time equivalent (FTE) January 2002 figures for maintained schools in Herefordshire

	Nursery/primary	Secondary
Regular teachers FTE	690	630
Teaching assistants FTE[1]	100	50
Other non-teaching staff FTE[2]	250	130

Notes:

Includes nursery assistants, special needs support staff, minority ethnic pupil support staff and non-teaching assistants.

Includes administrative staff, technicians and other education support staff, and child care staff in boarding schools.

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Examination Papers

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what actions he has taken to ensure that examination papers are marked and returned on time to schools and colleges. [92012]

Mr. Miliband: On 3 December, we announced to the House that we were making an additional £6 million available to QCA to support the public examination system in 2003. The money will be spent on ensuring that the 2003 examinations are delivered accurately and effectively and particular attention will be paid to ensuring that there are sufficient examiners. The Examinations Task Force, chaired by the QCA with representatives from the awarding bodies and the teaching profession, will oversee delivery of the examinations.

Excluded Pupils

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many and what percentage of children excluded from mainstream schooling were in an alternative form of education in the last period for which figures are available. [90913]

Mr. Miliband: All local education authorities were committed to offering a full timetable to permanently excluded pupils from September 2002. In targeted schools in 34 local authorities, provision is also being made for those excluded on a temporary basis. These arrangements will be extended to a further 27 local authorities in the coming year.

The most recent information on type of provision for permanently excluded pupils is for September 2001 and is shown in the table.

Leadership Incentive Grant

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what estimate he has made of the number of new consultants needed to assess applications for the Leadership Incentive grants; and if he will make a statement. [91524]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 20 January 2003]: We have offered each partnership formed for the purposes of the Leadership Incentive Grant the cost of 5 days of consultancy to facilitate collaborative working between groups of schools receiving the Leadership Incentive Grant. The number and composition of collaboratives of schools receiving the Leadership Incentive Grant will be determined according to local circumstances, but we estimate that there will be some 200 collaboratives. It will be possible for a Leadership Consultant to facilitate up to three collaboratives.

There is no requirement for schools to complete an application for the Leadership Incentive Grant. Leadership Collaboratives will be required to produce a collaborative plan to be submitted to the Secretary of State for approval. Plans will be assessed within the Department, using existing resources.

Literacy and Numeracy Strategies

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the development of the literacy and numeracy strategies.[R] [92988]

Mr. Miliband: The literacy and numeracy strategies, which have helped teachers to deliver the highest ever standards in English and maths, will remain at the heart of our continuing drive to raise achievement in primary schools within a broad and enriched curriculum. We will continue to develop the strategies' approach to teaching and learning in the light of good practice and in consultation with schools.

Non-governmental Organisations

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, pursuant to his answer of 26 November 2003, Official Report, column 189W, on non-governmental organisations, if he will list the voluntary and private organisations to which the Department makes grants directly. [89334]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department's current accounting system does not distinguish between payments made as grants and those made through contractual arrangements, nor does it identify the status of the organisation to which payments have been made. We have explored how this information could be held centrally and have taken action to include this type of information in the design of the Department's future accounting system, which is planned to be in place from April 2004.

The information could, therefore, be provided in the form requested only at disproportionate cost. I have, however, placed in the Libraries a list of organisations that either received a grant or to whom the Department made a contract payment from programme funds during 2001–02. Specific details of what is covered by the list are set out in the material placed in the Libraries.

Paper Supplies

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills who the suppliers are of his Department's (a) paper and (b) paper products. [91901]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department has three suppliers of paper and paper products:

Banner Business Supplies (via the Stationery contract)

Alphagraphics (via the personalised printed business stationery contract) and

Dixon and Roe (via the bulk paper contract).

The Government's policy is that all public procurement of goods and services is to be based on value for money, having due regard to propriety and regularity. Each Department is responsible for its own procurements.

School Spending

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money per (a) secondary and (b) primary school pupil is allocated in the local government education spending formula as a top-up to reflect additional costs for recruitment and retention of staff in (i) Staffordshire and (ii) other shire counties, for the year 2003–04. [91886]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 21 January 2003]: Staffordshire is not amongst those shire counties which will receive this top-up in 2003–04. The Area Cost Adjustment is given to those areas whose average wages are above a threshold. The average amount per pupil that shire counties will receive to reflect the additional costs of recruitment and retention through the Area Cost Adjustment is £57 for primary pupils and £72 for secondary pupils.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money per (a) secondary and (b) primary school pupil is allocated in the Local Government Education spending formula as basic entitlement in (i) Staffordshire and (ii) other shire counties, for the year 2003–04. [91887]

Mr. Miliband [holding answer 21 January 2003]: The amount allocated for each secondary and primary pupil as the basic entitlement in 2003–04 is the same for all authorities. For a primary pupil it is £2,006 and for a secondary pupil it is £2,659.

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much money per (a) secondary and (b) primary school pupil is allocated in the Local Government Education spending formula as a top-up to reflect deprivation among pupils in (i) Staffordshire and (ii) other shire counties, for the year 2003–04. [91888]

Mr. Miliband [holding reply 21 January 2003]: The additional amount allocated for each secondary and primary school pupil in deprived circumstances is the same for all authorities—in 2003–04 it is £1,300 per pupil.

Taken as an average over each category of pupil, whether they are deprived or not, the average additional amount for deprivation for each pupil in 2003–04 is as follows:

	Primary	Secondary
Staffordshire	40	39
Shire counties average	43	41

The average for Staffordshire is lower than that for all shire counties because Staffordshire has a lower proportion of pupils in deprived circumstances than some other counties.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Access (Children)

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many representations he has received from UK nationals who are being prevented from making contact with their children in Germany and in other EU nations [illegible]wing divorce settlement in the UK which gave them the entitlement to have regular contact with their children; and if he will make a statement. [93066]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There are five UK nationals who have contacted the FCO because they are experiencing difficulties in getting access to their children in other EU nations, following divorce settlements in the UK which entitled them to regular access. Two of these cases are in Germany, two are in France and one case is in Finland. I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Keith Vaz) on 6 November 2002, Official Report, columns 624–25W, which outlined cases we have dealt with in Germany in the last 5 years.

All EU nations are signatories to the Hague Convention on International Child Abduction, which the Lord Chancellor's Department (LCD) leads on. If a parent contacts us for advice on a child abduction case in a Hague Convention country we refer them to LCD. We can also offer practical help and support through our Posts overseas, such as providing lists of English speaking lawyers, attending court hearings etc.

Afghanistan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the interim Government of Afghanistan on human rights. [92854]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last discussed human rights with the Afghan Transitional Administration when he met President Karzai at the Bonn talks on Afghanistan in December 2002. I raised human rights with Vice-President Khalili when we met in London today.

Bangladesh

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Bangladesh concerning the violation of human rights and persecution of religious minorities in Bangladesh. [92658]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our High Commission in Dhaka monitors closely reports of human rights abuses in Bangladesh. We are concerned by reports of mistreatment of detainees, including deaths in custody, associated with "Operation Clean Heart". We have urged the Bangladesh Government to follow the due process of law in all cases. We have raised allegations of attacks against minorities on several occasions with the Bangladesh Government, both at a senior level in Dhaka and with regional government officials, encouraging them to investigate all allegations fully.

Departmental Refurbishment

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many offices in his Department have been refurbished in the last three years, and what has been the cost to public funds. [86727]

Mr[illegible]mmell: In the FCO home estate the only office building refurbished within the past three years is the Old Admiralty building. The cost was £63 million and the project was part of the FCO's strategy to concentrate its London staff into two buildings in order to reduce home estate running costs by 50 per cent.

The FCO has committed approximately £300,000 per annum for the past three years (2000–01, 2001–02, 2002–03) to the refurbishment of its offices that form part of the UK estate. This refurbishment covers routine works to general office space, corridors and common parts together with fine rooms and conference rooms.

In the overseas estate major office refurbishments were completed in Riga (£918,000) Tehran (£977,000), Tel Aviv (£384,000), Istanbul (£557,000), and Rangoon (£280,000).

Other, smaller, projects will have been completed through funds devolved to overseas posts. We maintain no central record of these and it is not possible to obtain full details without incurring disproportionate cost.

Dubai

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions in the past 12 months the Government has made an approach to the Government of Dubai in relation to specific cases of Britons imprisoned there who may be considered for amnesty. [90028]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: In the last year our consular officers in Dubai have forwarded, but did not support, two pleas for clemency to the Dubai authorities on behalf of relatives and MPs of convicted British nationals.

Health and Safety Strategy

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which senior officials within his Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board, or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised. [89494]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: As with all Departments, the Permanent Under-Secretary takes overall responsibility for health and safety. At departmental board level, the Director General for Corporate Affairs has been given particular responsibility and is designated the FCO's Health and Safety 'Champion'. New entrants to the FCO are notified of the DG Corporate Affairs' responsibility during their induction. His role is also identified in the new health and safety policy statement, soon to be issued.

Special Advisers/Press Officers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers have been employed by his Department in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and at what cost in each year. [92440]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office employs two special advisors at any one time, the full cost of which is listed in the table[1]. All press officers employed are civil servants whose salary is appropriate to their grade.

1998–99	86,992
1999–2000	89,188
2000–01	94,697
2001–02	138,593
2002–03	131,062

[1] It was not possible to ascertain the cost prior to 1997 without incurring disproportionate costs.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which intelligence indicates may be in possession of weapons of mass destruction. [93101]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Under exemption 1*(a)* of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, it is not generally our policy to publish intelligence information.

However, under the terms of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT), the United States, Russia, China, France and the United Kingdom are legally entitled to possess nuclear weapons.

Additionally, India and Pakistan have tested nuclear devices. We continue to urge Israel to resolve international concerns about its nuclear status by acceding to the NPT as a non-nuclear weapons state. We also know that Iraq has significant biological and chemical weapons capabilities and, were UN sanctions to be lifted, we believe it could develop a nuclear weapon within five years. The Democratic People's Republic of Korea has admitted to US officials that it has been pursuing a programme for the enrichment of uranium. We believe that they have the capability to use this material to manufacture nuclear weapons. We also believe that they have previously diverted sufficient such material to manufacture at least one nuclear weapon.

There are four States Party to the Chemical Weapons Convention (the US, Russia, India and one other State Party) that have declared possession of chemical weapons. They are currently in the process of destroying them in accordance with their obligations under the Treaty.

In the past there have been public statements of concern about reports that Iran, Libya and Syria pursuing programmes to develop WMD and the means for their delivery.

Zanzibar

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) when his Department was first informed of the increased threat to visitors to Zanzibar; [92169]

(2) when the British high commission in Dar es Salaam responded to the increased terrorist threat to visitors to Tanzania, especially Zanzibar; and what action was taken; [92170]

(3) what reports his Department received from the (a) Russian and (b) US authorities concerning the increased terrorist threat to visitors to Zanzibar, and when. [92172]

Mr. Straw: We learnt that the US were changing their travel advice for Zanzibar on the evening of 10 January. Our existing advice already gave a robust warning to British travellers of the risks involved in going to Tanzania—including Zanzibar. Following discussions between missions locally and between FCO officials and the US State Department on why they had changed their travel advice and an assessment of the latest available intelligence, we amended our travel advice for Tanzania on 15 January. I cannot, of course, comment on the specifics of intelligence matters. However, the Agencies receive a large number of reports on a daily basis from a range of foreign liaison services. Relationships with these liaison services, which include the Americans and the Russians, are strong and positive.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department updated the FCO travel advice concerning the increased terrorist threat to visitors to Zanzibar; and if he will make a statement. [92171]

Mr. Straw: The FCO travel advice for Tanzania, which includes Zanzibar, was last up-dated on 15 January 2003.

The Travel Advice notice already gave appropriate warnings to British travellers of the risks involved in going to Tanzania—including Zanzibar. The revised advice included additional information about the risks on Zanzibar but did not change the advice.

Our advice throughout this period has been in line with that of both the Americans and the Australians—all of us warned that there were dangers in travelling to east Africa in general and to Zanzibar specifically; none of us advised against travel. Australia up-dated its advice on 16 January in line with changes in UK and US advice. The French amended their advice on 17 January.

HEALTH

Acute Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made comparing the level of provision in services at acute hospitals and the recommendations of the Royal colleges about minimum volumes of service for different kinds of acute services to maintain professional standards. [88287]

Mr. Hutton: New evidence about safety and quality of services is emerging all the time. Levels of provision in different services are reviewed from time to time in the light of new evidence, including the recommendations of Royal colleges.

Where evidence between volume and outcome is clear, appropriate action will be taken; for example, through the development of particular standards as part of a national service framework.

Alzheimer's Disease

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the availability through the NHS of drugs to combat Alzheimer's disease. [91415]

Jacqui Smith: The three main drugs available through the national health service for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease are donepezil (Aricept), rivastigmine (Exelon) and galantamine (Reminyl). They are available on the NHS to all who meet the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) criteria and NHS bodies are under a statutory obligation to provide funding.

In addition, memantine (Ebixa) was launched in October 2002. While it is available for prescription on the NHS, NICE has yet to assess it for clinical and cost effectiveness, so for the moment, NHS bodies across the country have to access the publicly available evidence about this new drug and determine local policies for its use.

Ambulance Station, Stacksteads

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the future of the ambulance station in Stacksteads, Rossendale, Lancashire; when a decision was taken that it is surplus to NHS requirements; and who took that decision. [91860]

Jacqui Smith: According to our available records, there have been no representations on this issue. The approved estates strategy of Lancashire Ambulance Service National Health Service Trust have confirmed that the ambulance station at Stacksteads is functionally unsuitable and that options should be explored for its relocation to an alternative site in the locality. However the trust has not declared the existing site surplus to requirements.

Cancer Waiting Times

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the audit of cancer waiting times recommended in the report of the working group on cancer waiting times was undertaken; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [89648]

Ms Blears: A cancer waiting times survey was undertaken by the health services management centre at the University of Birmingham in April/May 1998.

The survey looked at cancer waiting times between general practitioner referral and first outpatient appointment and GP referral and first treatment of all cancers diagnosed in October 1997.

The findings were reported in the British Medical Journal, 320: 838–839 25 March 2000.

Child Protection

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance is given to health and social services professionals regarding the retention of unsubstantiated allegations on child protection issues. [92292]

Jacqui Smith: "Working Together to Safeguard Children" (1999), the Government's guide to inter-agency working to safeguard and promote the welfare of children, includes guidance to agencies and professionals in relation to record keeping.

"Working Together to Safeguard Children" states that, in cases where child protection inquiries do not result in the substantiation of referral concerns, case notes should be retained in accordance with agency record retention policies. These policies should ensure that records are stored safely and can be retrieved promptly and efficiently.

Children in Care

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham on 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 499W, on looked after children, how many of the 920 children who went missing from their usual place of residence are still missing; and what action has he taken to (a) reduce the numbers of runaways and (b) trace those runaways who have still not returned to local authority care. [92599]

Jacqui Smith: Of the 920 children who went missing from their usual place of residence at any time during the year 2000–01, 190 were absent from their agreed placement on 31 March 2001. Data on children missing from care during the year ending 31 March 2002 will be available at the end of March 2003.

The Department issued guidance on 28 November 2002, "Children Missing from Care and Home—a guide to good practice", alongside the Social Exclusion Unit's report, "Young Runaways", which makes recommendations on:

- prevention of running away
- ensuring the safety of those that run away
- ensuring that there is appropriate help on return
- co-ordinating responsibilities at local and national level

This guidance requires that where young people are missing from care, local authorities must demonstrate commitment to their safety and welfare and act to ensure that they are found as soon as possible:

- each children's home and foster carer should have written procedures that must be followed where a child is missing
- service managers must monitor patterns of absence from individual children's homes
- and foster carers

reports about patterns of absence must be available to senior managers and to the National Care Standards Commission.

Clozaril

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health by what date he expects the drug clozaril to be available across all PCTs in England and Wales for the treatment of schizophrenia. [92552]

Jacqui Smith: The technology appraisal of the use of atypical antipsychotics in schizophrenia was published by the National Institute for Clinical Excellence (NICE) in June 2002 and included recommendations concerning clozapine (Clozaril).

From 1 January 2002, the national health service has had three months from the date of publication of each technology appraisal guidance to provide funding, so that clinical decisions made by doctors involving NICE recommended treatments or drugs can be funded.

Cot Deaths

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on his Department's strategy to prevent cot death. [92545]

Jacqui Smith: Our strategy is based on expert advice on the avoidance of factors associated with the tragedy of cot death. These are particularly related to position and environment during sleep. This advice is promulgated through leaflets and literature on the care of babies. It is also the subject of discussion between families and the primary health care team.

There is, however, need for further research relating to the precise sleeping environment of infants who die unexpectedly, and this is being undertaken.

Data Protection Act

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to enforce compliance by individual health trusts in supplying information required under the Data Protection Act 1998. [92186]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 21 January 2003]: The responsibility for compliance with the Data Protection Act rests with individual national health service trusts. Enforcement is undertaken by the Information Commissioner.

The Department supports the NHS in meeting data protection requirements through the provision of guidance and through performance management arrangements.

Hospitals (Management)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether (a) the Secta Group Ltd., (b) Quo Health and (c) Sema Health have managed a hospital before. [89542]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 13 January 2003]: The independent panel set up by the National Health Service Appointments Commission assessed the general ability of each private sector organisation to run a hospital trust.

The expertise and experience of every organisation which tenders for a national health service franchise and individuals leading any bid on behalf of that organisation will be thoroughly and rigorously assessed before any contract is awarded.

Inventures

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis the Miller Group was selected as the preferred bidder for the property and trading arm at NHS Estates, Inventures. [92540]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 21 January]: A consortium of Miller Ventures and Bank of Scotland was selected as preferred bidder for the property and trading arm at NHS Estates because, following a comprehensive bid evaluation process, its bid was considered to offer best value.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what terms were offered by Miller Group and the William Pears Group in bidding for Inventures; and what assessment was made of the value of proposed clauses relating to claw-back profits on future land sales. [92541]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 21 January]: Both bidders offered a fixed price for Inventures, payable on completion. In relation to the property estate both bidders offered to make a substantial initial payment followed by"overage" or claw-back payments when the sites in the property portfolio obtain planning consent, or are sold.

Overage payments were ascribed an estimated present value (on the same basis for each bid) by reference to risk factors including likelihood of obtaining planning permission, estimated value of the sites with or without planning permission, time at which overage payment is likely to be triggered, percentage overage offered and other relevant factors.

In addition, both bidders also offered to explore ways of introducing a new element of claw back payment by entering into joint venture arrangements with house builders, the effect of which would be to include some development profit in the sums to be clawed back. Whilst this willingness to seek ways to include further sums into claw-back arrangements was assessed as being preferable to a refusal to contemplate such schemes, the degree of uncertainty surrounding this element of the proposals was such that bid evaluation was concentrated upon the standard contractual claw-back arrangements.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the chief executive of Inventures and other senior staff were told about incentive arrangements likely to be offered in the event of a successful bid from one or other of the final round bidders for Inventures. [92542]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 21 January 2003]: The management and staff of Inventures, which is being sold as part of the National Health Service Estates public-private partnership project, were not made aware of the contents of any bid in relation to incentives offered by the bidders.

NHS Estates rules for bidders involved in the project also prohibits un-chaperoned meetings between the management team and bidders and, to the best of our knowledge and belief, no such meetings have taken place.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has launched an internal investigation into the bidding process for Inventures; and what discussions he has held with the National Audit Office over the bidding process for Inventures. [92543]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 21 January]: During the evaluation period, a review was undertaken in real time by an independent firm of consultants who concluded the process was satisfactory.

A subsequent review by the private finance unit of the Department of health concluded that the bid evaluation process was properly conducted and the preferred bidder selection was correct.

Following a complaint by an unsuccessful bidder, the National Audit Office is also reviewing the process, but this review has not yet been completed and so its conclusions are notavailable at the current time.

Mental Health Bill

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans his Department has to publish the responses to the draft Mental Health Bill consultation. [92579]

Jacqui Smith: The consultation responses received in respect of the draft Mental Health Bill will be made available to the public before introduction of the Bill, except where respondents have asked for confidentiality.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will provide a right to assessment of mental health needs for any individual making a reasonable request for such assessment in the new Mental Health Bill. [92580]

Jacqui Smith: The purpose of the Bill is to provide a legal framework for the treatment of someone with a mental disorder without their consent; it is not about rights to services. It does, however, create a duty to assess whether the conditions for compulsion are satisfied in individual cases, which may be triggered by any reasonable request where the conditions appear to be met. Once under compulsion, every patient must have a written care plan of treatment.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to adopt the Joint Committee on Human Rights recommendation that the Code of Practice in the draft Mental Health Bill be given statutory force. [92581]

Jacqui Smith: We are pleased that the Joint Committee on Human Rights has welcomed the major improvements to the safeguards for patients' human rights proposed in the draft Mental Health Bill.

We are currently considering very carefully all the recommendations contained in their Report on the draft Bill.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that no person will be deemed as suffering from a mental disorder under the provisions of new mental health legislation solely for the purpose of preventing commission of illegal or disorderly acts. [92582]

Jacqui Smith: This already is the policy. The Bill will not allow the use of compulsory powers on any person solely to prevent them from offending. The powers of the Bill may only be used where the conditions are met. This means that there must be a diagnosis of mental disorder, and that there must be appropriate treatment available for the patient. Once under compulsion, every patient must have a written plan of treatment.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the proposals contained in the draft Mental Health Bill relate to the Government's strategy on alcohol. [92583]

Jacqui Smith: The proposals in the draft Mental Health Bill will remove the existing exclusion for alcohol dependency found in the Mental Health Act 1983. This will mean that there is no barrier to people being treated under compulsory powers when this is necessary because the conditions in the Bill are satisfied.

The Bill will provide a legal framework for compulsory treatment, which will be compatible with developments in mental health services and other health implementation frameworks. This includes the Government's commitment to implementing the national alcohol harm reduction strategy by 2004. The recent consultation on the strategy included questions about the relationship between alcohol misuse and mental health problems and sought views on how services could be best provided. The consultation period ended on 15 January and an interim analysis will be published by the Cabinet Office strategy unit in the spring.

Methicillin Resistant Staphylococcus Aureus

Andrew Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what change there has been in the rate of death certificates showing methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus and related diseases as a cause of death since 29 March 2001. [92734]

Ms Blears: Information concerning methicillin resistant staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) on death certificates is not currently available from routine mortality statistics and has to be obtained by special research studies. The latest available figures for England and Wales cover 1993 to 1998 and were published in the British Medical Journal in December 2002.

April 2001 saw the introduction of national mandatory surveillance of MRSA blood stream infections. The results for the first year of this scheme for every NHS Acute Trust in England were published in the Communicable Disease Report (CDR) Weekly on 20 June 2002. These data are available on the Public Health Laboratory Service's website www.phls.co.uk/publications/cdr/PDFfiles/2002/cdr2502.pdf.

Mexico

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to visit Mexico; and how many Memoranda of Understanding have been signed between the UK Government and other governments since 1997. [83326]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 25 November 2002]: I visited Mexico between 4–6 December to participate in the Third Ministerial Meeting on Health Security and Bio-terrorism involving G7 nations and Mexico.

The Department of Health has signed Memorandums of Understanding with the following countries:

Indonesia, signed June 2002
China, signed May 2000
Mexico, signed November 2002.

NHS Pensions Agency

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many (a) nurses and (b) health care workers applied to the NHS Pensions Agency for permanent injury benefit for a disorder in the year from April 2001 to March 2002; and how many were successful at (i) their first application and (ii) subsequent appeal; [89108]

(2) how many (a) nurses and (b) health care workers applied to the NHS Pensions Agency for permanent injury benefit relating to muscular skeletal disorders in the year from April 2001 to March 2002; and how many were successful at (i) their first application and (ii) subsequent appeal. [89109]

Mr. Hutton [pursuant to his answer, 9 January 2003, Official Report, c. 330W]: Information in the format requested is not readily available. The number of nurse and "other" permanent injury benefit applications in the financial year 2001–02 was:

	Number
Total applications	575
Nurse applications	183
Others	392

The number of applications accepted or rejected in the financial year 2001–02 was:

	Applications	Accepted	Rejected	On-going	Withdrawn
Nurse	183	69	76	36	2
Other	392	137	195	58	2
Total	575	206	271	94	4

The number of nurse applications relating to muscular skeletal conditions decided in the period 1 January 2002 to 31 March 2002 was:

	Number
Applications	67
Accepted	25
Rejected	42

NSF for Older People

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the information about the progress in achieving NSF for Older People milestones. [89978]

Jacqui Smith: We hope to publish the information shortly.

Nursing Vacancies

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the vacancy rate for nurses in each quarter in (a) each English health authority and (b) each English health trust in each year from 1996 to 2003; and if he will make a statement. [92560]

Mr. Hutton: Annual three month vacancy rate informatiion between 1999 and 2002 has been placed in the Library.

The Department of Health's survey of vacancies lasting three months or more has been collected only since March 1999, and is available on an annual basis.

The three month vacancy rate was 3.1 per cent. in March 2002, a fall from 3.4 per cent. in March 2001 and the second successive fall in vacancies for qualified nursing staff.

Paediatric Pathology

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the Royal College of Paediatrics and Child Health's recommendation of a nationally accepted information and consent form for hospital post mortem examinations. [92547]

Mr. Lammy: Following a recommendation by the Chief Medical Officer in 2001, we have consulted on and piloted consent forms and information leaflets for use throughout the national health service.

We intend to issue the forms shortly as part of a broader package of measures to improve the handling of issues relating to the removal, retention and use of human organs and tissue. This will include a code of practice on families and post mortems.

Public Service Pensions

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether, under the Government's proposals for public service pension reform, a male doctor over 60 years of age and with 40 years' service, who decides not to retire before 2005, would still be able to retire before the age of 65; what rewards would accrue to him for working beyond the age of 60; and whether his accrual rate would move from to per year after 2005. [91861]

Mr. Hutton: The Green Paper sets out, for consultation, wide-ranging proposals for pensions and saving for retirement. We will want to consider its implications for the national health service scheme carefully and consult fully on proposals for change. In doing so, we shall take account of the work recently published in the stock-take report, "Pension Scheme Modernisation: A Millennium Health Check for the NHS Pension Scheme".

Clearly, it will take some time to review the current scheme in the light of the Green Paper and the associated tax consultation document. The pace of change will depend on introducing new regulations, and changes for new entrants are likely to be in place before amending arrangements for existing members. However, the Green Paper makes no reference to retrospective age-related restrictions for a member already at age 60.

Redundancy Payments

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the (a) total and (b) average cost to the NHS was, over the last 12 months for which figures are available, of redundancy payments to managers and administrators in (i) primary care trusts and (ii) strategic health authorities. [91554]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 21 January 2003]: Information on national health service redundancy payments is not collected centrally.

Specialised Health Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library a copy of the Department's survey on Arrangements for Commissioning Specialised Services in 2002–03. [82781]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 25 November 2002]: The survey on arrangements for commissioning specialised services in 2002–03 was an internal exercise designed to inform policy. However, a summary of the survey will be made public, and will be included in the forthcoming report on commissioning arrangements for specialised services consultation.

Terrorism

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many protective suits are available to NHS staff and ambulance crews in the event of a terrorist attack using chemical and biological agents. [88385]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has funded the provision of 360 mobile decontamination units and 7,250 national specification personal protective equipment (PPE) suits, which allow the ambulance service and accident and emergency departments to treat people contaminated with chemical, biological, radio-active and nuclear material.

Training Support Funds

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are being taken to ensure the take-up of increases in training support funds resourced from the Department of Health to local authorities; and how these funds are being targeted towards the voluntary sector. [92883]

Jacqui Smith: We are establishing two new ring-fenced grants linked to training for 2003–04—the National Training Strategy Grant and the Human Resources Development Strategy Grant. These were announced in the Local Authority Social Services Letter LASSL(2002)11. We will shortly consult with representatives of the statutory, private and voluntary sectors on the conditions and allocations for both grants.

The National Training Strategy Grant is to be used to support the training of social care staff in all sectors, with the majority of the fund being spent on developing National Vocational Qualifications in social care.

The Human Resources Development Strategy Grant will be used to support social care employers in all sectors as they develop the social care work force.

Treatment Targets

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what methods are used to measure progress against the targets for increases in capacity of the equivalent of treatment for (a) 100,000 patients in 2002–03 and (b) 200,000 in 2003–04; and what assessment he has made of progress towards these targets. [85343]

Mr. Hutton: The priorities and planning framework for 2002–03 required the national health service to make sure that plans were in place to achieve the major objectives of the NHS Plan. Data collection systems to monitor delivery are in place and in the first two quarters of 2002–03, elective activity increased by 4.9 per cent. compared to the same period the previous year. For future years Improvement, Expansion and Reform: The Next 3 Years for 2003–06, outlines the delivery programme and the planning requirement. Delivery of these programmes will be detailed in local delivery plans.

West Midlands Hospitals (Military Treatment)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of armed forces personnel likely to be treated in hospitals in the West Midlands (South) Strategic Health Authority area in the event of conflict in Iraq; and what assessment he has made of the consequences for the continuing provision of health services to the resident population. [90346]

Mr. Hutton: No specific estimate of the possible impact on individual strategic health authorities has been made. The national health service has a responsibility to ensure that any military casualties are appropriately treated and cared for. If the need does arise, the service will meet this obligation in full while continuing to serve the local population.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Records Checks

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations his Department has received from (a) NGOs, (b) social services, (c) members of the public and (d) hon. Members regarding the financial implications for organisations of delays in Criminal Record Bureau checks. [91202]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Records Bureau has received a number of communications from members of the public, employers, Registered Bodies and other organisations drawing attention to this matter, some of which have had the support of Members of Parliament. Some have sought compensation for individual applicants and others for employers.

Prison Suicides

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what measures are being taken by his Department to ensure a decrease in the numbers of suicides by inmates of prisons in England and Wales; [90492]

(2) how many suicides by inmates of prisons in England and Wales there were for the period January 1992 to December 2002 broken down by prison; and what estimate he has made of the numbers of suicides for the period January 2003 to December 2013. [90491]

Hilary Benn: The following table covers the 762 apparently self-inflicted deaths between 1 January 1992 and 31 December 2002.

There are no forward estimates of the number of prisoner self-inflicted deaths. The Government aim to reduce suicides in prisons as in the community generally. The Department of Health's National Suicide Prevention Strategy for England, which aims to support the 'Saving Lives: Our Healthier Nation' target of reducing the death rate from suicide in the community by at least 20 per cent. by 2010, includes a target for the Prison Service of such a reduction (to 112.8 self-inflicted deaths per 100,000 prisoners) by April 2004.

The Prison Service recognises that it has a duty of care for all prisoners. This is reflected in current policy and procedures in respect of identifying prisoners at risk of suicide and self-harm, and providing the subsequent care and support for such prisoners, and support for the staff who care for them. Prison Service Instructions make clear that it is the responsibility of all staff to initiate the self-harm at-risk procedures whenever they believe a prisoner is at such risk. These procedures ensure those caring for the at-risk prisoner consider the appropriate level of supervision, location and support for that prisoner. Each at-risk prisoner has an individual support plan drawn up by a multi-disciplinary review team, which will also involve the prisoner themselves.

The general prison population contains a large number of prisoners with a combination of psychiatric disorders, alcohol and drug dependency, family background and relationship problems, histories of self-harm and previous abuse, all of which raise their risk of suicide. Good care and support from staff saves many lives but such instances go largely unreported.

The Prison Service's approach, in close partnership with outside organisations such as the Samaritans, is to identify and better support those who seem at greatest risk and focus on staff/prisoner relationships and the physical environment. The Prison Service's suicide prevention and self-harm reduction programme includes a series of inter-related projects to improve pre-reception, reception and induction arrangements; inter-agency information exchange; prisoner care; detoxification; prisoner peer support, and the learning from investigations into deaths in custody.

Piloting of these projects is focused on six establishments—Wandsworth, Feltham, Eastwood Park, Leeds, Winchester and Birmingham—although others are involved in aspects of the work. An investment of £21.69 million over the three year programme from April 2001 is allowing physical improvements to be made at these six sites, for example to reception and induction areas, and through the installation of more first night centres, safer cells, crisis suites and gated cells that enable staff to watch at-risk prisoners closely. The programme will be subject to an independent quantitative and qualitative evaluation.

Wing staff will be increasingly supported in the work by in-reach mental health teams and by the establishment where possible of dedicated drug detoxification units. Between August 2001 and June 2002 new health care screening procedures have been piloted at six adult male remand prisons (Leeds, Wandsworth, Holme House, Liverpool, Manchester and Durham) two female remand prisons (Eastwood Park and New Hall) and two young offender institutions (Feltham and Glen Parva). The two female prisons include both adults and women aged 16–21 years. An evaluation of the pilot project supported implementation of the new reception screening arrangements across the estate, and a rolling programme is planned commencing in April 2003.

Prisoner Demographics

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many males and females were in prison serving sentences of over four years in (a) June 1991 and (b) June 2002. [89545]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 20 January 2003]: On 30 June 1991, there were 14,616 males and 498 females serving sentences of four years and over in prisons in England and Wales.

On 30 June 2002, there were 26,283 males and 1,335 females serving similar sentences.

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were given life sentences in (a) June 2002, (b) in 1998 and (c) in 1992. [89546]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 20 January 2003]: In June 2002, 35 prisoners were received into Prison Service Establishments, with life sentences. In the whole of 1998, 413 prisoners were received with a life sentence, and in the whole of 1992, 236 prisoners were received with life sentences.

Youth Crime

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many juveniles held in young offenders institutions in England and Wales have (a) been previously excluded from school and (b) have a level of educational attainment below level 1 basic skills. [90486]

Hilary Benn: We do not collect information centrally on how many juvenile offenders in custody have been excluded from school. Early in 2001 the Howard League for Penal Reform found from a sample of 84 15 year olds in custody that 83 per cent. had been excluded. More recently—as part of its audit of education and training provision within the youth justice system (published in November 2001)—the Youth Justice Board interviewed 160 offenders aged between 15 and 18 and found that 45 per cent. had been permanently excluded.

Basic skills screening of juvenile offenders received into custody between April and November 2002 indicates that 42 per cent. are below level 1 in reading, 51 per cent. in spelling, 59 per cent. in writing and 43 per cent. in numeracy.

Investment so far in staff and buildings in the juvenile estate—particularly the appointment of a Special Needs Co-ordinator to each establishment and one Learning Support Assistant for every 10 juveniles—is already having a positive impact on achievement, as is the piloting of innovative teaching strategies. In the first half of 2002–03, juveniles in custody gained around 2,000 basic skills qualifications, almost three quarters of which were at entry level or level 1. And we expect achievement to improve further as a result of our enhancements.

The Youth Justice Board is investing £40 million over this year and next in education and training across the 13 juvenile facilities, including £10 million in new buildings. These resources will enable implementation of the new National Specification for Learning and Skills, introduction of the PLUS literacy programme, and enhanced staffing. They will also address the recommendation in the Social Exclusion Unit's report Bridging the Gap that 16 to19 year olds should receive 30 hours per week of education, training and personal development.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

European Documents

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission how many demand forms for European printed papers were issued in 2002; and how many documents or papers were included in them, broken down by types or category of the papers listed. [92925]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: Forty-eight demand forms for European printed papers were issued in 2002.

The numbers of documents or papers included, broken down by types or category of papers listed are given in the table.

Type or category	Total number
Official Journals	1,195

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Members' Biographical Details

David Winnick: To ask the Chairman of the Information Committee what progress is being made by the Library to bring out biographical details of hon. and right hon. Members in book form to replace Stanton and Lees publications; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the provision of (a) funding and (b) personnel for this purpose. [92994]

Michael Fabricant: The hon. Member will recall that I wrote to him on 24 January 2002, following consideration of this matter by the Information Committee. As subsequent progress is an operational question for the Library, I have asked the Librarian to write to the hon. Member.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Departmental Budget

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of her Department's budget remained unallocated at the end of the last financial year. [92659]

Clare Short: DFID's budget was fully allocated last year. Our initial budget for 2001–02 included a modest Contingency Reserve. This reserve was allocated to specific programmes during the course of the year.

Global Fund

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what donations to the Global Fund (a) have been received and (b) are expected, broken down by donor country. [92657]

Clare Short: Total pledges to the fund to date (including disbursements already made) total US $2.157 billion. Donations received so far by the Global Fund (up to the end of 2002) amount to US $855.9 million and donations pledged specifically for 2003 amount to $605.5 million.

The UK has pledged £138 million to the fund and has already paid in £50 million. A further £25 million will be contributed in calendar year 2003, depending on performance.

A full breakdown of donor pledges is available at the Global Fund website and can be found at www.globalfundatm.org.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Servants

Mr. Flook: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many civil servants have (a) been tested and (b) will be tested using psychometric testing in the last five years. [92602]

Ms Rosie Winterton: All staff recruited on the Fast Stream Development Programme undergo some element of psychometric testing as part of the selection process. Records show a total of 39 new appointments under this programme since 1999. The table shows the breakdown on a year by year basis.

Psychometric testing has also been used to help fill a number of senior and other civil service posts, both in external recruitment and internal selection campaigns. This statistical information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

My Department has also used, and continues to use, psychometric exercises in support of its leadership development programme. These exercises are not used to support selection, but are a development tool to assist managers at all levels in developing their leadership skills.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92430]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003.

PRIME MINISTER

Carlyle Group

Norman Baker: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions and correspondence (a) he and (b) his Office has had with representatives of the Carlyle Group since 1 May 1997. [91529]

The Prime Minister: Ministers and Government officials have meetings with a wide range of organisations and individuals. As with previous Administrations it is not the Government's practice to provide details of all such meetings, under exemptions 2 and 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Iraq

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what proposals he has for the development of a common European Union approach on the Iraq issue, in respect of (a) removing the threat of weapons of mass destruction, (b) regime change and (c) use of military force. [92927]

The Prime Minister: The European Union is united on this issue, as demonstrated most recently by the Declaration on Iraq agreed by the Copenhagen European Council on 13 December. This underlined the full and unequivocal support of the European Council for United Nations Security Council resolution 1441 and stated that the goal of the European Union remains the disarmament of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction in accordance with the relevant UN Resolutions. It also pledged the European Union's continuing full support to the efforts of the UN to ensure full and immediate compliance by Iraq with resolution 1441, and its full support for the inspection operations of UNMOVIC and the IAEA.

I, my Ministers and officials continue to discuss Iraq frequently with all our EU partners.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on mininsterial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92418]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will list each asset of the Scottish Office valued at £50,000 or more; and if she will make a statement. [90380]

Mrs. Liddell: The only asset of the Scotland Office with a value of more than £50,000 is the lease of Dover House in London.

Departmental Expenditure (Newsprint)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what the total expenditure of her Department was on newspapers, magazines and periodicals in 2002. [90520]

Mrs. Liddell: Expenditure on newspapers, magazines and periodicals purchased centrally by the Department in 2001–02 was £12,968.

Dover House

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, who owns the Scotland Office headquarters at Dover House in Whitehall, what her latest estimate is of the total value of this building; and what her estimate is of its annual rental cost. [90378]

Mrs. Liddell: Dover House is owned by the Crown Estate and leased to the Scotland Office. The value of the building is a matter for the Crown Estate. The rental cost in 2001–02 was £10,500.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when and by whom Dover House, Whitehall, was valued for the purposes of the National Asset Register; what the latest valuation is; and if she will make a statement. [91699]

Mrs. Liddell: Dover House was re-valued prior to transfer by the former Scottish Office. On 31 March 1999, it was independently re-valued at £2 million by GVA Grimley, International Property Advisors, on the basis of Existing Use Value in accordance with the Appraisal and Valuation Manual of the Royal Institute of Chartered Surveyors. Its current net book value (at 31 March 2002) is £1.675 million.

Fishing Industry

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what part she will play in the co-ordination of financial assistance packages to the Scottish fishing industry between the Government and the Scottish Executive. [92294]

Mrs. Liddell: I am regularly involved in discussions with Government colleagues and the Scottish Executive on a range of subjects, and these have recently included issues concerning the Scottish fishing industry.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Tony Wright: To ask the Solicitor-General when the Crown Prosecution Service's autumn performance report for 2002 will be published. [93157]

The Solicitor-General: I refer the hon. Member to my previous reply, 21 January 2003, Official Report, column 231W.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many cases of suspected (a) housing benefit and (b) council tax benefit fraud have been discovered through a residency check, in each of the last five years. [91979]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available. Information held centrally on cases of suspected housing benefit or council tax benefit fraud does not identify the means by which the suspected fraud was detected.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the new system of assessment by the CSA will become operable; whether those who have been waiting for assessment or reassessment by the CSA will be assessed as if they were new claimants; and what plans he has to clear the back-log. [92549]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer my hon. Friend to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Peter Duncan) on 27 November 2002, Official Report, column 317W. The next Commencement Order to implement relevant provisions of the Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Act 2000 will set out the classes of case to which the new scheme will apply.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 16 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Avril Curry. [92285]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 16 January 2003.

Employers' Liability

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on the employers' liability insurance review. [85271]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 12 December 2002]: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Ministerial Statement I gave on 12 December 2002, Official Report, columns 23–24WS.

Free School Meals

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list for each year since 1997 the percentage of children for each local authority eligible for free school meals. [91983]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I have been asked to reply.

The available information is shown in the table.

Pensions

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on how his Department can protect employees' pension schemes if their employer goes into administration or bankruptcy. [92732]

Mr. McCartney: If a salary-related occupational pension scheme starts to wind up as a result of its sponsoring employer going into administration or bankruptcy, the members of the scheme are protected by measures contained in legislation.

The Statutory Priority Order sets out how the assets of the scheme are to be applied towards meeting the scheme's liabilities for pensions and other benefits. It aims to ensure that scheme assets are divided among scheme members as fairly as possible.

The employer debt provisions place a debt on an insolvent company's estate to cover any deficiency in the pension fund. The calculation of the debt is based on an estimate of the costs of winding up the scheme, the notional costs of buying annuities for pensioners and cash equivalent transfer values for people who have not retired.

The independent trustee provisions require insolvency practitioners to make sure that schemes that are winding up have one trustee who is independent. Trustees are required to report their progress regularly to Opra, which aims to ensure that schemes are wound up as quickly as possible.

Additionally, a compensation scheme was established to provide compensation for losses caused by dishonesty where the employer is insolvent. The compensation scheme acts as a safety net for members if their scheme suffers from a reduction in assets through dishonesty and their employer is not around to make good the shortfall.

Nonetheless, we are still concerned about instances when the sponsoring employer becomes insolvent and the pension scheme winds up under-funded. We are aware of the impact this has, and are determined to protect the long-term security of pensioners and other scheme members in occupational pension schemes.

This is why the pensions Green Paper, "Simplicity, Security and Choice" (Cm 5677), published on 17 December 2002, includes proposals to further protect members' pensions, including proposals to share out scheme assets more fairly, introduce some form of insurance and strengthen protection for members whose solvent employer chooses to wind up its scheme.

We are seeking views on our proposals and additional suggestions, and are therefore holding a wide ranging consultation on the Green Paper.

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what plans he has to simplify the overlap of stakeholder and additional voluntary contribution pension arrangements where a person's earnings are such to allow concurrent membership of an occupational and a stakeholder pension arrangement. [92315]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

On 17 December the Government published, for consultation, simplification proposals for the pension tax rules. The consultation paper, "Simplifying the taxation of pensions: increasing choice and flexibility", is available in the House of Commons Library. The consultation is to allow people the opportunity to put forward their views before final decisions are taken.

The consultation paper puts forward a proposed framework of general benefit rules. It is proposed that these rules would apply to all qualifying pension arrangements.

Post Office Card Account

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many personal invitation documents for post office card accounts have been issued; [92873]

(2) how many applications have been received for a post office card account; [92874]

(3) how many post office card accounts have been successfully processed. [92875]

Malcolm Wicks: As at 10 January, around 26,000 child benefit and veterans agency customers had requested a post office card account. The Government have decided to build up the number of benefit customers and pensioners that we pay through the post office card account gradually, starting from April 2003. This is to ensure that the systems supporting the post office card account are reliable and robust, and have proved themselves in live running, before we start to pay large numbers of customers through them.

The Department's current plans for issuing personal invitation documents—PIDS—meet our intention that, subject to acceptance of the card account service, we can start to pay some people through the post office card account from April 2003.

Accordingly, on current plans, the earliest date for PID issue will be 24 March 2003.

The only personal invitation documents issued so far have been to around 1,000 customers taking part in the card account pilots that Post Office Ltd. are currently undertaking. Detailed questions on the pilot are matters which fall within the day-to-day responsibility of Post Office Ltd. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply directly to the hon. Member on this issue.

Public Sector Workers (Retirement)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the number of public sector workers who are obliged to retire at or before age 60; and if he will make a statement. [92554]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

Retirement policy is a matter for individual public sector employers and detailed numerical information is not held centrally. Government policy as set out in last year's pensions green paper, "Simplicity, security and choice: Working and saving for retirement (Cm 5677)" is to encourage people to work up to the age of 65 and beyond if they wish. Public service employers are reviewing their retirement policies to take account of that. In local government, the normal pension age is already 65 for new entrants. Longer serving staff may have rights to an earlier normal pension age, between 60 and 65, depending on their length of service.

As set out in the Green Paper, the Government proposes to increase the normal pension age from 60 to 65 for new entrants to pension schemes such the NHS, teachers and civil service. Some 75 per cent. of civil servants already have the option to retire at age 65 and the numbers able to serve beyond age 60 are expected to increase. NHS staff are generally encouraged to continue to work beyond age 60 and those retiring on age grounds typically leave well after age 60. In the state education sector, teachers can normally work until age 65 if they wish and they can work beyond 65 by mutual agreement between the individual and the employer.

In the armed forces, police and fire services the great majority of people leave before age 60 and pensions for those retiring are payable well before 60. There are a few posts in these services where individuals may be retained beyond age 60. There are a few posts in these services where individuals may be retained beyond age 60.

Statutory Instruments

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Statutory Instruments subject to negative procedure made by his Department (a) came into force and (b) were considered by a delegated legislation committee in each of the last three sessions. [88033]

Maria Eagle: The details requested are in the table.

A further 14 instruments subject to the negative procedure came into force in the period between the end of the 1999–2000 session and the start of the 2000–01 session and a further three instruments subject to the negative procedure came into force in the period between the end of the 2000–01 session and the start of the 2001–02 session.

Where a Statutory Instrument has more than one commencement date, the first date has been used.

Welfare to Work

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what benefits and subsidies may be lost by the unemployed upon starting employment. [83173]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: We are taking a single approach to work and benefits to make work pay, make work possible and to support those who cannot work.

The national minimum wage together with our reforms of the tax and benefit system are helping to ensure that work pays at all levels of the labour market, and particularly for people on low incomes. Building on the success of the working families tax credit and the disabled person's tax credit, we will introduce the working tax credit from April 2003, extending in-work support to workers without children or disabilities.

We have also recently announced an improved package of financial measures to help people make the transition into work. From October 2004, we will be introducing a new job grant to help people moving into a job after at least six months on benefit. Single people and couples without children will receive £100. A higher rate grant of £250 will be paid to lone parents and to couples with children. This improved job grant will make a real difference in helping tide families over until their first wages are received.

On starting full-time employment a person ceases to be entitled to jobseeker's allowance or income support. There are a number of other benefits and subsidies available to people claiming income-based jobseeker's allowance or income support. These may be affected by a person's increased income on starting work or the person may lose entitlement to them. They include: housing benefit, council tax benefit, certain social fund grants and loans, free NHS prescriptions, eye tests and dental treatment, free school meals, and milk tokens.

Housing benefit and council tax benefit remain available to provide in-work support to help people meet their rent or council tax and are designed to guarantee that a person is better off in work than out of work. In addition, the NHS low income scheme ensures that working people on low incomes can continue to receive help towards the cost of most NHS services.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Aerospace Industry

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the (a) names and (b) employers of members of the (i) Aerospace Committee and (ii) Aerospace Innovation and Growth Team working groups. [91919]

Alan Johnson: The names of members of the Aerospace Committee and the Aerospace Innovation and Growth Team working groups and their respective employers have been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Business Link

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses there are in (a) the north-east Region and (b) Surrey; and what estimates she has made of the total income of Business Links in (i) the north-east region and (ii) Surrey in 2002–03 [92834]

Nigel Griffiths: At the start of 2002, there was an estimated 41,865 VAT registered businesses in the North East of England, and 43,525 in Surrey County (Source: VAT registrations and deregistrations: Business Start-ups and closures, published by the SBS in October 2002).

Projected total turnover (income) for the four Business Link Operators in the North East Region in 2002/03 is around £19.9 million.£6 million (30 per cent. of turnover) of this is in the form of a Core Services Grant from the SBS. Total turnover in the North East also includes £7 million (35 per cent. of turnover) of European funding.

Projected total turnover for Business Link Surrey in 2002/03 is around 5.8 million. £3.45 million (59.5 per cent. of turnover) of this is in the form of a Core Services Grant from the SBS. Business Link Surrey do not access any European funding.

Consumer Credit Act

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer of 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 79W, on the Consumer Credit Act 1974, which of the issues raised in the original question are covered by the consultations listed in her answer. [92716]

Miss Melanie Johnson: [holding answer 22 January 2003]: The question of how annual percentage rates are calculated as part of a consultation on the simplification of the regulations governing credit advertising. The consultation will then determine any reform of the statutory rules.

In preparation for that, my Department is in regular discussion with the credit industry and consumer bodies on the scope for a common format for the calculation and advertising of APRs on credit cards, and the provision for other key information.

Employment Rights (Information and Advice)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she is taking to improve information and advice for businesses on employment rights. [92030]

Alan Johnson: I firmly believe that there is a strong need for clear, straightforward and easily accessible information and guidance for businesses on employment rights.

Businesses can obtain guidance on employment rights from a number of sources: I welcome Acas' planned expansion of their advisory work and the recent introduction of a national number for their helpline service. Information is also available on the Acas, DTI and Business Link websites. The Small Business Service (SBS) is developing a pack specifically for start up businesses to accompany its fact sheets and other services.

Even with the variety and high quality of these services I am aware of the need for continuous improvement to ensure we meet the needs of business. As part of this process my department is working with Acas and SBS and an advisory group of user organisations to improve the way information and guidance on employment rights is made available to the different groups of users, including the e-delivery of information.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she is taking to promote and support UK manufacturing. [92031]

Alan Johnson: The Government's Manufacturing Strategy, published in May last year, identified seven key areas of activity for Government and industry that are crucial for manufacturing success. We are taking action in all of those areas to help British manufacturers cope with very difficult global conditions.

For example, Regional Centres for Manufacturing Excellence were successfully launched in each of the nine English Regions and in Wales over the period April to November 2002 and are now proactively delivering the Manufacturing Advisory Service.

Post Office Card Accounts

Mr. David Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to promote the use of the Post Office card prior to the introduction of direct payments of benefits in April. [92548]

Mr. Timms: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon.Friend the Member for Preseli Pembrokeshire on 17 December 2002, column 738W.

Redundancy Payments Scheme

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the reasons for the change in payments through the Redundancy Payments Scheme from 1999–2000 to 2002–03; and if she will make a statement. [91959]

Alan Johnson: The total amount paid out by the Redundancy Payments Service before any deductions for Income Tax and National Insurance Contributions in the financial year 1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000 was £200.0 million. The corresponding figures for the financial years April 2000 to March 2001 and April 2001 to March 2002 were £229.7 millions and £278.7 million, respectively, an increase of just over 39 per cent. About three quarters of the increase is attributable to an increase in the numbers of claims over the period. The remainder is mainly due to successive increases in the statutory limits that apply to redundancy and other payments from the National Insurance Fund.

Regional Assistance

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much was spent on (a) regional selective assistance, (b) regional development grants, (c) regional innovation grants and (d) regional employment premiums for (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales in each year from 1974–75 to 2001–02, and what the estimated figures are for (A) 2002–03, (B) 2003–04, (C) 2004–05, and (D) 2005–06, (1) in cash terms, and (2) at constant 2001–02 prices. [89824]

Alan Johnson: The figures for expenditure on Regional Selective Assistance, Regional Development Grants and Regional Innovation Grants are published in the Annual Report of the Industrial Development Act 1982.

The figures for the period 1990–91 to 2001–02 are summarised as follows and have been presented in cash terms and constant 2001–02 prices. Reference should be made to the Annual Reports for earlier information.

The estimated annual figure for 2002/03 for Regional Selective Assistance in England is £115 million (£112 million at 2001/02 prices). Figures for future years will be published in the Department's Expenditure Plans Reports.

Information for Scotland and Wales for future years can be obtained from The Scottish Executive and the National Assembly for Wales respectively.

No information is available in relation to Regional Employment Premiums.

Small Business (Regulatory Burden)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she is taking to reduce the burden of regulation on small businesses. [92029]

Nigel Griffiths: Independent reports from the OECD, Anderson growth plus and others show the UK in general to be a less regulated than most International Competitors. Since January 2000, the Government has put in place a number of measures to further reduce the burden of regulation on small businesses. The SmallBusiness Service now scrutinises newly proposed regulations for their likely impact on SMEs and encourages reform and rationalisation of wxisting regulation. It works closely with DTI's Better Regulation Team to help Departments develop alternatives to regulation.

Examples of measures taken include 485,000 businesses had their corporation tax bill cut or abolished through measures announced in Budget 2002, and 700,000 benefited from the flat rate VAT scheme. Overall around 9000,000 SMEs have benefited.

TRANSPORT

Aviation Fuel (Dumping)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many (a) incidents of dumping of aviation fuel there were and (b) tonnes of aviation fuel were dumped in UK airspace in the last year for which figures are available; [92264]

(2) what regulations and guidelines there are on the amount of aviation fuel loaded onto aircraft at (a) UK airports and (b) military bases; and how this relates to the planned journey and flight time; [92261]

(3) what regulations exist to control the dumping of aviation fuel into UK airspace; and whether the regulations differ for civil and military aircraft; [92262]

(4) whether a pilot dumping aviation fuel is required to report the activity; and what records are maintained of incidents of the dumping of aviation fuel; [92263]

(5) what offence the dumping of aircraft fuel into UK airspace constitutes. [92266]

Mr. Jamieson: Article 56(3)(b) of the Civil Aviation Air Navigation Order 2000 permits the jettisoning, in cases of emergency, of fuel from an aircraft over the UK. Other than in an emergency, jettisoning would constitute an offence liable on summary conviction to a fine of up to £2,500, as provided for in Article 122(5).

As in any emergency, the pilot and the air traffic controller would normally report the circumstances under the Mandatory Occurrence Reporting Scheme. There were 19 such incidents in the UK in 2002. There were 1,666,000 air transport movements in the UK in 2001. Details of the amount of fuel jettisoned are not normally recorded as part of the Scheme, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

As regards fuel loaded onto an aircraft, Article 6 of the Order referred to effectively requires the operator to ensure that the pre-flight calculation of usable fuel for a flight covers taxying, trip (take-off to landing), contingency (normally 5 per cent. of trip fuel), diversion to alternative destination, final reserve fuel (30 minutes holding), additional fuel if required by the type of operation (e.g. extended range twin engined operation) and any extra at the commander's discretion.

Questions about the regulations and procedures applicable to military aircraft are a matter for my right. hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Defence.

Pensioners (Free Travel)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with pensioner groups on the extension of free travel passes to all parts of the United Kingdom. [91335]

Mr. Jamieson: The Minister of State for Transport (John Spellar) has met representatives from the National Pensioners' Convention, and my Department has received many letters from pensioners (including some groups) on this topic.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to make funds available for free travel for all pensioners. [91336]

Mr. Jamieson: From 1 June 2001 we have ensured that all pensioners have been entitled to a free bus pass allowing half-fare travel on local buses, as a minimum. Local authorities may also run more generous schemes if they wish. From 1 April 2003 travel concessions will also be extended to men aged between 60 and 65. Expenditure on concessionary travel schemes is covered by the contribution that the Government makes to local authorities through the annual grant settlement. We have no plans to make funds available for free travel for all pensioners.

UK-registered Vessels (Terrorism)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the threat of terrorist attack upon UK-registered vessels. [91236]

Mr. Jamieson: The Secretary of State receives advice from the Security Service who have responsibility for preparing and disseminating assessments on the terrorist threat to UK vessels. This process is ongoing and is the basis for the development of measures which provide an appropriate response.

Air Transport Consultation

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to initiate a new round of public consultation before publishing the Government's White Paper on airports. [91871]

Mr. Jamieson: The consultation period, throughout the UK, is on-going and has been extended until we have consulted on Gatwick runway options. We intend to issue a revised South East consultation document next month. The consultation period will then run for four months after the date of publication of the new material. Those who have already responded to the consultation will be able to amend, add to, or replace their original response having considered the new material, if they wish to do so.

Air Travel Organisers Licensing Regulations

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he intends to take to protect individual airline passengers who have bought accommodation from a listed supplier against scheduled airline failure. [91324]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government have no plans to take legislative action on this issue.

Central Railway

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what relative weight the Government will give to representatives by (a) foreign governments and (b) elected representatives of UK communities in reaching its decision on whether or not to support the proposed Central Railway project; [92570]

(2) when he expects to make an announcement on Government policy on the proposed Hybrid Bill to promote Central Railway. [92647]

Mr. Jamieson: We have received the Strategic Rail Authority's advice on this proposal, as well as a number of representations from other parties. We are giving the proposals due and careful consideration and will respond to Central Railway in due course.

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the reports he has received on the Central Railway project from the Strategic Rail Authority. [92608]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend, the Minister of State on 11 December 2002, Official Report, column 351W to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir John Stanley).

Coach Travel

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement about help available to pensioners with long-distance coach travel. [92308]

Mr. Jamieson: We are committed to the early introduction of a scheme under which the operators of scheduled long-distance coach services would offer those aged over 60, and disabled people, concessionary half-fares in return for the services becoming eligible for Bus Service Operators Grants from my Department. We are currently pursuing clearance of this proposal under European Union State Aid rules, and are in discussion with coach operators on the details of the scheme's introduction. We aim to introduce the scheme as soon as possible in 2003–04.

Coaches (Passenger Seat Belts)

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the (a) desirability and (b) level of use of seat belts for passengers on coaches. [91761]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government have for many years encouraged the wide use of seat belts, as they can significantly reduce injuries in many types of accidents. Indeed, since 1 October 2001, seat belts have been required in all new minibuses, coaches and buses—apart from those specifically designed for urban use with standing passengers. However, no assessment has been made by observation of the use of seat belts by coach passengers.

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from coach operators about the wearing of passenger seat belts; and if he will make a statement. [91762]

Mr. Jamieson: No such representations have been received from coach operators. However, the Confederation of Passenger Transport, which represents bus and coach operators, responded to an informal consultation by the Department in May 2001 for views on the proposals in the draft EU Directive on seat belt wearing.

Mr. Michael Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to strengthen the regulations governing the use of seat belts for passengers in buses and coaches; and if he will make a statement. [91765]

Mr. Jamieson: The terms of an EU Directive, presently under consideration, will require seat belts to be used in the rear of buses and coaches where they are provided. Seat belt wearing is already compulsory in the UK for the drivers and front seat passengers in all vehicles, and in the rear of mini-buses under 2.54 tonnes unladen weight (roughly 16 seats).

Container Ports

Dr. Julian Lewis To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, what estimate he has made of likely container port capacity at existing container ports over the next (a) five years, (b) 10 years, and (c) 15 years. [91697]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southampton Test (Dr. Whitehead) on 3 December 2002, Official Report, columns 661–62W. The paper, "Recent Developments at UK Container Ports", mentioned in that answer, explains why the Department has not made national forecasts on container capacity. Likely capacity depends partly on future decisions on planning applications for port developments.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 2 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. G. Sherriff. [92286]

Mr. Spellar: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 11 December 2002.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will reply to the question tabled by the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham, Ref.83261. [92585]

Mr. Jamieson: I have answered question ref. 83261 on 28 November 2002 and it was printed on 3 December 2002, Official Report, column 666W.

Disability Discrimination Act

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995 on the transport sector, with particular reference to the rail sector. [91757]

Mr. Jamieson: Before accessibility regulations were implemented for new trains, buses and coaches under the Disability Discrimination Act, we published full assessments of the costs to industry of compliance with the regulations. These assessments were made on the basis of extensive and detailed consultation with manufacturers and operators. Since implementation, we have continued to maintain a close dialogue with industry, as well as with disabled people, to ensure the regulations are working effectively.

Heathrow

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Heathrow (Runway Alternations) 6 am to 7 am trial will conclude. [92125]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 9 January 2003, Official Report, column 290W. It is not possible at this stage to forecast when the trial will conclude.

Illegal Minicabs

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham on 7 January, Official Report, column 102W, on illegal minicabs what funding has been allocated to local enforcement authorities to publicise the undesirability of using unlicensed minicabs. [92586]

Mr. Jamieson: My answer on 7 January made clear that the enforcement of illegal minicabs is a matter for local enforcement authorities and the police. It is for them to decide whether they wish to spend any of their budget on publicising the undesirability of using unlicensed minicabs.

Liquefied Petroleum Gas Vehicles

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with interested organisations on how to encourage more LPG fuelled vehicles. [92061]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department has regular discussions with organisations representing the LPG industry. The DfT have met with: vehicles manufacturers; fuel suppliers; the Energy Saving Trust, who manage the PowerShift programme, and the LP Gas Association.

These discussions centre on how to bring high quality LPG vehicles to market, looking at what measures can help to remove market barriers and ensuring that there is a nation-wide LPG refuelling infrastructure.

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to increase the number of LPG outlets in and around London. [92062]

Mr. Jamieson: There are now over 1,100 LPG refuelling outlets, giving good coverage across the UK, including the London area. The Government has supported the general development of the LPG market through fiscal measures including favourable duty rates, grants towards the premium cost of LPG vehicles and discounts for alternatively fuelled vehicles under the new Vehicle Excise Duty and company car tax regimes.

In addition Planning Policy Guidance note 13, indicates that local authorities "should look favourably at proposals" to provide LPG and other alternative fuel infrastructure, "in order to deliver wider environmental objectives".

London (Transport Access)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the proportion of the population of the United Kingdom living within an area which can access London SW1 by (a) public and (b) private transport by (i) 9.15 am and (ii) 11.30 am without starting their journey earlier than 6.00 am. [92642]

Mr. Jamieson: No such estimate has been made.

London Underground

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many attributable delays of 15 minutes or more there were on each London underground line in each year since 2000. [91067]

Mr. Jamieson: This is an operational matter for London underground. However, they have provided the information in the table showing by line, for financial years since 2000–01, the number of attributable delays of at least fifteen minutes that were within London underground's control.

London underground: Number of train delays of at least 15 minutes by line

Line	2000–01	2001–02	2002–03[1]
Bakerloo	249	253	205
Central	376	378	172
District	303	431	286
Jubilee	176	227	121
East London	93	84	64
Northern	136	142	116

Circle and Hammersmith	239	219	157
Waterloo and City	20	30	40
Total	2,200	2,568	1,749

[1] To 7 December 2002

The increase in delays between 2000–01 and 2001–02 is primarily a consequence of problems with aging assets, especially signalling, including a major problem on the Metropolitan line during 2001. This emphasises the urgent need for the major investment and renewal which our tube modernisation plans will deliver.

Marine Casualty Officers

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many marine casualty officers are employed to work within UK waters. [91768]

Mr. Jamieson: There are 10 marine casualty officers in the United Kingdom under the employment of the Maritime and Coastguard Agency.

Motorway Services (M65)

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by whom the decision was made to name the services at junction 4 of the M65 motorway The Blackburn Services; and who was consulted before the decision was taken. [91934]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from T. Matthews to Ms Janet Anderson, dated 23 January 2003:

I have been asked by David Jamieson to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the naming of the Motorway Services at Junction 4 of the M65 in Lancashire.

The developer of this service area initiated the name "The Blackburn Services".

The development was submitted to Blackburn with Darwen Borough Council for planning approval. When considering planning applications, the Council is required to undertake consultations with a standard list of consultees, which in the case of a proposed motorway service area includes the Highways Agency. When consulted, our considered view was that the proposed facility was in the interests of road users, and we therefore made no objection to the proposal. Once these consultations, required by the planning process, are complete, there is no requirement to consult further.

The Highways Agency would only have intervened in the naming of these services if we considered that road safety could have been compromised by the provision of misleading or confusing information on our road signs.

If you would like any further information about this matter, you may wish to contact the Agency's Route Manager for this section of the M65, Roy Wood, at Sunley Tower, Piccadilly Plaza, Manchester, MI 4BE (Tel 0161 930 5686).

Oil and Chemical Spills

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what specific funding is available to coastal local authorities for counter-pollution measures and clean-up operations for (a) oil, (b) diesel and (c) other spillages at sea; [91599]

(2) what steps he has taken to train local authority staff and staff of other interested organisations, in the management, containment and clearance of oil, chemical and diesel spillages at sea. [91598]

Mr. Jamieson [pursuant to his answer, 20 January 2003, Official Report, c. 36–37W]: In the last 24 months the MCA have trained over 150 people on the Oil Pollution, Contingency Planning and Response courses. The MCA will also run courses in Inverclyde, North East Scotland, North Devon, Humberside, the Isle of Wight and Dorset before April 2003.

Paper Supplies

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport who the suppliers are of his Department's (a) paper and (b) paper products. [91909]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department's printing paper is supplied by Robert Horne Paper Company, James McNaughton Paper Company, Premier Paper and Howard Smith Paper. Copier paper and other paper products are supplied by Banner Business Supplies Ltd.

Pollutant Spillage Courses

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the local authorities that have taken up pollutant spillage courses offered by the Maritime and Coastguard Agency. [91767]

Mr. Jamieson: In the last 15 months the MCA have trained over 80 local authority delegates on six Oil Pollution, Contingency Planning and Response courses. These delegates have come from the following councils:

Denbighshire Council
Colchester Borough Council
Norfolk County Council
Swale Borough Council
Southampton City Council
West Somerset District Council
Exeter City Council
Torbay Council
North Devon District Council
Carrick District Council
Portsmouth City Council
West Dorset District Council
Poole Borough Council
Bournemouth Borough Council
Kent County Council
South Gloucester Council
Hampshire County Council
Neath and Port Talbot County Borough Council
Argyll and Bute Council
Aberdeenshire Council
Angus Council
South Ayrshire Council
Western Isles Council
The City and County of Cardiff
Vale of Glamorgan County
East Lindsey District Council
Lincolnshire County Council
Copeland Borough Council
Environment and Heritage Service
Hartlepool Borough Council
Waveney District Council
Havant Borough Council
New Forest District Council
Teignbridge District Council
North Somerset Council
Sedgewick District Council
Medway Council
Dorset County Council
Adur District Council

The MCA have also run two day hands-on training courses for county, unitary and district councils in the following areas since the summer of 1999: Suffolk, Lincolnshire, Merseyside, Hampshire, West Sussex, Cumbria, Somerset, Argyll and Bute, Fife, Kent, Pembrokeshire, Cornwall, Essex, Teeside, Highland, Humberside, Tyneside, Gwynedd and South Wales. Before April 2003 courses will also be run in Inverclyde, North East Scotland, North Devon, Humberside, the Isle of Wight and Dorset. When organising these courses the host council will always invite their neighbours. For example the Fife Council course was attended by all the councils surrounding the Forth and Tay estuaries.

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92455]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is as follows:

(a) The number of press releases issued by each relevant Department excluding agencies, is set out in the table. Those on transport issues are included in overall totals for the former Departments of Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR) and Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR), as separate data is not held.

Number of press releases issued

	Number
Department of Transport
1995—1996	422
1996—1997	401
April 1997—15 June 1997	38
Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (c)
16 June 1997—1998	817
1998—1999	1,217
1999—2000	1,153
Department of Environment, Transport and the Regions (c)/ Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions (c)
2000—2001	768
Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions
2001—2002	488
April 2002—28 May 2002	73
Department for Transport
29 May 2002—17 January 2003	121

(b) Quarterly information for Department for Transport, since its creation, is as follows:

Press releases issued by the Department for Transport

Quarter	Number
29 May to end of June 2002	17
July—September 2002	57
October—December 2002	43
1 January 2003—to date (17 January 2003)	4

Quarterly data for the former Departments is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Rail Services

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the request of the Western franchise to receive a subsidy from the Strategic Rail Authority to run services on the Swindon-Cheltenham line in place of Virgin Trains. [92070]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority has agreed that, from May 2003, Virgin Cross Country will no longer run services on this route, but First Great Western will provide an enhanced service.

The Authority has also invited proposals from Wessex Trains to run services on the route. It is currently considering these.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will carry out an investigation into the ability of train operating companies to cease fulfilling timetabled services. [92071]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 20 January 2003]: The minimum level of services which train operators are required to provide is prescribed in franchise agreements, primarily through the Passenger Service Requirement.

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what remedial action has been taken by train operating companies with passengers in excess of capacity as required by the terms of their franchise; how much funding is committed to this by Central Government; and how the money is distributed; [92128]

(2) how much has been spent on reducing overcrowding on trains in each of the last five years by (a) South West Trains, (b) Silverlink, (c) South Central, (d) Thameslink and (e) Railtrack; and if he will make a statement. [92127]

Mr. Jamieson: Investment by train operating companies and Network Rail (formerly Railtrack) is made for a variety of reasons including tackling overcrowding. It is not possible to ascribe particular amounts to a single objective. Nor is there a single amount committed by Central Government.

Where train operators breach their 'Passengers In Excess of Capacity' limit the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) can require an action plan to be produced. The SRA now publish information on these in the June edition of 'On Track'. This is placed in the Library of the House.

Road Deaths

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 627W, on road deaths, whether his Department has specifically requested from the Netherlands (a) figures on accident reductions and (b) details of the effects on traffic flows and the behaviour of road users generally, where traffic lights have been removed. [92609]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department is in touch with the official responsible for the work in the Netherlands. Accident figures and the effects on traffic flows have been discussed in general terms and we have asked for any formal figures that may be available. It is important to note that a great deal of work has been done to change the appearance of the roads concerned and reduce vehicle speeds as part of influencing drivers' behaviour. More than just the removal of traffic signals is involved and this needs to be considered when looking at accident and traffic flow figures.

Roadworks (London)

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many reports of hazards to pedestrians have been (a) reported and (b) investigated by the Health and Safety Executive as a result of Transport for London road works in Wandsworth between 2001–02. [92126]

Mr. Jamieson: The information requested is not readily available. Reports to the Health and Safety Executive regarding hazards to pedestrians are normally recorded as complaints concerning the contractor actually doing the work, not the ultimate client. During the period 2001–02 HSE recorded a total of 18 complaints concerning public safety in the London borough of Wandsworth: in 14 of these it proved possible for HSE to carry out investigations. From a further search of available data there is no record of any of these complaints having concerned Transport for London roadwork's.

Rolling Stock

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when all Mark 1 rolling stock will be removed from service. [92622]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority is leading an industry wide Mark 1 Replacement Programme to ensure that all Mark 1 rolling stock is removed from the Network by 31 December 2004, as required in the 1999 Rail Safety Regulations. In the course of investigating this project, it has become clear that it may be necessary to provide for around 300 to 350 vehicles to operate on the network after December 2004, but the SRA expects these vehicles to be removed from the network in spring 2005.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many days were lost due to sickness absence in the Department in 2002. [90537]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport was established following machinery of Government changes in May 2002. The most recent 'Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service' published by the Cabinet Office and announced by Ministerial Statement on 19 December 2002 covered the calendar year 2001 for the predecessor Department, the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions and its executive agencies. Figures for 2002 will be announced in due course.

The Department is committed to managing sick absence effectively and to meeting its Service Delivery Agreement (SDA) target reductions in sick absence by the end of 2003.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many working days were lost due to illness in his Department in 2002. [90973]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport was established following machinery of Government changes in May 2002. The most recent "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service", published by the Cabinet Office and announced by Ministerial Statement on 19 December 2002, covered the calendar year 2001 for the predecessor Department, the Department of Transport, Local Government and the Regions, and its executive agencies. Figures for 2002 will be announced in due course.

The Department is committed to managing sick absence effectively and to meeting its Service Delivery Agreement (SDA) target reductions in sick absence by the end of 2003.

St. Pancras Cemeteries

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer of 8 January 2003, Official Report, column 22W, on St. Pancras cemeteries, how many representations he received; what issues were raised in the representations; what response he made to each of the representations; what contacts he had with the contractors responsible for the work as a result of the representations he received; when the work of removing the graves will be completed; how many graves will be removed from the cemetery as a result of the work; how old the graves are which are being removed; what information he has collated regarding surviving relatives of those buried in the graves; and what action he has taken to ensure that the removal of graves is being carried out in conformity with the relevant regulations. [91328]

Mr. Jamieson: The Secretary of State has to date received nine written representations on this matter, which have raised concerns ranging from the retrieval and recording of archaeological information from the site to the method of working and removal of bodies. London & Continental Railways has continued to liaise closely with contractors and the ecclesiastical authorities, and the Secretary of State's advisers on the CTRL project have been closely involved as work has proceeded. The bulk of the exhumation work will be completed by the end of April. It is estimated that the remains of up to 8,000 bodies will be removed from the site, although not all of these are identifiable individuals. The cemetery closed in 1854 so all the burials pre-date that time. As the site had already been disturbed by 19th century railway construction, there is no identification on the surface of individual burials. Any information from the excavations is recorded by the specialist contractor carrying out the work, which is being done in accordance with legal requirements relevant to burial grounds from this period.

Thames Estuary Airport

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what discussions he has had with the Thames Estuary Airport Company regarding their proposals for a new airport; [91356]

(2) whether (a) he and (b) his departmental officials have had discussions regarding a proposal for a new airport situated in the Thames estuary on a site north-east of the Isle of Sheppey; [91349]

(3) if he will set out the timetable for public consultation on UK air transport. [91693]

Mr. Jamieson: The only contact between my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport and the Thames Estuary Airport Company Limited (TEACO) has been to receive their written response to "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom (South East)". This included proposals for a new airport on an artificial island in the Thames Estuary. Officials have had a number of telephone conversations with representatives of TEACO, both before and after submission of their written response.

The consultation period, throughout the UK, has been extended until we have consulted on Gatwick runway options. The consultation period will run for four months after the date of publication of the new material. Those who have already responded to the consultation will be able to amend, add to, or replace their response having considered the new material, if they wish to do so.

Train Drivers (Sickness)

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the sickness rates were for train drivers in (a) 1991, (b) 1996 and (c) 2001. [92096]

Mr. Jamieson: This information is not held centrally.

Water Freight

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much freight was carried on water in the UK in (a) the year to May 1992, (b) the year to May 1997 and (c) the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [91759]

Mr. Jamieson: Statistics of freight traffic carried on UK waters are compiled on an annual basis only. Total waterborne freight traffic in years 1991, 1996 and 2001 (the latest available year), in terms of goods lifted (tonnage) and goods moved (tonne-kilometres), were as follows:

Year	Goods lifted (million tonnes)	Goods moved (billion tonne-kilometres)
1991	144.2	57.7
1996	142.1	55.3
2001	131.7	58.8

Working Time Directive

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the impact of the working time directive on services by (a) rail and (b) road. [91758]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department is consulting both sides of industry, on the likely impact of the adopted working time directive for mobile workers in the road transport sector (2002/15/EC). A regulatory impact assessment will be published later this year, alongside a consultation document on our proposals.

Rail and road workers will be subject to the original Working Time Directive (93/104/EC), as amended by 2000/34/EC, by August 2003. The Department of Trade and Industry published a draft impact assessment on 31 October 2002, which covers all the sectors excluded from the original directive, including rail workers and non-mobile workers in the road transport sector. The draft RIA may be revised following comments received at the close of the public consultation on 31 January.

Written Answers to Questions

TRANSPORT

Airport Security

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with airport authorities regarding security at British airports. [92837]

Mr. Jamieson: My right hon. Friend meets regularly with airport management, and security issues are prominent amongst the topics discussed. There is in addition a very active dialogue at official level.

British Transport Police

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his policy to increase the number of British Transport Police; and if he will make a statement. [91671]

Mr. Jamieson: The number of BTP officers has increased from 2,095 in 1998 to 2,123 in 2002. It is a duty of the BTP Committee, not of the Secretary of State, to secure the maintenance of an adequate and efficient police service and determine the number of persons of each rank in the force.

A180

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Habrough to Stallingborough section of the A180 will be resurfaced with low-noise material. [93310]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from T. Matthews to Shona McIsaac, dated 27 January 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the Harborough to Stallingborough section of the A180 will be resurfaced with low noise material.

As I said in my letter of 28 November 2002, it is not possible to provide a better idea of timing until the review of the maintenance programme is complete. I shall write to you as soon as the results of that review are known.

If you require any further information, please contact Mick Spink, the Highways Agency's Area Manager for the A180. He can be contacted on 0113 283 5397 or by e-mail mick.spink@highways.gsi.gov.uk. For further information on resurfacing of concrete roads, visit our website at www.highways.gov.uk and use our search facility to find 'concrete roads'.

Airports

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on his policy on the public funding of airport infrastructure development. [93285]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government's approach to the funding of future airport development schemes is described in paragraph 15.3 of 'The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom: South East' consultation document. This states that the Government expects the current pattern of private sector financing to continue and that it does not expect to commit public funds to future airport developments.

Civil Servants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants have been employed by (a) his Department and (b) each of its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each year from 1994–95 to 2000–03; and if he will make a statement. [92385]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office, Mr. Alexander, on 22 January 2003, Official Report, columns 333–34W.

Coastal Shipping Freight

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of the freight carried by coastal shipping was in UK flagged ships (a) in the year to May 1992, (b) the year to May 1997 and (c) the most recent year for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [91760]

Mr. Jamieson: Statistics of freight traffic carried by coastal shipping in UK flagged ships are compiled on an annual basis only. The percentages carried in UK flagged ships for years 1991, 1996 and 2001 (the latest available year), in terms of goods lifted (tonnage) and goods moved (tonne-kilometres), were as follows:

Year	UK flag share (percentage of goods lifted)	UK flag share (percentage of goods moved)
2001	13	9

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93036]

Mr. Jamieson: Coinciding with the creation of the Department for Transport in May 2002, a new policy was introduced dealing with the use/misuse of the Department's ICT resources. This policy was brought to the attention of staff in a departmental Bulletin and is contained within the departmental Staff Handbook.

No cases of misuse have been raised since the introduction of the new policy. Similarly, there are no identifiable cases relating to the Department for Transport in the previous four years.

Congestion Charges

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with (a) the Mayor of London and (b) the Metropolitan Police regarding the impact of congestion charging on traffic police; and if he will make a statement. [92836]

Mr. Jamieson: This is a matter between the Mayor of London, Transport for London and the Metropolitan Police.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will bring forward regulations under paragraph 11 of Schedule 23 of the Greater London Authority Act 1999 to extend exemptions from the Central London road user charge; and if he will make a statement. [93352]

Mr. Jamieson: Exemptions from the central London congestion charge are primarily a matter for the Mayor. We are committed to providing a uniform minimum standard of exemptions or concessions from local road user charges in England. In considering the scope of these we will take into account experience gained in London and Durham.

External Consultants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92248]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 16 January, given to the hon. Member for Buckingham (Mr. Bercow), Official Report, column 698W.

Foreign Commercial Vehicles

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 30W, on foreign commercial vehicles, what plans he has for implementing routine checks at ports of entry. [93212]

Mr. Jamieson: Each European member state is required by law to ensure that vehicles bearing its registration are covered by motor insurance. Routine checks on foreign vehicles at ports would be illegal. Random checks involving all vehicles, foreign and domestic, are allowed and are carried out, away from the ports, by police forces and vehicle inspectors.

Health and Safety Strategy

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department and its agencies have met the commitment arising from Action Point 13 of the June 2000 strategy Statement on Revitalising Health and Safety to summarise health and safety performance and plans in Annual Reports from the year 2000–01 onwards. [89508]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Work on 20 January 2003, Official Report, columns 85–86W, in respect of Revitalising Health and Safety.

In addition to including a section on health and safety issues in the Department's Annual Report, separate annual reports on Occupational Health and Safety have been produced for the past four years. These detail performance for the Department and each of its Agencies and identify key occupational health and safety issues for action in the following year.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what information he has collated on the application to his Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the revitalising health and safety strategy statement; and if he will make a statement; [89510]

(2) which senior officials within his Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised. [89509]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Work on 20 January 2003, Official Report, columns 85–86W.

Heritage Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; if he will list such assets; and if he will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92387]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department came into being in May 2002. No heritage assets or antiques have been sold by my Department.

Investment Strategy

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Departmental Investment Strategy will be published. [93226]

Mr. Jamieson: We expect to publish our Departmental Investment Strategy, incorporating the latest detailed expenditure plans for the next three years, shortly.

Late Trains

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains were late in reaching their destination within (i) Railtrack's southern zone, (ii) the south-eastern network and (iii) Kent and Sussex in each month since November 1997. [93818]

Mr Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority publish performance statistics for all train operating companies every three months in "National Rail Trends" and every six months in "On Track". The figures for each operator are not broken down to route level. The most recent editions of each were published on 12 December. Copies of these publications are available in the Libraries of the House.

M6

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the number of vehicles that use the M6 in Staffordshire each day. [93279]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the chief executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Ms Joan Walley, dated 27 January 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, to reply to your recent question about the number of vehicles that use the M6 in Staffordshire each day.

The annual average daily totals of vehicles using the M6 between Junctions 12 and 16 in Staffordshire for the period September to December 2002 were as follows:

Average daily totals of vehicles using M6 between junctions 12 and 16—September to December 2002

Junction	Northbound	Southbound
12 to 13	53,367	52,657
13 to 14	52,653	52,546
14 to 15	49,754	49,673
15 to 16	54,326	55,675

Note:

These figures are averaged over a seven-day week. The equivalent figures for a five-day (Monday to Friday) period would be approximately 3,000 above those shown.

I hope this is helpful. If you would like any further information, the Highways Agency's Route Manager for the M6, Godfrey Short, would be pleased to help. He can be contacted at our offices at Broadway, Broad Street, Birmingham B15 1BL, or by telephone on 0121 678 8135.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects work to start on widening the M6 in Staffordshire; and if he will make a statement. [93280]

Mr. Jamieson: At this stage it is too early to say when work on the M6 widening scheme will start. The Secretary of State announced his response to the Midlands to North West Multi-Modal Study on 10 December 2002. At the same time he asked the Highways Agency to carry out further detailed work on the implementation and timing of the widening between junctions 11A and 19 and to bring forward a scheme for inclusion in the Agency's Targetted Programme of Improvements in the first half of 2003.

Marinair

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the costs of the Marinair scheme for a proposed new airport in the Thames Estuary. [93257]

Mr. Jamieson: A broad estimate of the costs of the former Marinair scheme, based on historical information, was made during the 'Preliminary Site Search of Options for New Airport Capacity to serve the South East and East of England'. No cost estimate has been made relating to the proposal for a new airport on an artificial island in the Thames Estuary, submitted by the Thames Estuary Airport Company Limited (TEACO) as a written response to the airports consultation.

MIDMAN Multi-modal Study

Ms Walley To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will respond to the MIDMAN multi-modal study; and if he will make a statement. [93278]

Mr. Jamieson: Our response to five multi modal studies, including the West Midlands to North West (MEDMAN) study was announced on 10 December 2002 both in an Oral statement to the House of Commons and Press Notice.

The letter which we sent to the West Midlands Regional Planning Body concerning MIDMAN was copied to all constituency MPs in the West Midlands as part of the briefing pack covering the announcement. This letter is also available on the Government Office for the West Midlands website at: http://www.go-wm.gov.uk/static/gems/news/Midman.doc

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92454]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on Wednesday 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Motor Cycling Strategy

Dr. Vincent Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress in drawing up a national motor cycling strategy; and when he expects it to be published. [93995]

Mr Jamieson: The Advisory Group on Motorcycling has established five Task Forces to consider integration and traffic management, vehicle safety and security, environmental and fiscal issues, research, and statistics.

Good progress is being made including the publication of guidance to assist local authorities in installing secure parking for motorcycles, the start of monitored trials of motorcycles in bus lanes, congestion studies and safety research.

Some of the key work streams including safety research, congestion research and environmental assessment, will not reach fruition until 2004. The Interim Report of the Advisory Group on Motorcycling published in April 2001 (and placed in the House Library) explained that when these results were available the Government would be able to determine its strategy for motorcycling.

Oil Spills

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further assessment he has made of the possibility of the satellite tracking of oil spills around the coastal waters of the United Kingdom; what assessment he has made of the Maritime and Coastguard pilot experiment into such tracking; and if he will make a statement. [93624]

Mr. Jamieson: Trials and operational use of radar satellites in a number of countries, including the UK, have proved that this technology can be used to detect oil spills.

The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) in conjunction with the Department of Trade and Industry completed several satellite trials last year. The report on the trials indicated that the integration of satellite images with routine flights of surveillance aircraft would increase visual detections of slicks and promote opportunities for evidence gathering on polluters.

During the next financial year the MCA will be using radar satellite technology operationally. In addition the MCA is working very closely with the EC and Bonn Agreement Members with a view to establish a collaborative approach to funding of such operations.

Private Hire Vehicle Regulations

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what role he had in approving the regulations under the Private Hire Vehicles (London) Act 1998 written by the Greater London Authority; and if he will make a statement. [92855]

Mr. Jamieson: None.

Private Tolls

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the consultation paper on the introduction of VAT on privately operated tolls. [93326]

Mr. Jamieson: I have arranged for a copy of the paper titled "The introduction of VAT on privately operated tolls" that has been sent to operators of privately owned statutory tolled undertakings to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Public Sector Workers (Public Transport)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the proportion of public sector workers who commute to work via public transport. [92669]

Mr. Jamieson: The Autumn 2001 Labour Force Survey showed that 13.4 per cent. of public sector workers usually travelled to work by public transport.

Rail Services (Shrewsbury)

Mr. Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the (a) punctuality, (b) reliability and (c) number of complaints for rail services running to and from Shrewsbury in each year since 1997. [93084]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority publish performance statistics for all train operating companies in their quarterly National Rail Trends publication and their six-monthly "On Track" publication. Figures giving the number of complaints by train operating company are included in "On Track". The figures for each operator are not broken down to route level, but reflect the performance of their services in aggregate. The most recent editions were published on 12 December. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House.

Road Safety

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Driver and Vehicle Licensing Authority last carried out a spot check on road vehicles being unroadworthy and untaxed; what action was taken against the owners; and if he will make a statement on the co-ordination of effort between the DVLA and local enforcement authorities in tackling unroadworthy and untaxed vehicles. [92587]

Mr. Jamieson: DVLA co-operates closely with the police and other enforcement agencies in attending joint roadside checks to target untaxed and unroadworthy vehicles.

The Agency took part in 656 roadside checks in 2000–01, and 1,102 in 2001–02. The keepers of all unlicensed vehicles detected by these checks were pursued for using an unlicensed vehicle on the road. So far in 2002–03 the Agency has taken part in 842 checks, 79 of which were held in conjunction with vehicle excise duty campaigns involving the Agency's wheelclamping teams and the Stingray camera units. Any unlicensed vehicles detected in these checks were also clamped as well as being pursued for having no tax disc.

The last two roadside checks on untaxed cars were undertaken on Friday 17 January at Stratford in East London and the St. Paul's area of the City of London.

DVLA can only tackle instances of unlicensed use identified at roadside checks. The police pursue cases of unroadworthy vehicles. Other enforcement agencies involved in roadside checks include Vehicle Inspectorate, Customs and Excise, Benefits Agency and the Immigration Service.

Strategic Rail Authority

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what guidelines his Department has set for the Strategic Rail Authority on consultation with (a) hon. Members, (b) local authorities and (c) passengers' representatives in advance of proposed changes to and withdrawals of rail services; [93462]

(2) what consultations the Strategic Rail Authority undertook with (a) hon. Members, (b) local authorities and (c) passengers' representatives on the proposed withdrawal of Virgin train services from Blackpool North station; [93463]

(3) how his Department was consulted by the Strategic Rail Authority on changes to the May 2003 timetable; [93464]

(4) what assessment his Department has made of the effectiveness of the Strategic Rail Authority's consultation on changes to the May 2003 timetable. [93461]

Mr. Jamieson: The Directions and Guidance to the SRA state:

> "Section 206 of the Act requires the Authority, in formulating its strategies, to consult Scottish Ministers, the National Assembly for Wales, the Rail Regulator and such other persons as it thinks fit and paragraph 7.11 of these Directions and Guidance requires it to obtain the Secretary of State's consent. Subject to these specific requirements, the Authority will need to judge with whom and how it should consult. There is no general requirement to consult in relation to the exercise of the Authority's other functions .... Even where there is no specific obligation to consult, the Secretary of State expects there to be the appropriate level of consultation with persons likely to be affected by the actions."

The timetable changes were driven by the need to improve performance urgently in the interests of passengers. In order to secure these improvements at the earliest opportunity, by incorporating the changes in the May 2003 timetable, the Authority had limited time for consultation. The Authority consulted Department for Transport officials and Ministers about the implementation of the timetable changes announced last week, and informed other parties including the relevant Rail Passengers Committees in relation to Virgin Cross Country services.

Traffic Calming (A49)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will review the decision by the Highways Agency regarding traffic calming at the junction between the A49 and the Condover turning; [93078]

(2) what accidents have occurred in the last 10 years at or near the junction between the A49 and the Condover turning. [93079]

Mr. Jamieson: I am satisfied that the Highways Agency's decision not to extend the existing 30 mph speed limit on the A49 to include the Condover turning is correct. On the basis of the criteria that we use to decide appropriate speed limits, an extension would be very difficult to justify. In addition, West Mercia Police have confirmed that they would not support an extension in this case.

The Route Management Strategy for the A49 between Ross-on-Wye and Shrewsbury is looking at all existing speed limits along the route in the light of the criteria to ensure consistency. That work will include the Condover turning where there have been two personal injury accidents in the last 10 years. A report is due in the spring.

The introduction of speed limits is very carefully controlled as, to impose an inappropriate limit that would not appear reasonable to most drivers in the prevailing conditions could bring the national system of speed limits into disrepute and lead to greater non compliance.

Trains

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many trains broke down in each of the last five years, broken down by train operating company. [93164]

Mr Jamieson: That information is not held centrally.

Transport Infrastructure Projects

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost was of the largest transport infrastructure project in the United Kingdom constructed without recourse to public sector funding since 1973. [93281]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department for Transport does not hold information on the cost of private investments over this time period.

Transport Safety Statistics

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost of a life figure used is in cost benefit calculations relating to safety improvements in (a) rail, (b) road, (c) air, (d) pedestrian (e) cycling and (f) other modes of transport. [92620]

Mr. Jamieson: The value used for the prevention of a fatality in cost benefit analyses of all surface transport policies and schemes was published in DFT's "Highways Economics Note No. 1: 2001" which is in the Libraries of the House. There is no formal value set for measures affecting our passengers.

Transport Targets

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets the Government have for increasing (a) rail freight and (b) rail passenger use; and when he expects the targets to be met. [92947]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government published a report on its targets and progress in meeting them in relation to the 10 Year Plan on 17 December 2002. Copies are available in theLibraries of the House.

Mr. George Osborne: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what targets the Government have for reducing traffic (a) pollution and (b) congestion; and when he expects the targets to be met. [92948]

Mr. Jamieson: The Department's PS A targets and progress against the objectives in the 10 Year Plan are set out in 'Delivering Better Transport: Progress Report' which was published 17 December 2002, a copy of which has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Virgin Train Services (Blackpool)

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment his Department has made of the (a) economic and (b) other effects of withdrawing Virgin train services to and from Blackpool North station. [93460]

Mr. Jamieson: The Strategic Rail Authority made the changes to improve performance which had deteriorated with the introduction of Virgin's winter 2002–03 timetable. Frequent services will continue to be provided from Blackpool North to Preston from where passengers will be able to join Crosscountry and other main line services. This, by and large, was the position up to the end of the Summer 2002 timetable.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

BBC

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will make a statement on her policy on the status of the BBC as a public sector, public service broadcaster in relation to the round of GATS negotiations. [91350]

Dr. Howells: Services supplied in the exercise of governmental authority are excluded from the scope of the GATS, provided they are supplied neither on a commercial basis nor in competition. The Government will not make commitments that could call into question the role of the BBC as a public service broadcaster.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many cases of computer misuse there were in her Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93052]

Dr. Howells: DCMS has had 11 cases of computer misuse in the last five years, all occurring in one year, 1999.

Category: Accessing inappropriate material on the Internet:
2 cases
one final formal written warning issued one resignation

Category: Inappropriate use of e-mail:
9 cases
1 instant dismissal
5 oral warnings issued
3 final formal written warnings issued

English Tourism

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who was on the short list for the appointment of the Head of English Tourism. [93131]

Dr. Howells: In the interests of confidentiality, we do not release the names of those who apply for DCMS public appointments, including those who are shortlisted. Shortlisting is carried out in accordance with the requirements of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport who made up the board that has the responsibility to appoint the Head of English Tourism. [93132]

Dr. Howells: The appointment of the Chair of the relaunched tourism body is the responsibility of the Secretary of State, taking into account the advice of an interview panel. It is not our policy to publish the names of interview panel members, in order to avoid the risk of their being subjected to unwarranted pressure.

I can confirm that, in line with the Commissioner for Public Appointments Code of Practice, the interview panel included a senior official from DCMS and at least one independent assessor who is not connected with any of the Department's public bodies.

Mr Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what qualifications the new Head of English Tourism has. [93133]

Dr. Howells: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 10 January 2003 that Sir Michael Lickiss will be the new chairman of the relaunched tourism body from 1April 2003, this is a British Body. Sir Michael recently retired after four years as the first chairman of the South West England Regional Development Agency. From 2001 he was the lead spokesman for tourism on behalf of all RDA's. Before taking his last appointment in the south west, he was founder President of the Association of Accounting Technicians (1980–82), President of the Institute of Chartered Accountants in England and Wales (1990–91), Senior Partner of Grant Thornton (1991–94) and Chairman of the Business Technology and Education Council (BTEC; 1994–2000). He has worked in several countries around the world. He is a Governor of the London School of Economics and he was knighted for his services to his profession in 1993.

Free Television Licences

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many pensioners have claimed free television licences in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in each year since 1997. [93080]

Dr. Howells: Free television licences for the over-75s were introduced in November 2000, but no free licences were available prior to that date. TV Licensing, who administer the free licence scheme as agents for the BBC, are not able to provide geographical breakdowns of the number of free licences issued. However, estimates based on the 1991 Census indicate that there were approximately 6,500 people aged 75 or over living in the Shrewsbury and Atcham constituency, and 23,800 in Shropshire.

Licensing Reform

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions she has had with church groups and religious leaders on the impact of the proposed licensing Bill on places of public religious worship; and if she will make a statement. [93287]

Dr. Howells: The White Paper "Time for Reform", published in April 2000 was the subject of a full public consultation. It was sent directly to 231 organisations and over 650 organisations produced responses. We received eight responses from religious organisations, including one from the Churches Main Committee. None of these were concerned with the proposal to licence public entertainment in churches and other places of religious worship. Since then, officials of my Department have had discussions with officials of the General Synod of the Church of England about a possible mechanism to exempt churches from licensing controls.

As I stated in the House of Commons on 16 December 2002, Official Report, column 517, the Government have made a commitment to reconsider their position on the licensing of churches and will announce their conclusions as soon as possible.

Lottery Awards

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much Lottery money Haltemprice and Howden received in 2002; and what the average amount of Lottery money awarded to constituencies was in 2002. [92913]

Mr. Caborn: According to the information supplied to us by the distributing bodies for the National Lottery awards database, £387,414 of Lottery funding has been awarded to Haltemprice and Howden during 2002. The average amount awarded to constituencies during 2002 was £1,644,892.

Production Quotas

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she plans to reform the independent production quota to make it a floor by ensuring that (a) the quota is calculated per channel, both by qualifying hours and spend and (b) exclusions to qualifying hours are minimised. [93104]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 23 January 2003]: The Government responded to the ITC's UK Programme Supply Review on 15 January. In this response we indicated that we accepted all of the ITC recommendations in the area of support for independent production in the UK, and will be introducing the necessary amendments to the Communications Bill and BBC Agreement. These amendments will introduce binding codes of practice governing broadcasters dealings with independent production companies, give OFCOM the power to measure the independent productions quota by value as well as volume if necessary, apply the quota separately to BBC1 and BBC2 and strengthen OFCOM's powers to enforce and monitor the independent production requirements.

Sports Clubs

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what proportions of the members of the governing bodies of sports clubs that receive funding from her Department are (a) male and (b) female. [91916]

Mr. Caborn: This information is not collected.

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what information her Department collates relating to the composition of (a) sports clubs and (b) governing bodies of sports clubs in respect of (i) gender, (ii) ethnicity and (iii) socio-economic groups. [91917]

Mr. Caborn: Sport England collects information in respect of the affiliated members of governing bodies of sport in respect of gender, ethnicity, age and disability. Sport England, through its grants management system, also collects this information in respect of sports clubs membership. Applicants for awards from the Lottery Sports Fund in respect of community sports facilities and provision are asked to provide information on types of user by gender, ethnicity, age and socio-economic group against which applications are assessed.

Statutory Instruments

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many Statutory Instruments subject to negative procedure made by her Department (a) came into force and (b) were considered by a delegated legislation committee in each of the last three sessions. [88023]

Dr. Howells: The number of Statutory Instruments (including Orders in Council) subject to negative procedures made by the Department which came into force in each of the last three sessions are as follows:

Session	Number
2001–02	32
2000–01	4
1999–2000	15

All of the above Orders were copied to the delegated legislation committee for consideration.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Children's Commissioner

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to create a children's commissioner for England. [89552]

Mr. Denham: The pros and cons of establishing a children's commissioner are under consideration.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people enrolled to begin advanced modern apprenticeship courses in each of the last three years for which information is available. [92635]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The numbers of starts on Advanced Modern Apprenticeships, in the last three years for which data are available, are as follows:

Date	Starts on advanced modern apprenticeships
29 October 2001 to 27 October 2002	[1]50,300
30 October 2000 to 28 October 2001	67,700
1 November 1999 to 29 October 2000	76,900

[1] Subject to revision. Data for this period is incomplete because not all the information has reached the database.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many asylum seekers sought education in Bedfordshire in each of the last five years. [92709]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: It is not possible to provide figures for each of the last five years because there is no requirement on local education authorities or the Learning and Skills Council to provide information on the number of asylum seekers in education.

Information from the local Learning and Skills Council suggests that, at the end of July 2000, 60 asylum seekers were known to have sought education within Bedfordshire. These figures include both children of compulsory school age and young people and adults aged over 16. In Luton over the past two years (2000–01 and 2001–02), an average of 130 pupils under 16 from both asylum seeking and refugee backgrounds were in education. The number of asylum seekers participating in further education institutions within Bedfordshire and Luton was 318 during 1999–2000 and 315 during 2000–01.

However, the high mobility of some asylum seekers and refugees makes any data collected unreliable.

Child Nutrition

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the contribution breakfast clubs and the school joint scheme can make to reducing childhood obesity and poor nutrition; and if he will make a statement. [90784]

Ms Blears: I have been asked to reply.

Initial evaluation of breakfast clubs and the national school fruit scheme indicates that they have the potential to make an important contribution to improving children's diet, as do the compulsory nutritional standards for school meals. Measures to increase physical activity can also make a contribution to reducing childhood obesity. Further evaluation of breakfast clubs will be carried out under the food in schools programme. An assessment of the impact of the national school fruit scheme upon children's diets will be undertaken over the next two years.

Children's Fund

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much funding has been received by Sefton Council from the Children's Fund since its inception; how the funds were allocated, broken down by project; what posts have been funded and by how much; and in which organisations these posts arise. [89477]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 15 January 2003]: Under SR2000 Sefton's Children's Fund partnership received a total allocation of £2 million up to March 2004 for its Children's Fund programme. The partnership has been paid £89,471.75 to date. A total of £66,107 was allocated in FY 2002–03 to personnel costs, of which £36,508 has been paid to date. Sefton experienced a shortfall in expenditure against profile in its first year of operation because of early recruitment difficulties and the impact this has had on service delivery. The partnership also received an allocation of £200,000 for activities undertaken as part of the Street Crime initiative from July 2002 to September 2004, and to date have been paid £25,000. The partnership has profiled to spend its full SR2000 allocation by March 2004.

The following table provides a full funding profile for Sefton Children's Fund partnership and a breakdown of its allocation by project.

Consultancy

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92240]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The following table shows expenditure on administrative external consultancy by my Department.

£ million

	Actual expenditure	Estimated outturn
1996–97	9.14
1997–98	4.54
1998–99	5.21
1999–2000	4.45
2000–01	4.74
2002–03		2.77

These figures exclude programme consultancy costs spent directly by the Department and its agencies, which are currently not collected centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. From April 2003 arrangements will be made to collect centrally expenditure information for programme consultancy costs spent directly by the Department. The table also excludes all consultancy spend for non-departmental public bodies, as they are not required to provide the Department with detailed information on consultancy expenditure.

Expenditure information for 1995–96 could not be readily obtained as information is not held electronically for that year.

Figures for 1996–97 to 2001–02 include consultancy spend incurred by central functions that subsequently transferred to Other Government Departments under Machinery of Government changes.

Dyslexia

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many people serving sentences in (a) prisons and (b) young offender institutes in England and Wales have been diagnosed as suffering from dyslexia, in each year since 1992; and what estimate he has made of the numbers serving sentences and suffering from dyslexia, in each year since 1992. [91824]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We do not have robust data for the numbers of prisoners and young offenders diagnosed as suffering from dyslexia.

Many of the experts in this field hold differing views on whether or not the percentage of the prison population suffering from dyslexia is higher than that of the wider community. Some feel that what may appear to be indicators of dyslexia are in fact the result of a whole range of social factors that could include the effects of drug and alcohol abuse, physical injuries, interrupted schooling and lack of parental support. Conversely, others suspect that there is a high incidence of dyslexia among this specific group and that the frustrations arising from this learning difficulty have contributed to their offending behaviour.

Research has also provided conflicting results. In 1998 research from Cambridge University's Institute of Criminology, based on a survey of 323 prisoners at nine establishments, found that only around 4 to 6 per cent. of prisoners were dyslexic.

The most recent research (1999), from the Dyslexia Institute, is based on a survey of nearly 100 young offenders at HMYOI Feltham. This study, which measured cognitive ability as well as dyslexia, found that 17.5 per cent. screened positive against indicators for dyslexia.

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills which (a) prisons and (b) young offender institutes in England and Wales have facilities for (i) diagnosing dyslexia and (ii) providing education for inmates suffering from dyslexia. [91825]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: A survey carried out in 2001 indicated that around a quarter of establishments had staff trained to support learners with dyslexia. Under the Government's Skills for Life strategy, staff in all prisons and young offender institutions will have access to training so that they can identify indicators of dyslexia, know when to refer learners for specialist assessment, and provide appropriate educational programmes for them. This will be further enhanced in those young offender institutions caring for 15 to 17-year-olds by the appointment of special educational needs co-ordinators, and of learning support assistants on a ratio of one to every 10 learners.

New diagnostic assessments for prisoners, to be administered after initial assessment by a specialist teacher, will offer guidance on when to refer learners for a full dyslexia assessment with an educational psychologist or other appropriately trained person.

The majority of people with dyslexia do not require specialist teaching. They need high quality basic skills teaching which adopts a variety of inclusive strategies to support the needs of all learners. An inclusive learning handbook for all staff in prisons and YOIs to be published this spring will increase the understanding of the needs of those with dyslexia.

Empty Homes

Mr Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many empty homes his Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if he will establish an empty homes strategy within his Department; and if he will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92923]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills has not had any homes, empty or otherwise, in the last five years nor does it intend to do so.

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of the total spending of his Department on entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92380]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: All expenditure on official entertainment is made in accordance with departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in Government Accounting. The following table sets out spending in £000s for DfES and its predecessors in the relevant years.

Year	Department of Employment (including Employment Service)	Department for Education	Department for Education and Employment	DfES
1995–96	28	77

[1] Estimated outturn

Free School Meals

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether his Department has released free school meals figures for individual secondary schools to organisations for research purposes within the last 12 months. [92833]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department has released free school meals figures for individual secondary schools to a number of organisations for research purposes within the last 12 months. Before doing so, the organisations signed confidentiality declarations which committed them to maintaining the confidentiality of the data and limited their use of this information to the stated research purpose.

Heritage Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; if he will list such assets; and if he will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92381]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The Department for Education and Skills have not held any heritage or antique assets during the period and therefore no sales have been made.

Higher Education (Armed Forces)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many people who recently left the armed forces took up higher education courses last year; [84763]

(2) when he will reply to the question from the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham, Ref 84763. [92578]

Margaret Hodge: The information is not held centrally.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92446]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Se[illegible] State for Education and Skills what assess[illegible] Department has made of the public service agree[illegible]ts targets it was set in the 1998 comprehensive spending review. [89295]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: There is ongoing assessment of progress against PSA targets, including those agreed as part of the 1998 CSR. We recently reviewed our targets in the context of the 2002 Spending Review. The Department publishes progress against all its PSA targets in its spring departmental report and also its autumn performance report, together with commentary where appropriate . The first autumn report was published in November 2002 and a copy is available from the House of Commons Library.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement; [92239]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: Expenditure from the Department's central advertising and publicity budget is as follows:

1995–96	[1]n/a
1996–97	[1]n/a
1997–98	10,879
1998–99	13,426
1999–2000	9,902
2000–01	14,595
2001–02	11,688
2002–03[2]	14,172

[1] Not available

[2] Estimated

In addition to expenditure from this central budget, expenditure from budgets allocated to individual programmes will also include spend on publicity related activity. It is not possible, except at disproportionate cost, to separately identify all such publicity related expenditure. It is possible to identify separately expenditure on advertising, and this is as follows:

1995–96[1]	8,296
1996–97	7,538
1997–98	9,992
1998–99	15,673
1999–2000	11,900
2000–01	29,066
2001–02	20,489
2002–03[2]	12,215

Pupil Ethnicity

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills for what percentage of pupils their ethnicity has been (a) declared by parents or pupils and (b) determined by the pupil's school. [88888]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: The figures requested are not yet available.

New guidance was issued last year regarding the procedures schools should follow for the collection and recording of pupils' ethnic group. Schools should in the first instance seek information via parents, and any response (including a refusal to provide information) must be respected. However if there is no response at all to the school's inquiries it has the option of ascribing an ethnic group to the pupil based on its own best judgment. In this event various steps have to be taken in order to comply with data protection rules, and the fact that ascription has taken place must be shown alongside the ethnic group itself—both in the school's own records, and in any information passed on to the LEA or to the Department in the Pupil Level Annual Schools Census (PLASC). This year's PLASC returns from schools will reflect the ethnic group information which they have collected under the new guidance, including details of whether that was provided by parents or pupils or ascribed by the school. However these returns will not be received and processed until about April.

Research Projects

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the research projects (with duration and name of contractor) commissioned by his Department in each of the last five years; if he will indicate (a) the duration of each project and (b) the name of the organisation contracted to undertake the research; and what the aggregate cost was of research projects in each year. [92641]

Mr. Miliband: Details of the Department's research programme contracts and their value since the financial year commencing April 1998 are published in the Department's annual reports on research and research conference reports, copies of which may be found in the House of Commons Libraries.

Sector Skills Councils

Barbara Follett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) if he will define the term employer-led when applied to sector skills councils; [93246]

(2) what plans he has to make sector skills councils financially independent; [93247]

(3) if he will make a statement on the terms of ownership of the sector skills councils; and what the terms of ownership are of the retail skills council, Skill Smart. [93248]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: To meet the standard to become a Sector Skills Council, an organisation should be employer-led. This means it should be launched and led by employers but should also involve other important organisations in the sector, such as trade unions. We recognise that a component of many SSCs will be support from their trade association but the SSC, as an organisation licensed by Government and in receipt of public funds, must be wholly independent of it or any holding company. In the case of Skillsmart, we have made it clear that to become a fully licensed SSC it will need to be independent of the British Retail Consortium.

On the question of funding, my Department will meet part of the costs of an SSC (up to £1 million core contribution) to give capacity to allow SSCs to take a more strategic approach underpinned by proper research and avoid being compromised by commercial interests. But we have always expected our £1 million would lever significant additional private investment into skills and productivity development in the sector.

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will give an update of progress on the foundation of Sector Skills Councils. [93293]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: Five trailblazer Sector Skills Councils were announced in December 2001 covering audio visual industries: land based industries; apparel, footwear and textiles; oil and gas extraction, chemicals manufacturing and petroleum industries and the retail sector. There are nine further sectors in the final phase of developing Sector Skills Council proposals for consideration by the Sector Skills Development Agency. The trailblazer SSCs together with those in development cover over 50 per cent. of the workforce. We expect the first SSCs to be licensed early in 2003.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many days were lost due to sickness absence in the Department in 2002. [90549]

Mr. Stephen Twigg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 160W.

Special Needs

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what alternative provision he will put in place to meet the needs of people with special needs who are excluded from attending their clubs on attaining the age of 25; [92320]

(2) for what reason it was decided to set 25 as the age at which to exclude people with special needs from the clubs they had been attending; and if he will make a statement; [92323]

(3) whether it is his policy, with reference to the document "Resourcing Excellence in Youth Services", launched in December, that people with special needs should be excluded from youth services when they reach the age of 25; [92322]

(4) what provision he will make for people with serious learning difficulties to continue to be able to attend their clubs after reaching the age of 25; [92321]

(5) what his policy is on the exclusion of people with serious learning difficulties from youth and other clubs at the age of 25; and if he will make a statement. [92324]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Local education authorities (the statutory sector) and a range of voluntary organisations provide the Youth Service. The priority age group for the service is 13 to 19-year-olds but the target age group may extend to 11 to 25-year-olds in some cases.

Provision is usually in the form of youth clubs and centres, or through "detached" or outreach work aimed at young people at risk from alcohol or drug misuse, or of drifting into crime. There is an increasing emphasis on youth workers working with disadvantaged, disaffected, and socially excluded young people.

In December 2002 the Government launched the document "Transforming Youth Work Resourcing Excellent Youth Services" which provides a cross Government view of the key elements of a high quality, well managed and properly resourced Youth Service. The document underpins the Transforming Youth Work programme and the Government's commitment to work with local authorities to ensure the delivery of a high quality Youth Service for young people which is at the heart of the Connexions Service. The document emphasises that local authorities should ensure the delivery of a service which targets the 13–19 age range but may also be working at the margins with 11–13 and 19 to 25-year-olds. The document confirms this existing age range criteria for the Youth Service.

Under the Learning and Skills Act, the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) has a specific responsibility to help both young people and adults with learning difficulties and disabilities. The broad remit of the council enables it to fund a wide range of learning provision when considering their particular needs. This includes activities offering opportunities for non-formal types of learning, and learning which does not lead to a qualification. For adults, particularly those with special needs, this provision will be more suitable than a youth work curriculum provided by the Youth Service.

I do not intend making a statement at this time.

Sure Start

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what the role of Early Years Partnerships will be in the new Sure Start programme; [87615]

(2) if the Sure Start advisors in the regions will be responsible for all Early Years initiatives within their region. [87616]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 18 December 2002]: To make life better for children, parents and communities, on 11 December we launched the new Sure Start Unit. This brings together at a national level responsibility for early education, child care and health and family support in one, cross-departmental unit. Drawing on best practice in early education, child care and Sure Start local programmes, the guiding principles of the new unit are:

Working with parents and children;

Services for everyone (responding to varying needs);

Flexible at the point of delivery;

Starting very early;

Respectful and transparent;

Community driven and professionally coordinated;

Outcome driven (core purpose—better outcomes for children);

These national changes will be reflected in some reorganisation of the local support the unit provides to ensure that mainstream services for children and parents are delivered in accordance with the unit's guiding principles. We are currently considering how best to achieve this.

This national change does not, however, alter the existing roles and responsibilities of Local Authorities and Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships (EYDCPs). Local authorities will retain their significant responsibilities under the School Standards and Framework Act 1998 for early years and child care. This includes setting up and maintaining EYDCPs to assist in preparing early years strategic plans and developing the local provision of child care.

At a national level, responsibility for Sure Start, early years and child care have been brought together in one cross-departmental unit (the Sure Start Unit). This unit led by Baroness Ashton who is a joint DfES/DWP Minister will continue to provide support to the local delivery of services through a network of regionally-based teams and advisors, ensuring that people with the most appropriate skills and experience are available to assist delivery of this important area of the Government's agenda.

Truancy

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what measures he is taking to reduce the number of children failing to attend school; and what discussions he has had with officials and Ministers in the Home Office regarding truancy from schools. [92013]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: On 12 December 2002, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, set out his strategy to improve behaviour and attendance in all schools. In doing so, he underlined our commitment to the Public Service Agreement: by 2004, to reduce truancies by 10 per cent. compared to 2002, to sustain the new lower level, and improve overall attendance levels thereafter. To achieve this objective, we have introduced a range of initiatives, such as the co-ordination of national truancy sweeps, funding for electronic registration systems, the development of guidance for more effective prosecutions and a sustained publicity campaign aimed at parents and pupils. In addition, we are proposing a new package of support and sanctions, such as behaviour and attendance training and audits available to all secondary schools from September, fixed penalty notices for parents of persistent truants and the introduction of parenting contracts.

Ministers and officials in this Department and the Home Office are in regular contact on truancy issues, for example through the Government's Street Crime Initiative and in developing measures for the proposed Anti-Social Behaviour Bill.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Flooding Insurance

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the competition implications of discrimination against applicants for household insurance on the basis of postcodes as a proxy for flood risk. [93000]

Mr. Morley: Postcode rating is, I understand, the method used by insurers for all household insurance policies and not just for flood risk. Whether this method has a detrimental effect on competition is a matter for the Director General for Fair Trading, who can then consider any appropriate action.

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the Association of British Insurers about problems experienced by householders in the KT postcode areas in obtaining flood insurance since 3 January. [93001]

Mr. Morley: There has been no discussion since 3 January specifically about insurance in KT postcode areas. The Association of British Insurers and the Environment Agency are in regular discussion over provision of better flood risk information for England, taking into account flood defences, to enable insurers to understand the risk for particular areas. A meeting took place this week to consider the initial data provided in December 2002 and how best this can meet insurers' requirements in order that they can continue provision of insurance in line with their Statement of Principles.

Aircraft Fuel

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what studies she has evaluated on the effect of the dumping of aircraft fuel into airspace on (a) the ozone layer, (b) human and plant health and (c) water quality; and if she will make a statement. [92265]

Mr. Meacher: None. There is no evidence that this is a significant problem. Aviation fuel can only be legally jettisoned in an emergency, when Air Traffic Control would advise the pilot to do so, if at all possible, either over the sea or over 10,000 feet above ground level so that the fuel would vaporise. Emergencies are by definition rare occurrences. There is no incentive for jettisoning fuel illegally—it is an expensive commodity. If aviation fuel were to be jettisoned it would biodegrade readily and therefore would not be expected to have a long-term impact. As aviation fuel contains no more than the smallest traces of chlorine or bromine, it will make no contribution to ozone layer depletion.

Alternative Fuels

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with the British Cement Association on the use of alternative fuels. [91847]

Mr. Meacher: Officials of the Department have occasional contact with the British Cement Association on a range of environmental issues. A meeting on 18 December 2002 included discussion in general terms of the potential for the cement industry to burn alternative fuels.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many live sheep were exported from Dover to continental Europe on (a) 17 December 2002, (b) 20 December 2002 and (c) 8 January; when and where health certification was carried out in respect of the sheep, how many of the sheep were rejected as unfit for the intended journey (i) during inspection for health certification purposes and (ii) at Dover docks, and to where those sheep were taken; and what was the address of the final destination given on the route plan for each of the consignments. [90901]

Mr. Morley: The information requested is as follows:

Sailing date	Total animals certified	Where consignments were certified	Animals rejected at certification	Animals rejected at Dover docks	Destination
17 December	2,278	England and Wales	57	0	France
20 December	2,616	England, Wales and Scotland	74	0	France
8 January 2003	3,066	England and Wales	132	0	France
8 January 2003	479	England	0	0	Belgium

The sheep for the consignments listed above were certified within 48 hours prior to export. These consignments were fattening animals transported to holdings. The animals which were rejected at certification remained in Great Britain.

Commercial Whaling

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action the Government intend to take to discourage the resumption of commercial whaling by Iceland; and if she will make a statement. [93067]

Mr. Morley: We have written to the US Government, in its capacity as depositary for the International Convention for the Regulation of Whaling (ICRW), to object formally to Iceland rejoining the International Whaling Commission with a reservation to the moratorium on commercial whaling. A copy of this letter has also been sent to all IWC members.

The Government of Iceland have undertaken, while submitting its Instrument of Adherence to the ICRW, not to resume commercial whaling before 2006 at the earliest.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she intends to take to persuade Norway to desist from catching whales; and if she will make a statement. [93069]

Mr. Morley: The UK Government takes every opportunity, both within the International Whaling Commission and in other relevant fora, to express its opposition to Norwegian whaling and to persuade Norway to cease its whaling activities.

Company Environmental Performance

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will place an updated list of FTSE 350 companies that report on their environmental performance in the Library. [93271]

Mr. Meacher: The Department conducted a survey last year of the progress made by companies in the FTSE 350 in voluntary reporting of their environmental performance. An account of the results of this survey was placed in the Library of the House in July 2002. The exercise has not been repeated since then, so the information from last July is the most up-to-date available.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cases of computer misuse there were in her Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93040]

Alun Michael: The Department seeks to ensure that all users of computer systems are fully aware of their responsibilities and legal obligations. This is done by a variety of methods such as through system training programmes, published user guides and usage policies together with general security policy guidance and advice. This material is subject to regular review and is easily accessible through the Departmental Intranet. Regular Office Notices also provide reminders of key points.

The Department does not maintain a central list of all cases of computer misuse because in the vast majority of instances these are correctly handled through the line management chain or local Personnel Units.

Since 9 June 200[illegible] the IT Directorate have assisted with providing information in a number of cases of suspected com[illegible] misuse. This has led to formal disciplinary action in five cases. The Department was formed on 9 June 2001 so figures are not available prior to that date.

Dolphins/Porpoises

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action the Government will take to discourage the killing of dolphins and porpoises by Japan this year; and if she will make a statement. [93068]

Mr. Morley: At this year's annual International Whaling Commission meeting, which takes place in Berlin from 16 to 19 June 2003, we intend to raise our concerns over the lack of regulation and the methods used in the hunts for small cetaceans that take place in Japanese waters and elsewhere.

Empty Homes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many empty homes her Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if she will establish an empty homes strategy within her Department; and if she will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92919]

Alun Michael: On 1 April 1998, the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food had vacant dwellings at the following locations:

Three in Littlehampton, West Sussex.

One in Liscombe, Devon.

One near Lymington, Hants.

The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs currently has vacant dwellings at the following locations:

Two at Cawood, near Selby, north Yorks.

Two at Martyr Worthy, Winchester, Hants.

The Department already has a strategy for empty dwellings. If they are not any integral part of a bigger property such as a farm, they will be sold as soon as possible. If they cannot be sold, they will be offered for letting subject to any security considerations.

Arrangements are already in hand for the disposal of the dwellings which are currently empty. The sale of the Cawood properties should be completed by the end of March 2003 and the sale of the Martyr Worthy properties should be completed by or around the end of June 2003.

Energy Efficiency

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what proportion of buildings built as part of the Government's estate in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002 made use of the Government's design advice scheme on energy efficiency. [90240]

Mr. Meacher: The Carbon Trust runs the Action Energy programme (formerly Government's non-domestic Energy Efficiency Best Practice Programme), which includes the design advice scheme on energy efficiency.

Only two Departments, Ministry of Defence and Department for International Development, made use of the design advice scheme between 2001–02. However, the scheme is provided as a service package to Departments, and information is not collected on a building-by-building, or annual basis. Data are not maintained centrally on new builds on the Government estate.

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent measures she has taken to encourage energy efficiency. [92000]

Mr. Morley: Since the publication of the UK's Climate Change Programme in November 2000, the following main actions have been taken to promote energy efficiency in the domestic, business and public sectors:

The Climate Change Levy, a levy on the business use of fuel, was introduced in April 2001. Receipts, forecast at £1 billion a year, are recycled back to business—including £50 million for business energy efficiency.

Climate Change Agreements have been reached with 44 sectors of energy intensive industry. Participants in these agreements pay a reduced rate of Climate Change Levy (20 per cent. of the full levy) in return for meeting challenging energy efficiency targets over a 10-year period.

The Carbon Trust was launched in April 2001, and receives two-thirds of its annual budget from recycled receipts from the Climate Change Levy, it encourages and promotes the development of low carbon technologies to support the transition to a low carbon economy. It offers an interest free loan scheme for small and medium-sized businesses and provides funding for the development of low carbon technologies through the Low Carbon Innovation Programme.

The Enhanced Capital Allowances Scheme enables businesses to claim 100 per cent. first year capital allowances on investments in a range of approved energy saving technologies.

The UK Emissions Trading Scheme was launched in April 2002. Companies in Climate Change Agreements can trade within the scheme to help meet their targets. Participants entering directly into the scheme can trade to meet emission reduction targets delivering 1.1 MtC by 2006. Energy efficiency measures help participants to meet their targets.

New requirements have been introduced for local authorities. Authorities have to know their buildings' energy consumption and carbon emissions. From 2002–03 they are required to benchmark their energy use in operational property and street lighting, and will set local improvement targets from 2003–04.

The Energy Efficiency Commitment for 2002–05 (EEC) places a challenging but realistic obligation on electricity and gas suppliers to promote improvements in domestic energy efficiency. Suppliers will achieve individual EEC targets by encouraging and assisting consumers to take up energy efficiency measures. It is expected to save 0.4 million tonnes of carbon a year by 2005. It will also help those on lower incomes—who spend a larger proportion of their incomes on energy—by focussing at least 50 per cent. of energy savings on consumers in receipt of benefits or tax credits.

Since its launch in June 2000, the new Home Energy Efficiency Scheme—which is now marketed as Warm Front—has helped over 400,000 households through the installation of a range of insulation and heating measures. Warm Front is the Government's main programme for tackling fuel poverty, aimed at the most vulnerable groups in the private sector in England.

The Community Energy Programme is a £50 million grant programme operational from 2002–04 aiming to promote community heating in the UK, primarily through the use of CHP. It will install and refurbish community heating schemes, benefiting people on low incomes while contributing to the Climate Change Programme by reducing carbon emissions by an estimated 0.15 million tonnes of carbon a year.

Part L of the Building Regulations covering energy efficiency provisions was revised in October 2001 and the changes came into effect in 2002. These require work on new buildings and the refurbishment of the existing stock to conform to higher energy efficiency standards including those relating to building insulation, air-tightness, lighting, space heating, hot water, boiler performance and replacement glazing. It is estimated that the package of measures introduced in October will reduce carbon emissions from the domestic sector by 0.8 million tonnes per year by 2010.

The Treasury introduced in the 2002 Budget, a VAT reduction on certain energy saving materials installed under grant schemes.

The Government have provided funding for the Energy Saving Trust (EST) to help individual households, local authorities and others improve domestic energy efficiency. Since 2000, EST has created the Practical Help advisory service, expanded its local authority support programme providing dedicated staff to 23 areas across the UK, introduced a new grant scheme for innovative projects and expanded its network of Energy Efficiency Advice Centres providing households with advice and support. EST has developed the Energy Efficiency Recommended (EER) labelling scheme (with energy efficiency manufacturers, retailers and installers) to provide easy identification of energy efficient products. EST has also developed EEI—the network of accredited installers in the insulation and heating industries.

Environment Agency

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice she has given the Environment Agency about ethical and sustainable investment of its pension fund. [90143]

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance she has given to the Environment Agency on the investments made by its pension fund. [90244]

Mr. Leslie: I have been asked to reply.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is responsible for the regulatory framework governing the Local Government Pension Scheme, to which the Environment Agency belongs. The investment practice of the agency's pension funds is a matter for their fund managers, supervised by the relevant investment committee, within the regulatory framework set out in SI 1998 No 1831 (the Local Government Pension Scheme (Management and Investment of Funds) Regulations 1998), as amended. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no authority to offer specific advice or guidance on what individual investments should or should not be made.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost of (a) setting up and (b) running the Environment Agency website, 'What's in Your Backyard' is; how many users on average it has attracted per month; and if she will make a statement. [92796]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency spent £245,000 in setting up its 'What's in Your Backyard' site, and it incurs running costs of £215,000 per annum.

The website attracts an average of 35,000 users monthly.

Equids

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations she has received about the proposed EU directive requiring all equids to have passports; and if he will make a statement. [91829]

Alun Michael: We consulted on implementation of the EU legislation on horse passports in summer 2000. The proposal for all horses to have passports received the support of the equine industry as represented by the British Horse Industry Confederation (BHIC).

We have received 16 representations from Members of Parliament on this subject and approximately 100 from horse owners and members of the Association of British Riding Schools.

We expect shortly to consult further on a proposed order implementing the EU legislation.

EU Rice Regime

Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what account the European Commission took of the impact of a 50 per cent. cut in the price of rice on the economy of Guyana in its proposals for reform of the EU rice regime. [92725]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 January 2003]: The European Commission's proposals for reform of the EU rice regime were published in detailed form only on 22 January 2003. According to the Commission's own explanatory memorandum they are designed to correct current imbalances in the market and to prepare for the liberalisation of trade already agreed under the Everything But Arms initiative.

Bringing the internal EU rice price closer to world market levels may in the short term reduce the value of certain existing preferential market access arrangements to beneficiaries such as Guyana and others in the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) group of countries. But in the longer term CAP reform should improve market prospects and opportunities for all developing country exporters.

We recognise the interests of the ACP countries in the proposals and will be exploring these issues further when negotiations begin.

Exmoor

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assistance she (a) has given and (b) plans to give to Exmoor following the foot and mouth epidemic. [88301]

Alun Michael: The Government has helped businesses adjust to the impact of foot and mouth disease and its aftermath through:

Setting up the £80 million Business Recovery Fund. This fund, administered by the regional development agencies, funded business improvements, training, and loan interest costs, together with local/regional tourism promotion and rural regeneration projects which helped bring visitors back to rural areas more quickly. The South West Regional Development Agency—covering Exmoor—benefited from an additional £14 million from central Government and the RDA made a further £3 million available from their budgets for FMD-related business recovery measures.

Deferring tax, VAT and National Insurance payments, without interest charges, for businesses severely affected by foot and mouth disease (with a total amount deferred in excess of £250 million throughout England).

Helping local authorities defer rate payments and/or give hardship rate relief through the non-domestic rates system by increasing the central Government contribution towards local authority costs of providing relief to rural businesses. 151 rural local authorities could underwrite the cost of giving relief to businesses with properties under £12,000 rateable value generally, and properties under £50,000 rateable value in the 39 worst affected rural authority areas for the 2001–02 financial year, which includes the rural authorities that cover Exmoor. North Devon District Council granted over £240,000 of relief under the scheme; West Somerset District Council granted nearly £390,000; over 95 per cent. of the cost was met by central Government.

Fast tracking other measures to speed up rural regeneration, for example rapid introduction of mandatory rate relief for pubs, garages and other food shops in small settlements and extending the market towns programme to include towns badly affected by FMD;

Matching over £14 million in donations from the public to charitable organisations helping farmers and rural communities hit by FMD, including over £40,000 for the Exmoor Trust.

Providing £0.5 million for the Countryside Access Recovery Fund to promote access to and/or understanding of the countryside.

In addition, the Exmoor Environmentally Sensitive Area agreement holders, in 2002, collectively received in excess of £1.8 million in management payments and a further £1.44 million in capital grants for Conservation Plan works.

Farm Plastics

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what advice she offers to farmers in respect of the disposal of farm plastics. [91533]

Mr. Meacher: We will be addressing the question of how to deal with waste non-packaging farm plastics in the forthcoming consultation document on the application of the waste framework directive to agricultural waste, which is due to published in May 2003.

Farm Subsidy

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much subsidy was received directly by farmers in the last 12 months; and what the average subsidy received by (a) arable and (b) livestock farmers was. [82897]

Mr. Morley: Direct subsidies paid to farmers in the United Kingdom in the financial year 2000–01 totalled £2,348 million. The Farm Business Survey provides an estimate of average subsidy receipts by full-time farm businesses in England. The table shows average direct subsidies received by farm businesses of different types in 2001–02. Payments in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland were the responsibility of the devolved authorities in this period.

These figures include all production related payments, together with agri-environment and rural development payments. They do not include payments made to farmers during the FMD crisis for reasons of disease control or animal welfare. Farmers may also have benefited from payments of market support, though these are also available to traders.

Average direct payments for full-time farm businesses, England, 2001–02

£ per farm

	Direct subsidies
Livestock	14,300
Arable	36,800

Notes:

1. Average account year end February.

2. Full-time businesses are defined as those greater than eight European Size Units, an economic measure of size.

3. 'Livestock' farms cover the following farm type categories used in the Farm Business Survey: cattle and sheep (hill and lowland), dairy and pig and poultry.

4. 'Arable' farms cover the farm types: specialist cereals and general cropping.

Fisheries

Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs, pursuant to her answer of 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 372W, on fisheries, for what reasons a copy of Opinion of the Legal Service, Council of the European Union, No. 13585/02, Limite, JUR424 PECHE164, dated 29 October 2002, was not passed by her Department to the (a) Scottish Fishermen's Federation and (b) National Federation of Fishermen's Organisations. [92645]

Mr. Morley: Documents bearing the classification "Limite" are internal to the Council of the European Union and are not intended for disclosure to the public. Moreover, the Council Legal Service provides legal advice to assist the Council in the course of its work. The opinions are excluded from the categories of Council decisions subject to publication under the Council rules of procedure.

Under the terms of European Parliament and Council Regulation 1049/2001 it is not open to the Government to decide unilaterally to release a Council Legal Service opinion, unless there is a strong public interest to do so. Recent case law and Council decisions confirm that it is not in the public interest to release documents containing Council Legal Service advice. Release would also run contrary to the principle of Legal Professional Privilege.

GM Crops

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the release consents that contain the GM oilseed rape transformation events Ms8 and Rf3 for each of the years from 1990 to 1999 in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland. [90617]

Mr. Meacher: The consents under which the GM oilseed rape transformation events Ms8 and Rf3 had permission for release in field trials for each of the years from 1990 to 1999 are given in the table PGS became AgrEvo in 1999 and is now known as Bayer CropScience.

All the listed consents apply to England, Scotland and Wales but most of the releases took place in England. Some of the consents give permission for a programme of releases covering more than one year and in these cases the years in which sowing the GM oilseed rape was permitted are given.

Greenhouse Gases

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the impact of legislation aimed at reducing greenhouse gas emissions on industries important to the delivery of Government initiatives aimed at reducing Greenhouse Gas emissions. [90810]

Mr. Meacher: The UK Climate Change Programme published in November 2000 sets out the range of policy measures—regulation, economic instruments, information programmes and public expenditure—that the Government and the devolved administrations are introducing to reduce greenhouse gas emissions and to meet the UK's climate change targets. The measures in the Programme will deliver wider environmental, social and economic benefits. Measures to stimulate more efficient use of energy by business, for example, will help improve competitiveness. The Programme is also designed to offer incentives to industry to develop new, low carbon technologies and to exploit the growing international market for more efficient processes and renewable technologies.

The Programme includes two legislative measures that affect industry directly, each of which was subject to individual regulatory impact assessments as part of the normal policy development process. The industries affected by the legislation will include some that are important to the delivery of the policy measures in the Programme, but the Government has not produced a separate assessment of the specific impacts on them.

The first legislative measure is the EC Directive 96/61 on integrated pollution prevention and control (IPPC), which applies an integrated environmental approach to the regulation of certain industrial activities and, inter alia, contributes to the reduction of emissions of greenhouse gases, as well asimproving the energy efficiency of most of the energy intensive sectors of industry. The impact of the Directive, and the legislation implementing its requirements in England and Wales, was considered in the regulatory impact assessment published on 26 April 2000. It is available on the Defra website at http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/consult/ippc5/pdf/ippc5.pdf. The Directive has some impact on combined heat and power (CHP) technology, which the Government is supporting because of its high efficiency.

The second legislative measure is the energy efficiency provisions contained in Part L of the Building Regulations for England and Wales, which were amended by the Building (Amendment) Regulations 2001. The aim is to improve the energy performance of all types of building, including those used for industrial and commercial purposes, to reduce energy use and therefore emissions of carbon dioxide. The Building Regulations are the responsibility of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The amendments came into force on 1 April 2002. A regulatory impact assessment for the Regulations was published by the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions (now the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister) when the Regulations were made. It is available on the ODPM website at http://www.safety.odpm.gov.uk/bregs/brpub/ria/ria-01/index.htm. I understand that, in accordance with normal practice, the Office intends to investigate how the amended Regulations are being implemented around 2004, when there is a sufficient sample of works compliant with the new requirements.

Heritage Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by her Department since May 1997; if she will list such assets; and if she will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92390]

Alun Michael: Since Defra was created on 8 June 2001 no heritage or antique assets have been sold.

Illegal Meat Imports

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she has taken to prevent illegal meat imports into Britain. [91996]

Mr. Morley: Significant progress has been made to implement the Government's action plan, published in March 2002. The action plan will be revised shortly in consultation with stakeholders to include a longer-term enforcement strategy, further development of detection initiatives, and enhanced and coordinated publicity materials.

A Cabinet Office review of enforcement structures concluded that all activity against smuggling of meat, animal products, fish and plant matter will move to Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, to objectives agreed with Defra. A new ministerial group will oversee improved coordination between the main control agencies.

The results of the disease risk assessment commissioned by Defra from the Veterinary Laboratory Agency, are being subjected to processes of quality assurance and peer review. The full report will be published in the next few weeks when these are complete.

Extra funding this financial year has been used primarily for additional enforcement officers to perform checks on imports at a number of ports and airports. Legislation was amended in May 2002 to provide enforcement officers with additional search powers, and written guidance was provided to them on the use of these powers, especially with regard to checks for illegal meat imports in passenger baggage.

Enforcement officers have improved access to intelligence to aid them in deploying anti-smuggling measures since a central computer database was established in April 2001. Notably they receive monthly reports of products seized and notified to Defra.

We are carrying out a six-month pilot using detector dogs to find illegal animal products in passenger baggage and freight. The pilot is proving valuable in determining the attributes and level of training required for both dogs and their handlers and the back-up services we need to support the dog teams.

X-ray equipment is being used, on a trial basis, at a seaport to detect illicit material hidden in commercial freight. Defra is working with the Foreign Office and Customs on a pilot to test x-ray technology on air passenger baggage.

Public awareness is being increased through penalty posters and information leaflets at airports and seaports. Public information videos have been produced and are being broadcast on television. Negotiations are on-going with airlines to show them in-flight. The posters have been updated, and new literature is being produced, to highlight the new tighter personal import rules which came into effect on 1 January 2003 as a result of UK pressure on the European Commission.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects to publish the Veterinary Laboratory Agency risk analysis report into animal health from illegal meat importation. [92612]

Mr. Morley: Emerging results of the risk assessment are currently being subjected to peer review and quality assurance procedures. The complexity of the work, and the necessity to complete the quality assurance and peer review processes, have delayed publication. We now hope to be in a position to publish by early March.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what instructions her Department has issued to local authority environment health officers and port health authorities about illegal meat importation. [92614]

Mr. Morley: The Department produced new enforcement guidance in conjunction with the enforcement agencies. This was published in August 2002 and has just been updated to take account of the new European personal import rules that came into force on 1 January. We are also discussing prosecutions policy with enforcement agencies.

The Food Standards Agency has also issued guidance letters to port health authorities and local authorities to ensure there is continued vigilance and checks on imported products both at the point of import and at the retail level. In collaboration with Defra, the FSA is developing a training programme to provide information to all local authorities on imported food issues.

[illegible] Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to prevent the illegal entry of meat into the UK. [92880]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 23 January 2003]: Significant progress has been made to implement the Government's action plan, published in March 2002. Landfill

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the (a) number and (b) total size is of landfill sites due to close in each year up until 2015, broken down by region. [85892]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 11 December 2002]: This information is not available in the form requested. Landfill are operated by private companies and the commercial decisions in relation to closure are a matter for them. Some landfills will be closed as a result of regulatory action by the Environment Agency, but predicting how many and when is not possible.

Information that is available relates to England and Wales and comes from the conditioning plan exercise conducted by the Environment Agency. The number of landfill sites that will remain operational post July 2002 and post 2004, broken down by classification (hazardous, non-hazardous and inert) and by region is as follows:

Region	Non-hazardous	Inert	Hazardous (post 2002)	Hazardous (post 2004)
Anglian	43	60	47	9
Midlands	50	74	42	4
North East	89	58	39	11
North West	49	37	27	8
South West	39	46	16	1
Southern	30	35	13	1
Thames	31	49	19	0
Wales	23	30	15	3
Total	311	329	218	37

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her estimate is of the total expenditure by her Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92458]

Alun Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 344W.

Recycling

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much recyclable waste was collected in Somerset in 2002. [93122]

Mr. Meacher: This information is not held centrally. I would advise the hon. Member to contact the Head of Waste Services and Rural Affairs at Somerset County Council on 01823 356014 for this information.

Recycling (Household Waste)

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what statutory performance standards local authorities are required to meet for the percentage of household waste sent for recycling or composting in (a) 2003–04 and (b) 2005–06; and what the performance against target for waste recycling was in (i) 2001–02 and (ii) 2002–03. [92056]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 January 2003]: Statutory performance standards for individual authorities in the relevant years are set out in a table which has been placed in the Library. It also shows performance targets for household waste recycling for 2001–02 and is published on Defra's website at http://www.defra.gov.uk/environment/waste/management/guidance/mwms/10.htm.

Recycling (Tyres)

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what representations her Department has made to the Department of Trade and Industry regarding the UK's submissions to the EU discussions and decision-making process on the packaging waste recycling targets under the new Packaging Waste Directive. [91497]

Mr. Meacher: The Department has been in close contact with the Department of Trade and Industry throughout the discussions of the draft Directive to ensure that environmental considerations are fully taken into account in arriving at an agreed Government line. Officials from DEFRA attend meetings in Brussels along with representatives from the DTI.

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what plans she has for promoting the use of old tyres as a surfacing material; [91846]

(2) what targets she has set for the recycling and retreading of tyres. [91848]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are supporting a number of end-use studies for used tyres, including the incorporation of tyre granulate in road surfaces.

The EC Landfill Directive, in banning the disposal of almost all tyres to landfill, effectively sets a 100 per cent. recovery requirement. Within that overall recovery requirement, there are no individual targets for the recycling and retreading of tyres, and the Government have no present plans for introducing such targets. Figures for 2001 show that value was recovered from over 60 per cent. of the estimated 480,000 tonnes of tyres disposed of in the UK that year. Significant additional recovery capacity has since been brought forward and is anticipated to be taken up as the landfill directive requirements bear down.

The Government in partnership with the tyre industry through the Used Tyre Working Group (UTWG) are investigating alternative disposal, recycling and recovery options for those tyres displaced from landfill with the aim of ensuring that sufficient capacity is available to handle those tyres.

Refrigerator Disposal

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what arrangements are in place to monitor compliance with her Department's guidelines on the disposal of refrigerators; and if she will make a statement. [91644]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 20 January 2003]: To monitor the disposal of refrigerators, we have asked local authorities to report on the number of fridges they have dealt with as part of the national waste monitoring questionnaire.

To monitor recycling processes, the Environment Agency have been working closely with plant operators to ensure that they meet the performance standards set out in their permit conditions.

Treatment plant have been operating in the UK since the summer, local authorities are in the process of letting contracts with operators, and the backlog of stored fridges is decreasing and expected to disappear within a year.

Sickness Absence

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many working days have been lost in her Department and its predecessors due to illness in each year since 1997–98. [92717]

Alun Michael: Records are not yet available for the number of days lost due to sickness absence in 2002, but these will be announced in due course. Sickness absence figures for previous years are published in the Cabinet Office annual report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service", copies of which are placed in House Libraries.

Figures for the most recently available years for the former Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the former DETR and are shown as an average per staff year. These are:

MAFF

Year	Days
1998	8.7
1999	9.3
2000	9
2001	7.2

DETR

Year	Days
1998	8.7
1999	8.7
2000	9.0
2001	10.5

The Department is committed to the effective management of sickness absence, and to meeting its Service Delivery Agreement of reducing sickness absence to 6.9 days for 2003.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many Sites of Special Scientific Interest there were in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire for each year since 1997. [93075]

Mr. Morley: The figures for the number of Sites of Special Scientific Interest in Shrewsbury and Atcham in each year since 1997 are:

	Number
1997	[1]25
1998	26
1999	26
2000	28
2001	28
2002	28
2003	28

[1] One more than previously reported in 2001 due to improved mapping and boundary definition.

In Shropshire as a whole:

	Number
1997	[1]103
1998	[2]107
1999	[2]108
2000	[2]110
2001	[2]110
2002	[2]110
2003	[2]110

[1] Of which two are partly in Shropshire

[2] Of which three are partly in Shropshire.

Thames Barrier

Mr. Mark Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research she intends to carry out in the next 12 months to determine whether the Thames Barrier is sufficiently able to protect London in the event of a tidal surge. [92650]

Mr. Morley: The Thames Barrier and associated defences provide a high standard of protection to London and the Thames Estuary against a combination of tidal/fluvial flood risks, the principal risk being from tidal surge events.

A generous allowance for sea level rise was built into the design for the Thames Barrier and associated defences and thus we have today a standard of 0.05 per cent. risk of flooding from tidal surge in any one year. As sea level rises, this standard of protection will reduce as planned to the design standard of 0.1 per cent. risk of flooding from tidal surge by the year 2030. This will provide a level of protection equivalent to 2 metres above the maximum level of the 1953 flood event and is the highest standard of protection in the UK.

The Environment Agency, with Defra support, is engaged in a number of studies and investigations which are reviewing the current and future needs of London's tidal defences, including the overarching planning and research project "Planning for Flood Risk management in the Thames Estuary". This is developing a flood risk management strategy for London and the Thames Estuary for the next 100 years, and includes climate change research, geomorphological and flood modelling, engineering studies and the development of management intervention and decision-testing models. This is the first year of a six year project which will provide a plan for the establishment of the next generation of tidal defences for London and the Thames Estuary post 2030.

Timber

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the local authorities which (a) have responded to the Environment Minister's letter on timber procurement from 19 September 2002, (b) have confirmed that they have policies to ensure that all timber purchased is from legal and sustainable sources and (c) do not have policies to ensure timber procurement from legal and sustainable sources; and what percentage of local authorities have taken action under (a), (b) and (c). [89078]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 8 January 2003]: My letter of 19 September 2002 asked chief executives of local authorities in England to pledge their support to a commitment to purchase timber from legal and sustainably managed sources, and to put in place the necessary procedures to ensure its effective implementation. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Elmet (Colin Burgon) on 28 July 2000, Official Report, column 947W, on how Central Government sets its policy.

Replies have been received from the following local authorities: Basingstoke and Deane, Blackpool, Bolton, Bournemouth, Braintree, Bristol, Broadland, Buckinghamshire, Bury, Calderdale, Camden, Chelmsford, Chichester, Copeland, Cornwall, Cotsworld, Derbyshire, East Cambridgeshire, East Lindsey, East Staffordshire, East Sussex, Eastbourne, Eastleigh, Epping Forest, Fareham, Gateshead, Gloucester, Gosport, Hampshire, Harlow, Harrogate, Harrow, Hart, Havant, Huntingdonshire, Kensington and Chelsea, Kent, Kerrier, Kirklees, Knowsley, Lewes, Lincolnshire, Liverpool, Malvern Hills, Manchester, Mansfield, Melton, New Forest, Newcastle-under-Lyme, Norfolk, North Devon, North Shropshire, North Somerset, Northumberland, Purbeck, Reading, Redcar and Cleveland, Richmondshire, Rochdale, Salford, Sheffield, Shepway, South Oxfordshire, South Ribble, South Somerset, South Staffordshire, St. Albans, St. Edmundsbury, Staffordshire, Stockport, Swindon, Tandridge, Tendring, Tonbridge and Malling, Tunbridge Wells, Wandsworth, Wellingborough, West Lindsey, Westminster, Wirral, Wolverhampton, Worcester, Worcestershire, Wyre Forest and Yorkshire.

The 88 authorities that replied represent 23 per cent. of the 387 written to. Of those that replied, 46 (52 per cent.) confirmed they had policies in place, and 36 (41 per cent.) were either putting or considering putting policies in place. Some of the respondents, however, did not specifically stipulate that timber should be sourced from both legal and sustainably managed sources. Six (7 per cent.) were using other strategies such as procuring through regional buying consortiums that had sustainable procurement policies in place. The information received is now over three months old and, therefore, it is possible that more of these authorities will now have policies in place.

I am in the process of writing again to request a response from those that did not reply. I will be updating them on progress being made by the Government on implementing its policy and stressing the importance we place on them declaring their position.

Waste Disposal Plants

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance she sets county councils when deciding on permission for waste disposal plants. [93123]

Mr. Meacher: Guidance on the siting of waste management facilities is provided in Planning Policy Guidance Note 10 'Planning and waste Management', which was published by the then DETR in September 1999. Applications for planning permission have to be decided in accordance with the development plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise, including taking account of national and regional policy and planning guidance.

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister what his estimate is of the total spending of his Department on entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92416]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Lewes (Norman Baker) on 28 February 2002, Official Report, columns 1444–48W.

For 2001–02, the total cost of official entertainment to my Office at 10 Downing Street and Chequers was £53,050.

Information prior to 1997–98 is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92419]

The Prime Minister: Information on the number of press releases issued by my Office is given in the table.

	Number of press notices
1997 (from 1 May)	86
1998	143
1999	138
2000	129
2001	120
2002	114

The majority of press releases issued by my Office relate to appointments. The numbers do not include my speeches or statements made to the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Cayman Islands

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with (a) the Leader of the Government of the Cayman Islands and (b) the Cayman Islands Financial Reporting Unit on money laundering. [92842]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My noble Friend Baroness Amos, Overseas Territories Minister, is in close touch with the Leader of Government Business in the Cayman Islands. They spoke most recently on 20 January.

There have been no Ministerial discussions with the Financial Reporting Unit (FRU) in the Cayman Islands.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93053]

Mr. Rammell: I regret that the detailed information requested is not available. But over the last five years disciplinary action has been taken in the following cases:

1999—Two cases of browsing inappropriate Internet sites

1999—One case of downloading pornographic material

2001—Two cases of browsing inappropriate Internet sites

2001—One case of using offensive language in an e-mail.

Convention on the Future of Europe

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government supports the Franco-German proposals for the President of the European Commission to be elected by the European Parliament; and if he will make a statement. [93621]

Mr. MacShane: The Government welcomes the French and German joint contribution to the Convention on the Future of Europe. We are studying their proposal for the President of the European Commission to be elected by the European Parliament and I am holding consultations with other EU partners on what is, at this stage, merely one of many proposals put to the convention.

Cyprus

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the role the British Government are playing in the negotiations to unify the island of Cyprus. [92958]

Mr. MacShane: We fully support the efforts of the UN Secretary-General and his special adviser on Cyprus, Mr. Alvaro de Soto. The Government believe that a crucial opportunity has now arisen for a comprehensive, just and lasting settlement in Cyprus. While it is for the two sides in Cyprus to agree on the details of a settlement, we strongly urge the parties to reach agreement, based on the UN Secretary-General's 10 December 2002 proposals, by the UN deadline of 28 February.

This would enable referenda to be held on both sides of the island and a reunited Cyprus to sign the Treaty of Accession with the EU on 16 April. Our aim remains for a reunited island to accede to the EU. We believe this is in the best interests of Cyprus, of Greece and Turkey, and of the wider European community.

This is a vital opportunity: we urge the two sides not to let it slip away.

We have taken every opportunity to convey these points to the parties. My right hon. Friends the Prime Minister and Foreign Secretary expressed these points to Turkish Ministers at the Copenhagen European Council. The Defence Secretary did likewise during his visit to Ankara on 8 January.

The UK Special Representative for Cyprus, Lord Hannay, will visit Athens and Nicosia this week, and Ankara at the beginning of February, in order to help facilitate negotiations at this crucial time.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effect Cyprus' accession to the EU will have on the status of the British sovereign bases on the island. [92993]

Mr. MacShane: I refer the hon. Member to the written ministerial statement made by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary on 10 December 2002, Official Report, column 10WS, and to the answer given in another place by my noble Friend Baroness Symons on 14 January 2003, Official Report, column 123.

The UK's policy is that, following Cyprus's accession, the SBAs should remain outside the EU, with technical adjustments to ensure the continued smooth functioning of the relationship between Cyprus and the SBAs. We expect final agreement to take the form of a protocol which will be part of the terms of Cyprus's accession. The accession treaty is due to be signed on 16 April, and a Bill introduced to enable its ratification by the UK.

Empty Homes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many empty homes his Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if he will establish an empty homes strategy within his Department; and if he will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92920]

Mr. Rammell: It is the Foreign and Commonwealth Office's policy to limit empty properties to one of four categories: (a) those that must be vacated while undergoing refurbishment or adaptation; (b) those that are surplus and in the process of disposal; (c) those we cannot occupy because of a break in diplomatic relations or a similar eventuality, but we expect to need in the future; (d) those that are vacant for short periods between officers' overseas tours.

Routine management of the FCO estate is devolved to our overseas posts and information is not held centrally. It is therefore not possible to identify these properties or their costs without disproportionate cost.

Energy Supplies (Security)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions with other (a) Departments and (b) Governments his Department has had over the last 12 months with regard to the British Foreign Policy objective of ensuring secure energy supplies. [92177]

Mr. Rammell: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has participated in regular cross-Whitehall discussions on the security of energy supply, most importantly, in the context of the Energy White Paper.

The FCO has had regular bilateral and multilateral discussions on a range of energy issues, including the security of energy supplies, with both energy producing and energy consuming countries.

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his estimate is of the total spending of his Department on entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92374]

Mr. Rammell: Comparable information is only available for the years 2000–01 to 2002–3. The following figures show the actual spend on entertainment within the Foreign and Commonwealth Office for the first two of these years, with a forecast for year three based upon expenditure to date:

2001–02	8,708,262
2002–03	8,566,545

All expenditure on entertainment within the department is carefully monitored to ensure that it is made in accordance with departmental guidance that is based on the principles set out in "Government Accounting".

Industrial Action/Illness

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many working days have been lost in his Department and its predecessors due to (a) industrial action and (b) illness in each year since 1997. [93165]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not lost any days due to industrial action since 1997. The number of days lost due to sick absence are as follows:

	Average days per officer
1997	8.9
1998	8.0
1999	n/a
2000	6.3
2001	6.6
2002	5.7

Notes:

1. Figures for 1997 to 1998 have been uplifted to account for different recording practices in different parts of the Department and its overseas posts.
2. Figures for 1999 could only be provided at disproportionate costs, the method of recording changed part way through 1999.
3. FCO figures are recorded as total days (not working days).

Kenya

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on compensation for alleged victims of repression by the British authorities in Kenya during the period of the Mau Mau rebellion and before Kenyan independence; and if he will make a statement. [90681]

Mr. Rammell: Ten different individuals and organisations have made representations to the British High Commission in Nairobi since January 1999 to ask for compensation for alleged victims of repression by the British authorities during the period of the Mau Mau rebellion. The latest approach was on 19 October 2002 on behalf of the "Mau Mau Original Trust". In addition, BHC officials received a delegation of Mau Mau veterans on 23 October 2002. Responsibility for the actions of the colonial Government of Kenya passed to the Government of Kenya at Independence in 1963.

United Nations Organisations

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what official representations have been made during the last six months to UN organisations on behalf of the United Kingdom at the UN; and what the results were of those representations. [93346]

Mr. Straw: The UK makes daily representations to UN organisations and agencies, and to other members of the UN, on a wide range of issues.

Examples of the UN's achievements in the last six months to which UK representations have contributed include:

The unanimous adoption of UN Security Council Resolution 1441 and the return of weapons inspectors to Iraq;

The successful transition of the International Police Task Force in Bosnia to the European Union Police Mission;

The adoption of UN Security Council Resolution 1445 strengthening UN action against Al-Qaida;

The adoption, by a large majority, of a new international human rights instrument to combat torture: the Optional Protocol to the Convention Against Torture;

The adoption of General Assembly Resolutions on major human rights thematic issues, including torture, rights of the child, rights of the disabled and honour crimes;

Significant agreements on international sustainable development governance at the World Summit for Sustainable Development: e.g. access to sanitation, biodiversity, chemicals management and sustainable production and consumption;

Lifting sanctions in Angola.

Visas

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many applications for a visa to visit family members in the UK were (a) received, (b) determined and (c) refused by entry clearance posts, in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002; [93093]

(2) how many applications for a visa to visit family members in the UK were (a) received, (b) determined and (c) refused by those entry clearance posts that provide monthly statistical information in each month since 1 October 2000. [93092]

Mr. Rammell: The figures for Family Visit Applications received, determined and refused since October 2000 are set out as follows.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Moore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assistance the Government has provided to the Government of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to undertake investigations into the activities of arms dealers involved in the illegal supply of weapons to (a) West Africa and (b) Iraq; [93487]

(2) what the outcomes of his meeting on 6 November 2002 with the President of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia were regarding the illegal supply of weapons to (a) West Africa and (b) Iraq; and if he will make a statement; [93488]

(3) what assistance (a) the EU and (b) the UK have provided to the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia to develop arms export legislation. [93489]

Mr. MacShane: When he met President Kostunica and Foreign Minister Svilanovic in late 2002, my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary raised our serious concerns about reports of arms sales from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia (FRY) to Iraq and Liberia, in breach of UN sanctions. He urged them to ensure a thorough investigation, leading to prosecutions of those responsible. Since then Mr. Cekovic, Head of Jugoimport, and Mr. Djokic, Assistant Minister for Defence, have been sacked, the Jugoimport office in Baghdad closed and a commission established to investigate Jugoimport's activities. The FRY has also cancelled a bilateral agreement with Iraq and suspended bilateral military industrial agreements with all states that are subject to UN sanctions. Svilanovic has promised further investigation and possible prosecutions. The United Kingdom is considering the provision of technical assistance to the FRY to ensure effective regulation of arms exports. On 10 December UK experts visited Belgrade to conduct a preliminary assessment; a follow-up visit will take place soon. The EU provides support to the FRY's reform process, including improving the democratic control of the armed forces, from its Common Foreign and Security Policy budget.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list his meetings in the last 12 months with representatives of Zimbabwean (a) Government, (b) opposition, (c) churches, (d) humanitarian organisations, (e) sports organisations and (f) commercial interests. [91260]

Mr. Rammell: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the former Zimbabwean Minister of Finance, Dr. Simba Makoni, on 6 February 2002, who was transiting the UK on his return to Zimbabwe from the World Economic Summit in New York.

FCO officials are regularly in contact with a range of Zimbabweans, including from all the groups specified.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he collates on the extent of Government inspired murder and torture in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement. [91261]

Mr. Rammell: We monitor closely the situation in Zimbabwe and regularly receive detailed information on human rights violations there from a number of sources, including human rights organisations and other NGOs. The UK Government, along with other members of the international community, has consistently condemned the Government of Zimbabwe for its appalling record on human rights and have called on it to respect its obligations under international human rights conventions. Along with our EU partners, the UK Government will continue to focus international attention on human rights abuses in Zimbabwe.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the steps taken by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the Commonwealth troika to end misgovernment and reintroduce democracy and the rule of law in Zimbabwe. [91262]

Mr. Rammell: The UK Government have taken a number of measures in response to the situation in Zimbabwe including; an outright rejection of the conduct and outcome of the Presidential election in March 2002; a complete embargo on arms sales since May 2000; a suspension of non-humanitarian aid and the withdrawal of our military training team. Working with our EU partners, we have also imposed targeted sanctions, a travel ban and assets freeze, on 79 members of the Mugabe regime.

The Commonwealth suspended Zimbabwe from its Councils in March 2002. The Commonwealth Troika is pressing for good governance and the rule of law to be restored in Zimbabwe. It last met in Abuja on 23 September 2002. It deferred a decision on further Commonwealth measures, but stated that it would stick to its task over the next six months "at which point further measures might need to be considered". It is due to meet again in March.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when in the last 12 months representatives of Her Majesty's Government have visited each province of Zimbabwe. [91266]

Mr. Rammell: Officials based at the High Commission in Harare regularly visit provinces throughout Zimbabwe in the course of their duties. London based officials have also visited provinces in Zimbabwe in the last twelve months. It would entail disproportionate cost to list the details. No Government Minister has visited Zimbabwe in the last twelve months.

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what resolutions have been tabled on behalf of the United Kingdom at the UN concerning the application of more international pressure on Mr. Robert Mugabe and his government. [93347]

Mr. Straw: As a UK initiative, EU member states tabled a draft resolution on Zimbabwe at the 58th session of the UN Commission on Human Rights in Geneva in March/April 2002. Regrettably, the African Group blocked discussion. Despite this, the UK's attempt to secure a resolution served to highlight the Zimbabwe Government's appalling human rights record.

We welcome the UN Secretary General's recent statement that: "At the heart of the problem is the crisis in Zimbabwe—a country which used to be the region's breadbasket, but is now wracked by hunger and HIV/AIDS. This tragic situation is caused partly by forces of nature, and partly by mismanagement".

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Iraq

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what evaluation she has made of the impact of suspension of the UN Oil for Food programme on civilians' food needs in Iraq. [92888]

Clare Short: Suspension of the UN Oil for Food Programme could have an extremely serious impact on civilians' food needs in Iraq. My Department is considering a range of eventualities in Iraq and is in regular discussion about them with other governments and UN agencies.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the ability of the UN Oil for Food programme to continue in the event of military action in Iraq. [92889]

Clare Short: I am concerned about the ability if the UN Oil for Food programme to continue in the event of military action in Iraq. It is important for all parties to ensure that humanitarian provision for the people of Iraq is given priority under all eventualities.

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what representations she has made to the US Government regarding the protection of food supplies in the event of military intervention in Iraq. [92890]

Clare Short: My Department is in regular contact with the US Government on contingency preparedness planning for a range of eventualities in Iraq.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the Defence Secretary regarding co-ordination of the military and humanitarian strategy in Iraq in the event of war. [92869]

Clare Short: My Department consults regularly with the Ministry of Defence on a variety of issues at official and ministerial level. This includes consideration of a range of eventualities in Iraq.

Afghanistan

Mr. Robert Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent reports she has received on female education in Afghanistan; what assessment her Department has made of the level of female education in Afghanistan; and if she will make a statement. [92759]

Clare Short: During my visit to Afghanistan in late October I visited a school in Kabul, this was one of many that have reopened across Afghanistan. In the past year 3 million children have returned to school and girls now make up 30 per cent. of school children. Estimates are that 7,000 schools for 4.5 million children will re-open on 21 March for the new year. Women are also seeking education to make up for a time when they were unable to study. Accurate figures are not available, but estimates are that literacy rates for women over 15 are less than 25 per cent. It remains difficult for women and girls to gain education in some parts of Afghanistan but we are supporting the fghan Government in assisting all those who wish to, to access education.

Dr. Jenny Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the outcome was of the December meeting of donors in Oslo to discuss aid to Afghanistan; and if she will make a statement. [92853]

Clare Short: The Afghanistan Support Group (ASG) in December brought together the Afghan Government, the United Nations and donors to discuss progress already made in Afghanistan and the next steps in the reconstruction process. A key element of the ASG was the launch of the 2003 UN appeal for the Transitional Assistance Programme forAfghanistan. Finance Minister Ashraf Ghani also made a brief presentation on the budget for the coming year. Few donors were in a position to make specific pledges 2003 but most were able to confirm that they expected to provide a similar level of funding as they had provided for 2002; around $1 .Sbillion.

It was also agreed by all present that this would be the final ASG. A new Development Forum, designed to ensure greater Afghan leadership of the reconstruction effort will supersede it. The new forum will have 12 Consultative Groups within its structure where selected donors can work with government on specific sectors. Until such time as the first Development Forum in March, the Japanese agreed to lead a transitional humanitarian group on humanitarian issues in Afghanistan.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent progress has been made towards the reconstruction of Afghanistan. [93012]

Clare Short: A great deal has been achieved since January 2002, when we pledged £200 million to the reconstruction of Afghanistan at the Tokyo conference. A broad-based Transitional Administration has been elected. A new currency has been issued. 3 million children have returned to school, and polio has almost been eradicated.

The 2002 harvest saw grain production rise by 80 per cent. compared to 2001. The power station and airport in Kabul are being refurbished. The rebuilding of the roads system has begun, and work is continuing on customs reform and the drafting of a new constitution.

However, much remains to be done. One of the most pressing issues is to improve security for those living outside Kabul, and to extend the authority of the elected government beyond the capital. This is of fundamental importance to both the reconstruction effort, and in order to ensure human rights are respected. In December President Karzai issued a decree setting out plans for a multi-ethnic national army, and in the last month the first Provincial Reconstruction Team was deployed in Gardez province, under US leadership. First reports indicate that the security situation has improved as a result. The UK is actively considering leading a PRT in the future.

An important development has been the signing by Afghanistan's neighbours of Good Neighbourly Relations declaration by Afghanistan's neighbours. The declaration, essentially an agreement to maintain constructive relations and not to seek influence by exploiting ethnic rivalries, was signed by all Afghanistan's immediate neighbours in December 2002.

Work on humanitarian relief is also continuing. We contributed £11 million to the UN's Winterisation programme to help ensure that vulnerable communities had adequate shelter and food over the winter, and a further £2 million to the UN snow-clearing operation to ensure that aid reaches remote communities. Early indications are that this programme is going well, helped by a relatively mild winter. DFID will shortly be conducting a humanitarian assessment mission to formulate our strategy for the coming year.

The Development Forum meeting in Kabul in March will be important in setting the priorities for reconstruction and international assistance over the next year.

Alternative Crop Projects

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her EU counterparts regarding damage to alternative crop projects funded by EU, following fumigation with pesticides by United States helicopters. [92630]

Clare Short: I have held discussions with my European Union colleagues how to reduce production of illegal narcotics in developing countries by providing viable alternative livelihood opportunities for producing farmers. I have not specifically discussed damage to European Commission-funded alternative crop projects from fumigation with pesticides, or any other sources

Colombia

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress has been made with the EU contribution to Plan Colombia. [92631]

Clare Short: The EU supports the efforts of the Colombian Government to put an end to the violence affecting the country. However, the EU does not contribute to Plan Colombia because it has reservations about some aspects of the plan and it does not support with aid any initiative with a military dimension.

In October 2000 the EU announced an aid package of euros 140 million towards the support of ongoing Colombian activities in the search for peace, targeting the roots and causes of the conflict and providing humanitarian assistance to the victims of the conflict.

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the estimate is of the total spending of her Department in all forms of entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if she will make a statement. [92404]

Clare Short: The following table shows recorded DFID spending from the running cost budget on entertainment for the years in question, to the nearest £000.

Year	£
1994–95	7,000
1995–96	9,000
1996–97	10,000
1997–98	24,000
1998–99	43,000
1999–2000	62,000
2000–01	48,000
2001–02	55,000
2002–03[1]	74,000

[1] Estimated

For the earlier years some expenditure may not have been separately recorded.

All expenditure on official entertainment is made in accordance with published departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in Government Accounting.

Ethiopia

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to secure resources to assist rural investment in Ethiopia and prevent future food crises. [91682]

Clare Short: One of the priorities for our assistance programme in Ethiopia is to help address the roots of food insecurity. This means looking at long-term approaches to reducing poverty and vulnerability—such as promoting broad-based economic growth, market development and rural roads. We are working with other bilateral and multilateral donors to achieve this whilst continuing to respond to short-term humanitarian demands.

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department is taking to secure international commitment to increased interim aid for Ethiopia. [91683]

Clare Short: We are committed to long-term partnership with Ethiopia, which includes support to addressing the underlying causes of food insecurity. In addition, we continue to play our part in providing humanitarian assistance, including food aid when necessary. We plan to substantially increase our development budget for Ethiopia over the next three years. Whilst doing this, we are in agreement with the Government of Ethiopia that donors should harmonise their efforts to increase the efficiency and effectiveness of development assistance.

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the humanitarian situation in Ethiopia. [92512]

Clare Short: The humanitarian situation in Ethiopia is a matter of great concern. However, we consider that the Government of Ethiopia, donors and NGOs are coordinating their response well to ensure that this does not become a crisis.

As always we remain committed to playing our part in the international response. During 2002 we committed £32.3 million to food and non-food humanitarian assistance. This included £15 million for food aid to be distributed by the World Food Programme in late January and February 2003.

Mrs. Caroline Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department intends to move to direct budget support for Ethiopia. [92860]

Clare Short: During my visit to Ethiopia last week, along with the Ethiopian Finance Minister, I signed a Memorandum of Understanding covering the long-term development partnership between the UK and Government of Ethiopia to tackle poverty. The Memorandum indicates that we plan to provide at least 60 million of direct budget support over the next three years. We expect to disburse the first 10 million of this within the next month.

Mrs. Caroline Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much of her Department's budget for Ethiopia will be disbursed by (a) direct budget support and (b) NGOs (i) as a proportion of her Department's assistance to Ethiopia and (ii) by value. [92861]

Clare Short: We currently expect development programme spending in Ethiopia, where the total will be split approximately two-thirds direct budget support and one-third technical assistance. We will continue to do some work with civil society and local and international NGOs where this can help deliver our poverty reduction objectives.

On current plans we hope to commit at least 60 million on direct budget support and 30 million on technical cooperation over the next three years. In addition to the development programme spending a proportion of our humanitarian assistance will also continue to be provided through NGOs.

External Consultants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much (a) her Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if she will make a statement. [92252]

Clare Short: DFID expenditure on consultancies from the development programme since 1995–96 is given in the table:

Year	£ million
1995–96	143
1996–97	161
1997–98	204
1998–99	199
1999–2000	198
2000–01	209
2001–02	[1]198

[1] Expenditure is understated due to the move to Resource Accounting. DFID issued contracts valued at £302 million.

The figures for agencies/Non Departmental Public bodies are not held centrally and it would require disproportionate cost to obtain them.

Figures for planned expenditure on external consultancy are not available. DFID has issued contracts from 1 April 2002 to date, valued at £222 million.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much money has been lost by her Department and its agencies and non-departmental public bodies through (a) fraud and (b) theft in each year since 1996–97. [92481]

Clare Short: The estimated cost to DFID's budget of theft and fraud in the period 1April 1996 to 31 March 2002 is some £367,000 of which £207,000 can be attributed to contractor fraud. Of the remaining sum, £129,000 relates to the theft of assets and misappropriation of cash, which in line with Treasury guidance has been classified as involving departmental staff either directly or through collusion. Details of suspected or proven fraud are provided to the Treasury on an annual basis. The annual report that the Treasury prepares on fraud is deposited in the Libraries of both Houses.

Health and Safety

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development whether her Department and its agencies have met the commitment arising from Action Point 13 of the June 2000 Strategy statement on revitalising health and safety to summarise health and safety performance and plans in annual reports from the year 2000–01 onwards. [89487]

Clare Short: My Department will meet the commitment in its forthcoming Departmental Annual Report covering performance in the calendar year 2002. We have no agencies.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which senior officials within her Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised. [89488]

Clare Short: My Department's Health and Safety Policy (which is agreed with the trade unions and published in its Staff Handbook, on its Departmental Intranet site and elsewhere) contains the following:

> "The Permanent Secretary recognises and accepts responsibility for providing a safe and healthy workplace and working environment for all staff and will take all practicable steps to meet that responsibility."

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what information she has collated on the application to her Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the revitalising health and safety strategy statement; and if she will make a statement. [89489]

Clare Short: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to her by the Minister for Work on 20 January, Official Report, columns 85–86W. Within my Department the requirements of the checklist will be reflected in any future revision of our Health and Safety Policy and structured health and safety management systems.

Humanitarian Contingency Planning

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with her colleagues in (a) the US, (b) the EU and (c) the UN, regarding humanitarian contingency planning for humanitarian aid to Iraq in the event of war with Iraq. [92868]

Clare Short: My Department has regular discussions with the US, EU partners and the UN on general contingency preparedness planning in a number of countries. In the case of Iraq, planning is underway for a range of eventualities.

Kenya

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the European Commission on the Westlands-St. Austin Road Project in Kenya; and if she will make a statement. [92219]

Clare Short: None. The construction of the road referred to took place from 1990 to 1993. Officials from the then Overseas Development Administration were aware of various complaints from people living in communities (not between Westlands and St. Austin, but further north on the same road) and discussed these with European Commission officials. The EC Ombudsman subsequently investigated and concluded that there had been no mal-administration on the part of the EC.

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the timetable is for reviewing UK bilateral aid to Kenya. [93405]

Clare Short: I visited Kenya last week and had discussions with Kenyan Ministers on how Britain could best help the new Government deliver quickly on its election promises to stamp out corruption, revive the economy and improve public services. We are already reviewing our bilateral programme to ensure that we respond effectively and flexibly to the needs of the new Government. I am also pressing the international financial institutions and the European Commission to help the new Government fill the large hole in the public finances which they have inherited.

Malawi

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when she plans to support further debt relief to Malawi. [93023]

Clare Short: Malawi remains off track with its economic and financial reform programme. An IMF mission which left Lilongwe on 21 January was still unable to give a positive endorsement to the Government's overall performance.

My Department with the EC and Norway will conduct a separate assessment next month. Meanwhile, in collaboration with other development partners, DFID is continuing a dialogue with the Government of Malawi on measures necessary for resumption of budget support and debt relief.

Mauritania

Mr. Robert Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of (a) the level of malnutrition and (b) the number of deaths due to malnutrition in the last year in Mauritania. [92760]

Clare Short: My Department has not carried out an independent assessment of the level of malnutrition or the number of deaths due to malnutrition in the last year in Mauritania. A survey carried out by the NGO World Vision in November 2002 found acute malnutrition rates amongst children of between 10–15 per cent. in some parts of the country.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of food shortages in Mauritania; and if she will make a statement. [92761]

Clare Short: The World Food Programme (WFP) estimate that there are 750,000 people affected by food shortages. Reports by NGOs, such as Oxfam and World Vision, support this analysis. We are monitoring the situation closely and are providing assistance through contributions to WFP and Oxfam.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90602]

Clare Short: The department's current minimum wage under our three year pay agreement is £5.25 per hour based on a 37 hour week. There would be no financial impact of increasing the minimum wage on the cost of departmental salaries until £5.30 per hour, when the additional cost in the next financial year would be £287 a year and would apply to 11 employees in Scotland only.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her estimate is of the total expenditure by her Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92478]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Multilateral Debt

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her policy is on 100 per cent. cancellation of low-income country multilateral debts. [92985]

Clare Short: While it is essential to deal with the problem of unsustainable debt in the poorest countries as part of our efforts to assist in eradicating poverty, complete cancellation of debt is not required; nor is it the most effective means of delivering aid resources to reduce poverty. We do not support the proposal for 100 per cent. cancellation of IMF and World bank loans, which is neither desirable nor equitable. For these institutions to provide 100 per cent. relief would risk skewing limited development resources away from other very poor countries, which have handled their debt well. Countries need to borrow—initially only on very concessional terms—to finance their poverty reduction strategies. In this way, they can re-establish their creditworthiness, which will also help them attract private investment and accelerate economic growth and poverty reduction.

Poverty and Wildlife Study

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to implement her Department's study on Poverty and Wildlife commissioned from Joanna Elliott. [92610]

Clare Short: The implications of the findings of the Wildlife and Poverty Study will be discussed in DFID and with DEFRA and FCO. We also hope that it will encourage other government and non-government organisations to prioritise the integration of the needs and voices of the poor into wildlife-related strategies.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much (a) her Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by her Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92251]

Clare Short: Our expenditure on publicity, which forms part of our effort to raise awareness and understanding of international development issues in the UK, has been as follows:

Year	£
1995–96	568,755
1996–97	579,916
1996–98	399,755
1998–99	674,531
1999–2000	879,354
2001–01	1,484,281
2001–02	1,286,054
2002–03	[1]1,300,000

[1] Estimated outturn

We do not hold a separate advertising budget. The majority of advertising relates to recruitment advertising in newspapers and journals. Expenditure for the last three calendar years was as follows:

Year	£
2000	751,972
2001	938,297
2002	1,010,930

Expenditure figures for the preceding years are not available.

Refugees (Iraq)

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with (a) Jordan, (b) Syria, (c) Turkey, (d) Iran, (e) Kuwait and (f) Saudi Arabia regarding their policy towards accepting refugees from Iraq. [92870]

Clare Short: None.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress is being made on education projects in Southern Sudan; and if she will make a statement. [92638]

Clare Short: This financial year we have committed £220,000 to support scholarships programmes in Sudan, particularly for women, and £300,000 to UNICEF for schools rehabilitation and teacher training in the Nuba Mountains. We are also planning a significant intervention in the education sector in government and SPLM/A controlled conflict affected areas.

Western Sahara

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office regarding food security in Western Sahara. [92639]

Clare Short: I have not had any specific discussions with Ministers in the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on food security in Western Sahara.

DFID continues to provide support to the Saharawi refugees through its contributions to the European Community Humanitarian Office (ECHO) and the office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR).

Western Sahel

Mr. Robert Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much emergency aid her Department is giving to the World Food Programme's Emergency Operation Appeal for the Western Sahel; and if she will make a statement. [92802]

Clare Short: We have agreed to provide £1,000,000 for the World Food Programme's Emergency Operation Appeal for the Western Sahel.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Civil Servants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, how many civil servants have been employed by (a) her Department and (b) each of its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if she will make a statement. [92367]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office, (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 333W.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Annual Report

Norman Lamb: To ask the President of the Council how much producing the Privy Council Department's latest Annual Report cost; how many copies were printed; how many copies of it were sold at its cover price; to whom copies of the report have been provided free of charge; and how many copies were provided free of charge. [90888]

Mr. Robin Cook: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office on Wednesday 22 January, Official Report, column 333W.

As in previous years, my Department's latest Annual Report is published in the same document as the Cabinet Office's.

HOUSE OF COMMONS COMMISSION

Congestion Charge

Sir Brian Mawhinney: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission if he will arrange for a payment point to be set up in the precinct of the House to enable hon. Members and others to pay the Congestion Charge. [93401]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: Over recent months House officials have sought to make arrangements with Transport for London for a Congestion Charge payment point to be installed at a convenient location in the Palace of Westminster, and they will continue to press TFL for early action.

Meanwhile, hon. Members may wish to know that there is a payment machine at the entrance to the Abingdon Green car park, and that other methods of payment include:

Online at www.cclondon.com;

By telephone on 0845 900 1234;

By mobile phone text message, having registered online or by telephone;

At a range of petrol stations and retail outlets;

E-mail

Mr. Tyler: To ask the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire, representing the House of Commons Commission, what the estimated cost is of the system introduced to block the delivery of e-mails to members containing profanities or other language considered objectionable; what criteria are being used for this editorial system and by whom; how many e-mails have been blocked; and if he will make a statement. [93384]

Sir Archy Kirkwood: PCD is using existing software to block inappropriate e-mails and therefore the new system has minimal cost. In the first week the system blocked 908 inappropriate e-mails sent to parliamentary e-mail addresses. The system filters incoming e-mails from non-parliamentary addresses and will not affect internal communications, outgoing e-mails or e-mails received from remote workers attached to the parliamentary data and video network (PDVN) via Citrix. The sender of any e-mail that is blocked will be notified and invited to contact the intended recipient to arrange for the blocked e-mail to be unblocked. This will prevent any genuine e-mail from being lost.

PCD recognises that on occasions, constituents might use strong language: for example, if they are writing about a constituency issue on which they have firm views, or of which they have had a bad direct experience. Incoming e-mails that contain only a few mild expletives will be unaffected. Only those e-mails which contain a high proportion of the most offensive obscenities are blocked automatically.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Further Education

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when the review of Further Education in Northern Ireland will be published; and what plans he has to change the number of Further Education (a) colleges and (b) campuses in Northern Ireland. [93277]

Jane Kennedy: A consultation paper oh the role of the statutory FE sector, was published on 5 November 2002. The consultation period closed on 10 January 2003 and responses are being considered. Concurrently, evidence is being gathered on the range of issues covered by the review. The publication date for any conclusions or proposals is not yet known. It is too early, therefore, to comment on any particular matter.

Hub Arts Centre

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much Laganside Corporation proposes to offer as its contribution to the overall cost of the Hub Arts Centre. [92930]

Mr. Browne: Plans are not sufficiently developed at this stage to give a precise answer to this question. An economic appraisal is currently being carried out by the Arts Council for Northern Ireland to determine the scale and usage of the proposed building subject to its board approval. Laganside Corporation plans to contribute land upon which to site the Arts Centre and the value of this land will be determined further into the project.

Wind Farms

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to consult (a) the Northern Ireland Tourist Board and (b) the RSPB on future wind farm applications in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [92274]

Angela Smith: All applications for wind farm developments are considered against prevailing planning policies, taking account of representations received following normal advertising and consultation procedures.

The main policy guidance in this area is contained in "A Planning Strategy for Rural Northern Ireland". This states that all proposals for wind farms will be assessed in respect of their implications for the visual, ecological and historic landscapes; the implications for agriculture; and the safety and amenity of local residents. It also makes it clear that permission will not be granted for wind turbine development in any location where it would have a seriously detrimental impact on the amenity of an Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty or on any area designated for its conservation, scientific, archaeological or historic interest.

Consultation on wind farm proposals will normally include the Environmental Health Department of the relevant local Council, the Department of the Environment's Environment and Heritage Service, the Department for Regional Development's Roads and Water Services, the Ministry of Defence, and the Civil Aviation Authority.

In addition, under the Planning (Environmental Impact Assessment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1999, the Department may require an Environmental Statement where a proposal is located in a 'sensitive area' and/or involves the installation of more than two turbines, or the hub height of any turbine or height of any other structure exceeds 15 metres. This Statement will provide the Department with detailed information about the impact that a proposal may have on the environment.

It is not normal procedure to consult the Northern Ireland Tourist Board on planning applications that, although in scenic areas, do not have a direct impact on tourism, and thus do not fall within the statutory remit of the Board. It is not, therefore, the practice of the Planning Service to consult the NITB automatically in relation to planning applications for wind farms and there are no plans to introduce such a practice.

The English Planning Policy Guidance Note (PPG 22) 'Renewable Energy' states that, apart from the movement of the blades, the development of a wind farm warrants no different approach in terms of ecological considerations from any other development, and evidence suggests that the risk of collision between moving turbine blades and birds is minimal both for migrating birds and for local habitats.

Applications for wind farms will sometimes be made in, or close to, areas designated as of ecological importance, and such applications will be rigorously examined under the policies and guidance contained in Planning Policy Statement 2, 'Planning and Nature Conservation'. However, in terms of any potential direct impact of a wind farm proposal on the integrity of sites designated as of wildlife importance, including those designated for the conservation of birds, the Planning Service's main source of advice and guidance will remain the Department's Environment and Heritage Service and there are no plans to introduce a practice of consulting the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds on wind farm applications.

Landfill Directive

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what criteria a decision on the implementation of the EC Directive 1999/31 on the landfill of waste will be based. [92278]

Angela Smith: The Landfill Directive contains two separate components—targets for reducing the amount of biodegradable municipal waste (BMW) going to landfill and the introduction of detailed regulatory requirements in relation to the design, operation and aftercare of sites.

The decision on how the BMW targets will be achieved in NI will be based on the outcome of a consultation exercise which has just ended. An analysis of responses is underway to determine the preferred option for NI.

The implementation of the regulatory requirements of the Directive will be based on the detailed prescriptive criteria already contained in the Directive.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the estimated cost is of implementing EC Directive 1999/31 on the landfill of waste in Northern Ireland; how much of this cost will be borne by district councils; and if he will make a statement. [92275]

Angela Smith: The Landfill Directive contains two separate components—targets for reducing the amount of biodegradable municipal waste (BMW) going to landfill and the introduction of detailed regulatory requirements in relation to the design, operation and aftercare of sites.

A consultation paper, published in October 2002, set out four options for achieving the BMW targets. The paper was accompanied by a partial regulatory impact assessment (RIA) which gave indicative costs relating to four options for dealing with the waste which has to be diverted from landfill. The consultation exercise has just ended and an analysis of responses is underway to determine the preferred option for NI. Actual costs will not be known until a full regulatory impact assessment has been undertaken on the preferred option.

The estimated cost of implementing the regulatory requirements of the Directive will not be known until a RIA has been undertaken. This is planned for later this year.

David Burnside: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what the locations are of wind farm applications seeking planning approval in Northern Ireland; and what stage the current applications have reached. [92272]

Angela Smith: Planning Service is currently dealing with six planning applications for wind farms; these applications and their current status are as follows:

(i) Planning application J/2001/0291/F for a wind farm for Bin Mountain, in the district of Strabane, in the townlands of Bolaght, Lettercarn, Binnawooda, Drummahon, Castlecraig, Curraghmacall, Ally, Meenabog and Meenacloy, and Drumquin, Co. Tyrone. This application was presented to Strabane district council on 26 February 2002 with a recommendation to refuse. The reasons for refusal were that the proposal would:

be significantly detrimental to the visual amenity and character of the area; have an adverse effect on nature conservation interests; have an adverse effect on Lough Lee from construction activity and contamination.

The application was deferred by the council to allow a site meeting to take place. This meeting took place on 31 May 2002, and as a result the applicant indicated verbally that he will withdraw the application.

(ii) Planning application K/2001/048/F for a wind farm in the district of Omagh, in the townlands of Lough Hill, Castlecraig, Curraghmacall and Drummahon, Co. Tyrone. The access would be from the Meenacloy Road via an existing forestry road through the townlands of Meenacloy, Meenabog, Ally and Sloughan, and Drumquin, Co. Tyrone. Planning Service is awaiting further consultation responses and the proposal is still under consideration by the Department.

(iii) Planning application L/2001/1346/F for a wind farm in the district of Fermanagh, in the townlands of Garrane, Mullaghfad, Corraleek and Corragunt, and Rosslea, Co. Fermanagh. Planning Service is awaiting further consultation responses and the proposal is still under consideration by the Department.

(iv) Planning application L/2001/1514/F for a wind farm in the district of Fermanagh, in the townlands of Callagheen and Garrison, Co. Fermanagh. This proposal was presented to Fermanagh district council on 16 January 2003 with a recommendation to refuse. The reasons for the refusal were that the proposal would:

be detrimental to the visual amenity and character of the proposed area of outstanding natural beauty; have an adverse impact on nature conservation.

The council deferred the application to allow for an office meeting, the date of which is to be arranged.

(v) Planning application L/2002/1042/F for a wind farm in the district of Fermanagh, in the townlands of Glenarn, Stranahone and Stranadarriff, Tappaghan Mountain and Lack, Co. Fermanagh. Planning Service is awaiting further consultation responses and the proposal is still under consideration by the Department.

(vi) Planning application L/2002/1183/F for a wind farm in the district of Fermanagh, in the townlands of Caricknabrattoge, Carrowmaculla, Eshmeen and Tully, and Lisnaskea, Co. Fermanagh. Planning Service is awaiting further consultation responses and the proposal is still under consideration by the Department.

Planning Policy

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he will consult the public on the creation of a new offence of commencing development without the benefit of planning permission. [92782]

Angela Smith: The Government do not consider that a sufficient case has yet been made for the creation of a new criminal offence in Northern Ireland of commencing development without planning permission. To enable me to recommend the creation of a new offence, I would need to demonstrate:

that the impact of unauthorised development upon the planning system is so serious in Northern Ireland as to warrant a departure from policy elsewhere in the UK; that there is factual evidence to support this;

that all the options for addressing the problem have been considered and this is the best option; and, that a regulatory impact assessment of the potential options has been made and taken into account in recommending the best option.

I am not in a position to make such a case without further work, and this needs to be done before a consultation paper can be produced that will generate an informed public debate. I want to think about the issue very carefully, before deciding on the way forward.

Ulster Covenants

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Ulster Covenant records will be available online by March 2003; and if he will make a statement. [92936]

Angela Smith: The Ulster Covenant records are due to be available online by 28 March 2003.

US-Ireland Alliance

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been provided from Government funds to the US-Ireland Alliance in each of the last three years; whether he has made representations to the US Government about the charitable status of the US-Ireland Alliance; whether a representative of the Unionist community in Northern Ireland sits on the honorary board of the US-Ireland Alliance; and what plans he has to review funding for the US-Ireland Alliance. [92304]

Jane Kennedy: The Department for Employment and Learning has committed financial support to the Mitchell Scholarship Programme, which is managed by the US-Ireland Alliance, for the period 2000–05; contributing £22,619 in the financial year 2000–01, £24,717 in 2001–02 and £23,900 in 2002–03. No representations have been made to the US Government on the charitable status of the US-Ireland Alliance. The Department is unaware of any representative membership of the honorary board from the Unionist community in Northern Ireland. The Department plans to review funding for the Mitchell Scholarship Programme in 2005.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

ADSL

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of UK households and businesses are able to receive ADSL telecommunication services in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Scotland. [92724]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 23 January 2003]: Oftel statistics for 1 November 2002, available at www.oftel.gov.uk, show that 63 per cent. of UK households and businesses were able to receive ADSL services at that date. Research undertaken by Analysis for the Government shows that at the end of August 2002, 39 per cent. of households in Scotland were able to receive ADSL services. This rises to 53 per cent. of households in Scotland counting ADSL and cable modem together.

Broadband

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what help will be given to rural communities to enable them to access broadband. [93127]

Mr. Timms: In November 2002, the Government launched the UK Broadband Task Force, which has the aim of stimulating the take-up and roll-out of broadband across the UK, particularly in rural and remote areas. The Task Force's regional broadband coordinators, located in each of the English regions and the Devolved Administrations, will seek to address this issue in their particular regions or nations.

Also at a regional level, the Government have provided the Regional Development Agencies and the Devolved Administrations with the £30 million UK Broadband Fund, which was set up to help develop innovative schemes to extend broadband roll-out. Projects from this Fund are on-going and being monitored to identify examples of best practice that can be shared around the country.

In addition, the Government have pledged £1 billion over 2003–06 towards broadband connectivity in the public sector. It is anticipated that this will lead to broadband networks being extended more widely. The aggregation of public sector demand, which is a main focus of the UK Broadband Task Force, will help accelerate this roll-out and ensure its efficiency.

Competitiveness White Paper

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many commitments made by her Department in the 1998 Competitiveness White Paper have been met; and if she will make a statement. [91652]

Ms Hewitt: Of the 77 commitments made in the 1998 White Paper, "Our Competitive Future—Building the Knowledge Driven Economy" (Cm 4176), 70 have been fully achieved. The delivery dates of six commitments have not yet been reached.

Full details of progress against targets can be found in the White Paper Implementation Plan, published on the DTI website at: www.dti.gov.uk/comp/impl.html

Fossil Fuel

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the existing surplus of fossil fuel levy funds in Scotland is. [91741]

Mr. Wilson: £10.1 million. This is held by the Collector and invested in accordance with the regulations.

Renewable Energy

John Thurso: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what she expects the proceeds to be of the auction of the renewable obligation certificates. [91742]

Mr. Wilson: Future income from auctions of Renewable Obligation Certificates (ROCs) will depend on the output of renewable energy auctioned and the market value of ROCs.

In England and Wales an auction was held on 12 August and income from the electricity, LECs and ROCs will be paid between October 2002 and March 2003. The auction related to output during this period from 486MW capacity of renewable energy.

In Scotland, the proceeds of the first auction of ROCs were just under 4.4 million. The second auction has just been held on 16 January at which the average price for ROCs was £47.46 per ROC. A total of 64,337 ROCs were successfully auctioned.

Empty Homes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many empty homes her Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if she will establish an empty homes strategy within her Department; and if she will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92918]

Ms Hewitt: The answer, in both cases, is none.

Ethical Banking

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contracts have been concluded as a result of the Government's commitment to support ethical banking. [89940]

Ms Hewitt: The Government believe it is important for consumers to have choice in financial products, including the availability of 'ethical' products. However, it would not be appropriate for the Government to exclusively support the development of one specific group of financial providers. It is for individual consumers to decide the attributes they most value from their financial services and for financial services firms to be transparent about their use of funds and investments.

Export Control Act

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects to introduce secondary legislation under the Export Control Act 2002. [93032]

Nigel Griffiths: It is expected that the Act and the secondary legislation to be made under it will enter into force in the second half of 2003, following the appropriate period of consultation.

Fraud

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the operating cost in each year since 1997 was of her Department's (a) ORACLE RAB and (b) anti-fraud control system; and if she will make a statement. [88827]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 14 January 2003]: The information is as follows:

(a) The ORACLE RAB system became operational in December 1998. Operating costs for the system for the financial years in question were as follows:

	£ million
1997–98	0.00
1998–99	1.04
1999–2000	2.12
2000–01	2.53
2001–02	2.62

(b) The Department has anti-fraud control built into all its financial systems, and it is therefore not possible to quantify the overall operating cost.

General Agreement on Trade in Services

John McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the impact of the General Agreement on Trade in Services upon (a) teaching and research and (b) the knowledge economy. [88944]

Nigel Griffiths: We have just completed a public consultation on the General Agreement on Trade in Services (GATS), and are now analysing the responses received. GATS might only have an impact upon teaching, research and the knowledge economy if we were minded to meet liberalisation requests made to us by our trading partners in relevant areas. The UK negotiates in the WTO as part of the European Community. We have yet to see the Commission's draft proposals on which requests they suggest the EC might meet in the offer to be tabled in the WTO by the end of March 2003. Their proposals will be discussed with the Department for Education and Skills and the Devolved Administrations, as part of our internal assessment process.

Huntingdon Life Sciences

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the estimated cost is of providing (a) banking; and (b) insurance facilities to Huntingdon life sciences. [91536]

Ms Hewitt: Huntingdon Life Sciences is reimbursing to the DTI the full cost of facilitating insurance and of the facilitation of banking services. DTI has recognised possible contingent liabilities consequent on the provision of insurance services.

Industrial Action

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) trades unions and (b) individuals have been (i) charged with offences resulting from industrial action and (ii) convicted of offences resulting from industrial action in each year since 1973. [92763]

Alan Johnson: Although there have been a number of charges and convictions resulting from offences committed in the course of industrial action, the Government do not collect statistics relating to the circumstances in which offences took place.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with (a) representatives of British industry and (b) trades union representatives concerning (i) the number of days lost to industrial disputes over the last 12 months and (ii) the state of the manufacturing industry in the UK. [92765]

Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly attend meetings with representatives of British industry and trade unions at which employment relations and manufacturing issues are discussed.

Information Society Initiative Centres

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many ISI centres are open; if she will list their locations; and if she will make a statement. [88809]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 7 January 2003]: ISI Centres were established as part of the Information Society Initiative, which was re-branded as UK online for business in 2000. The centres themselves were established to provide independent and impartial advice to SMEs about information and communication technology. When the re-organisation of the Small Business Service and the Business Link Organisation took place, it was agreed that the provision of this ICT advice would be delivered through the Business Link network and the equivalents in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. Many of the ISI advisers were subsumed into the Business Link organisation. There are therefore no ISI centres still in existence.

Innovation Unit

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many industrial secondees there were in the Department's Innovation Unit in each year since 1998; and if she will make a statement. [91653]

Ms Hewitt: During the period 1998–2002, the Innovation Unit had the following number of part-time industrial 'secondees' engaged within the Unit at some point in the year: 1998—33; 1999—29; 2000—28; 2001—29 and 2002—23. The Innovation Unit has now been restructured and its work incorporated across the new Innovation Group within the DTI.

Job Creation

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many grants for job creation her Department awarded in (a) south-east Northumberland and (b) Wansbeck in 2002; and what the value was in each case. [93026]

Alan Johnson: The table sets out the numbers, value and associated jobs for grant offered in 2002 under the Regional Selective Assistance (RSA) and Enterprise Grant schemes for Wansbeck and south-east Northumberland (the local authority districts of Blyth Valley, North Tyneside and Wansbeck). From 1 April 2002 responsibility for RSA was transferred to ONE NorthEast, the regional development agency.

Details of individual RSA grants of over £75,000 are published in "Labour Market Trends" after the first payment of grant has been made.

Regional Selective Assistance and Enterprise Grant 2002

	Wansbeck	South-east Northumberland
Number of offers	2	20
Grant value	£177,500	£5,327,460
Associated jobs	40	842

Manufacturing Advisory Service

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much her Department will provide from its Innovation Budget to fund the Manufacturing Advisory Service; how this amount will be spent; and if she will make a statement. [93288]

Alan Johnson: The Department will allocate £14.2 million from its Innovation Budget to fund the Manufacturing advisory Service. This money will be allocated to Regional Development Agencies and the Welsh Development Agency to match fund the Regional Centres for Manufacturing Excellence (RCMEs) that we have established in partnership with them to deliver the Manufacturing Advisory Service in their respective regions and in Wales. Our allocated Innovation Budget funding will also cover the cost of a contract that DTI has awarded to Inbis to establish a National Network of Centres of Expertise in Manufacturing and a website for the MAS. All 10 RCMEs and the national website have been launched and are in operation (the site is at www.dit.gov.uk/manfacturingm/mas).

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many businesses with (a) five employees or fewer and (b) over five employees have received assistance from the Manufacturing Advisory Service since it was established; and if she will make a statement. [93289]

Alan Johnson: The Department does not collect data from the MAS which allows us to separate or help given companies of more or fewer than five employees. The thrust of the MAS is however, very much on helping what the EU defines as being Small and Medium Sized Enterprises (SMEs) employing up to 250 employees. In the period to 30th September 2002 the MAS:

Responded to around 5,000 enquires through its Regional Centres for Manufacturing Excellence

Undertook some 670 diagnostic and advisory visits to companies

Included some 4,700 in regional training and other events

Undertook over 100 in-depth consultancy projects with manufacturers

Completed 21 Case studies that have been published on the MAS website (at www.dti.gov.iik/manufacturing/mas).

Initial monitoring data show that achievements within companies included:

Average people productivity improvement of 28 per cent.

Average scrap or wastage reduction of 35 per cent.

Average on time delivery improvement of over 40 per cent.

Average improvement in stock turnover of some 90 per cent.

Average value added to each SME client company is just over £50,000.

Miners Compensation

Andy Burnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many claims have been lodged to date under the Coal Health Compensation Scheme for (a) COPD and (b) vibration white finger; and what percentage of those claims have (i) been settled in full and (ii) received an interim payment but not full settlement in the parliamentary constituencies of (A) Leigh, (B) Makerfield, (C) Wigan, (D) St. Helens North, (E) St. Helens South, (F) Warrington North, (G) Warrington South, (H) Bolton North East, (I) Bolton North West, (J) Bolton West, (K) Salford, (L) Worsley, (M) Eccles, (N) Knowsley North and (O) Knowsley South. [93428]

Mr. Wilson: The Department's claim handlers, IRISC, are unable to provide details of how many individuals have received interim payments, as some claimants have received more than one interim payment.

The figures for claims received and percentage of claims settled is:

	COPD		VWF
Constituency	Claims registered	Percentage settled	Claims registered	Percentage settled
Leigh	1,781	25	685	30
Makerfield	1,284	20	622	33
Wigan	1,032	22	350	32
St. Helens North	878	21	496	34
St. Helens South	922	23	503	36
Warrington North	85	27	59	25
Warrington South	22	5	17	6
Bolton North East	124	27	30	30
Bolton South East[1]	336	31	86	42
Bolton West	222	36	74	41
Salford	27	22	14	50
Worsley	816	23	255	38
Eccles	143	30	30	47
Knowsley North	25	32	14	36
Knowsley South	193	24	110	29

[1] The figures have been given for Bolton South East. Bolton North West is not a constituency.

A full breakdown of constituency statistics is available on the DTI website: www. dti.gov.uk/coalhealth

National Minimum Wage (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many workers in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire have benefited from the national minimum wage in each year since 1997. [93076]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 27 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question about the number of workers in the Shrewsbury and Atcham parliamentary constituency and in Shropshire who have benefited from the national minimum wage (NMW) in each year since 1997. (93076)

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) calculates estimates of the number of jobs paid less than NMW rates for the United Kingdom and Government Office Regions. These are available on the National Statistics website at:

http://www.statistics.gov.uk/themes/labour_market/pay_and_earnings/measuring_low_pay.asp

Estimates for Parliamentary Constituencies and counties are not available.

Ofgem Board

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many people were interviewed for each position on the Ofgem Board. [86191]

Mr. Wilson: The numbers interviewed for a single non-executive post vary according to the field. Tyupically, three to five candidates are interviewed.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will set out the process for appointing members of the Ofgem Board. [86192]

Mr. Wilson: The process followed for the chair and for non-executive members is as for other public appointments, with guidance from the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments. The process involves advertisement and search; interviews by panels including independent members; and recommendations to Ministers, who take the final decision, from the shortlist presented. Other executive members are appointed on an ex-officio basis.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money Ofgem has spent on (a) political advisers, (b) attendance at party conferences and (c) corporate hospitality in each year since it was established. [86193]

Ms Hewitt: These are matters for the Gas and Electricity markets Authority. The Chairman of the Authority will write to the hon. Member, and I have asked for a copy to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what criteria she uses to assess the performance and salary of each member of the Ofgem Board. [86195]

Mr. Wilson: Executive members of the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority do not receive any additional remuneration for their role as members. Their pay and conditions as executives are matters for the Office of Gas and Electricity Markets. Non-executive members are not eligible for performance-related pay, but their performance is assessed as required by the guidelines for public appointments before re-appointment.

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the recruitment consultants used by her Department advised on the appointment of members of the Ofgem Board. [86201]

Mr. Wilson: A number of firms of recruitment consultants were retained by the Department under call-off contacts, one of which assisted with the process of appointment of the combined post of Director General of Gas supply and Director General of Electricity Supply (and Chairman-designate of the Gas and Electricity Markets Authority).

Post Office

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will discuss with the management of the Post Office its (a) complaints handling arrangements, (b) response times and (c) response to complaints concerning the Royal Mail from honourable Members; and if she will make a statement. [93071]

Mr. Timms: These are matters which fall within the day to day responsibility of Royal Mail. If the hon. Member has specific points to raise in relation to these matters, I will be glad to take them up with the Chairman.

Post Office Card Accounts

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many subpostmasters have completed the training necessary for the operation of post office card accounts. [92876]

Mr. Timms [holding answer 23 January 2003]: This is a matter which falls within the day-to-day responsibility of Post Office Ltd. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Post Office Raids

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations she has received concerning security for local post offices against armed hold-ups in rural sub-post offices; and if she will make a statement; [93008]

(2) what representations she has received from sub-post office masters about recent raids on local post offices in North Yorkshire. [93009]

Mr. Timms: There have been no representations. Security arrangements at all post offices are an operational matter for Post Office Ltd. in conjunction with sub-postmasters.

Post Offices (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial support is available to rural post offices in Shrewsbury and Atcham. [93016]

Mr. Timms: Rural post offices across the UK will benefit from the £450 million package of financial support for the rural post office network that I announced on 2 December 2002.

The package is underpinned by the appointment of rural transfer advisers by POL and a £2 million fund to support community post office initiatives.

The rural network also benefits from investment in the network generally. The rural network benefits from the considerable investment in the network's IT, and in new products, including universal banking services. On automation alone, the Government have made the largest ever investment in the Post Office—£480 million--much of it on the rural network.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) urban and (b) rural post offices closed in (i) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (ii) Shropshire in each year since 1997. [93074]

Mr. Timms: I am informed by Post Office Ltd. that current and historic data on the post office network is not held on a parliamentary constituency or county basis.

Power Cuts

Mr. Wiggin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with energy regulators to ensure energy companies receive lists of vulnerable people who are a priority for reconnection in the event of a power cut. [93319]

Mr. Wilson: Ministers and officials meet the Energy Regulator regularly and discuss a wide range of issues.

The licence for Distribution Network Operators (DNOs) require them to maintain a register of customers who have special communication needs or depend on electricity for medical reasons, and who require advance notice of planned interruptions to supply. This ensures that the DNOs are aware of vulnerable customers, and can prioritise accordingly. The DNOs are also required to give advice via a code of practice (provision of services for persons who are of pensionable age or disabled or chronically sick).

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many press releases have been issued by her Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if she will make a statement. [92471]

Ms Hewitt: The number of DTI press releases issued since April 1995 were as follows:

	Q1	Q2	Q3	Q4	Total
1995	Not available	195	224	246	665
1996	265	231	224	245	965
1997	287	142	194	252	875
1998	212	217	194	272	895
1999	232	258	180	239	909
2000	213	200	181	191	785
2001	175	109	160	185	629
2002	184	193	177	217	771

These quarterly statistics include a number of statutory type announcements (merger clearance, power station consents and company winding up petitions) that the Department is required to issue when individual decisions are made.

Regulatory Impact Assessments

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the Regulatory Impact Assessments produced by her Department since 1 May 1997; and if she will make a statement. [88836]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 16 January 2003]: Regulatory Impact Assessments were first introduced in August 1998. The Cabinet Office, in a bi-annual Command Paper, publishes lists of all Departments' Regulatory Impact Assessments, and their predecessors, Compliance Cost Assessments. Copies of the Command papers are available in the Libraries of the House.

Regulatory Impact Assessments published by my Department since July 2002, for which a Command Paper is yet to be published, are as follows:

The Offshore Installations (Emergency Pollution Control) Regulations 2002

The National Minimum Wage Regulations 1999 (Amendment) Regulations 2002

Wireless Telegraphy (Licences charges) Regulations 2002

The Electronic Commerce (EC Directive) Regulations 2002

The Directors' Remuneration Report Regulations 2002

Rural Transfer Advisers

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what plans she has to review the effectiveness of the Rural Transfer Advisers referred to in the report by the Scottish National Rural Partnership of November 2002, Section B.13 of Implementing Services in Rural Scotland; [93193]

(2) where the six Rural Transfer Advisers referred to in the report by the Scottish National Rural Partnership of November 2002, Section B.13 of Implementing Services in Rural Scotland, are; and what progress they have made in preserving rural post offices. [93199]

Mr. Timms: The employment and effectiveness of Rural Transfer Advisers are operational matters for Post Office Ltd. I have therefore asked the chief executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

Scottish Post Offices

Mr. Weir: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which post offices in Scotland referred to in the report by the Scottish National Rural Partnership of November 2002, Section B.13 of Implementing Services in Rural Scotland, received funding from the Sub Post Office Start Up Capital Subsidy Funding; how much each has received; and what proportion this represented of the successful applications from throughout the UK. [93194]

Mr. Timms: I understand from Post Office Ltd. who operate the Sub Post Office Start Up Capital Subsidy Fund on behalf of the Department that 13 applications from Scotland had been approved, out of a total of 133 approved for the UK, as at end December 2002. As at that date, the amounts approved and paid in respect of applications from Scotland were as follows:

	Approved	Paid
Achnasheen	20,000	289
Almondbank	17,750	17,750
Arnisdale	1,810	1,657
Bernisdale	11,131	8,880
Bowden	5,000	2,184
Drinishader	4,550	—
East Mains of Carseburn	315	315
Glenboig	17,500	17,500
Glencoe	10,307	10,307
Laxay	2,213	1,664
Ollaberry	3,411	3,411
Strathkinness	17,963	—
Struan	3,898	3,898

Sickness Absence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many days were lost due to sickness absence in the Department in 2002. [90547]

Ms Hewitt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Evans) on 20 January, Official Report, column 12W.

Sizewell

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) which organisations were responsible for security at Sizewell B at 6.00 am on 13 January 2003; and what their responsibilities are; [93219]

(2) pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Llew Smith) of 20th January 2003, Official Report, column 9, what lessons were learnt from the Greenpeace UK incursion to Sizewell B in October 2002; and what actions were taken as a result of those lessons; [93220]

(3) pursuant to her oral statement of 14 January 2003, Official Report, column 547, on the Sizewell security breach, when the Government's preliminary conclusion from the inquiry will be acted upon. [93254]

Mr. Wilson: The Office for Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS), the security regulator, is reviewing security following the incursion into Sizewell B nuclear power station on 13 January by demonstrators organised by Greenpeace. Some security enhancements have already been identified and any others arising during the review will be implemented as soon as practicable. An earlier review was conducted following the incursion in October 2002 and action taken.

Responsibility for security at the Sizewell B nuclear power station lies with British Energy, the site licensee. Site management comply with the company's security plan in respect of the site as required by the Nuclear Generating Stations (Security) Regulations 1996 (SI 1996 No. 665). OCNS, on behalf of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, advises site management about security threats, specifies the security standards to be followed, approves the security plan and monitors compliance. OCNS had already required the station to implement several additional measures in response to the heightened terrorist threat.

Space Industry Club

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the British National Space Centre's Best Practice in the Space Industry Club is self financing; how many United Kingdom companies are committed to the Club; and if she will make a statement. [91655]

Ms Hewitt: The Space Industry Best Practice Club is working towards achieving self-sufficiency. Including associates, it now has 60 members.

I welcome the activities of the Club. It was set up under a joint commitment by the British National Space Centre and the United Kingdom Industrial Space Committee, and was launched by my hon. Friend the Minister for Science in 1999. Since then, it has worked hard to improve the competitiveness of British companies working in the space sector and has developed relationships with other sectors and within the European Space Agency.

Transco

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many British Gas employees were qualified to purge and relight domestic premises affected by a major gas supply failure in 1994. [91408]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive that this information is not available.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Transco employees are qualified to purge and relight domestic premises affected by a major gas supply failure. [91409]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

I have been advised by the Health and Safety Executive that on 16 January 2003, Transco's statutory registration by the Council for Registered Gas Installers (CORGI) covered work by 2,707 emergency service operatives holding valid certificates of competence under one of the three recognised assessment schemes: the Approved Code of Practice (ACOP) scheme; the Nationally Accredited Certification Scheme (ACS); and the aligned National Vocational Qualification.

Transco is also able to contract other CORGI-registered installers if additional resource is considered necessary due to the scale of the failure.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what tests her Department has conducted to establish the capacity of Transco to respond to a major gas supply failure without requiring the closure of power stations. [91410]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

The Department has carried out no such tests. However, I am advised by the Health and Safety Executive that Transco, in its capacity as the national Network Emergency Co-ordinator, has duties to test its arrangements for responding to a major gas supply failure and minimising its effects. Arrangements are also in place for activating a Government/industry Joint Response Team to co-ordinate action should a major supply failure occur, and these arrangements are periodically tested by means of joint exercises.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what capacity Transco (a) is required by regulation to maintain and (b) has to purge and relight domestic premises affected by a major gas supply failure. [91411]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

The Gas Safety (Management) Regulations 1996 (GSMR) require Transco as a gas conveyor to prepare a safety case which (a) demonstrates how it will minimise the risk of a gas supply emergency; and (b) gives particulars of the procedures it has established to restore safely the gas supply to consumers, should a supply failure occur.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what contracts are in place between Transco and other companies to supply suitably qualified engineers to purge and relight domestic premises affected by a major gas supply failure. [91412]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I have been asked to reply.

This commercial information is not available. The requirement of Schedule 1 of paragraph 21 of the Gas Safety (Management) Regulations 1996 (GSMR) is for Transco as a gas conveyor to describe the particulars of the procedures that it has established to restore safely the gas supply to consumers following an interruption of supply.

Westport Private Equity Limited

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what independent audits have taken place of Westport Private Equity Ltd.; whether these audits are available to Members; and if she will make a statement. [91651]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Westport Private Equity Ltd. has filed audited annual accounts at Companies House on a regular basis. The audited accounts for the year ended 31 December 2001 were filed on 15 May 2002. The accounts are available for public inspection.

TREASURY

Employment Statistics

Mr. Forth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were employed in (a) central Government, (b) local and regional government, (c) agencies of government, (d) the services sector and (e) manufacturing in (i) June 1997 and (ii) December 2002. [92673]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. Eric Forth, dated 27 January 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question about how many people were employed in (a) central government, (b) local and regional government (c) agencies of government, (d) services sector and (e) manufacturing in (i) June 1997 and (ii) December 2002. (92673)

The latest information is given below. The Office for National Statistics does not use the term 'agencies of government', so, for completeness, total public sector employment is shown:

Workforce Jobs by Sector

Source:
Economic Trends, June 2002 issue, ONS
Labour Market Trends Table B.18, ONS

Estimates of workforce jobs are based on the results of regular sample surveys of employers which count the number of employee jobs. Full information on public sector employment is published once a year; data for 2002 will be published in an article in Economic Trends in June 2003.

The Cabinet Office publication 'Civil Service Statistics 2001' shows civil servants in main departments and Next Step agencies separately and a separate Cabinet Office publication, 'Public Bodies 2001' gives details of employment in Non-Departmental Public Bodies. Both these publications are available from the House of Commons Library.

Advertising Campaigns

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will place in the Library evaluation reports on advertising campaigns conducted in each of the last five financial years by (a) National Savings and (b) the Office for National Statistics. [92830]

Ruth Kelly: The information is as follows:

National Savings and Investments

Every advertising campaign run by National Savings and Investments is monitored and evaluated.

Methods of evaluation:

Calls/sales evaluation

All press advertisements are media coded. Calls generated through advertising are monitored, and associated sales are monitored and evaluated in terms of return on investment to ensure the cost effectiveness of campaigns.

Brand awareness and perception of the brand

A continuous tracking study measures awareness of the brand and advertising campaigns and associated changes in the perception of the brand and consideration to save with us.

Independent auditing

All advertising spend is audited quarterly by independent auditors to ensure value for money is achieved in buying press space and TV airtime.

As regards to placing the evaluation reports in the Library, much of the information contained in these reports is commercially sensitive. We operate in a commercial marketplace to ensure value for money is achieved in buying press space and TV airtime. Making public the information on our advertising effectiveness would allow media owners the competitive advantage in negotiations and so jeopardise our ability to secure favourable terms for advertising in the future.

Office for National Statistics

The Office for National Statistics advertising expenditure for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 was £3,000 and used to promote the availability of statistics.

Expenditure on advertising in 2000–01 and 2001–02 was £1,272,000 and £1,770,000 respectively. The spend in these two years covered the campaign to raise awareness of the 2001 Census. It aimed to encourage the population of England and Wales to take part.

Evaluation was by results. These demonstrated that 98 per cent. of households completed and returned their Census form.

A review of the Census publicity campaign has been published on the National Statistics website. The web address for the report is www.statistics.gov.uk/census2001/proj_pub.asp.

No advertising expenditure was incurred by ONS in 2002–03.

Affordable Housing

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what advice he has received about the likely impact of the introduction of tax-transparent property investment trusts on the supply of affordable housing in the UK. [92568]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are aware of the arguments for and against the introduction of tax transparent property investment vehicles, including those submitted by the property industry itself. Proposals on tax are a matter for consideration by the Chancellor in the Budget.

Capital Modernisation Fund

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the amounts of the capital modernisation fund allocated for financial years (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [92792]

Ruth Kelly: As shown in table B15 of the pre-Budget report 2002, the allocations to the capital modernisation fund are £1.2 billion, £0.9 billion and £1 billion in 2003–04, 2004–05 and 2005–06 respectively.

Of the £1.2 billion in 2003–04, £0.8 billion has already been allocated to Departments.

Details of all capital modernisation fund projects announced to date are available on the Treasury website (www.hm-treasury.gov.uk).

CAT Standard

Mr. Lazarowicz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on the introduction of a common recognisable logo for products which meet the CAT standard. [92566]

Ruth Kelly: The Government decided that setting appropriate standards would be the best way to establish a range of straightforward financial products that are simple, clear and fair.

These standards have had a positive influence in the market on behalf of consumers.

Cigarettes

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 748W, on cigarettes, what assumptions he made regarding affordability and profitability of trips; and if he will make a statement. [92777]

John Healey: The profitability and affordability of trips depend on several factors, including the price of tobacco products, the cost of passage to other EU member states and the level of disposable income available to different shoppers. Variations in cost between routes and products, in shoppers' income and in their understanding of existing unlimited shopping rights, prevent explicit or quantifiable relationships being derived about the likely response—in terms of the number of shoppers, the frequency of their trips and the scale of their purchases—to changes in indicative levels for tobacco. The assumptions used to inform the estimates of the revenue impact of the new indicative levels reflect Customs' best judgment on the basis of the available evidence.

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 748W, on cigarettes, what proportion of travellers who previously purchased at the indicative level were expected to increase their purchases to the new indicative level; and if he will make a statement. [92797]

John Healey: As I stated in my answer of 16 January 2003, HM Customs and Excise's survey data of cross-channel travellers shows that the majority of travellers make no purchases of cigarettes and that, of those who do make purchases, two-thirds purchase below the previous indicative level of 800 cigarettes, and that a further 15 per cent. purchase above. The recent change to the levels can be expected to have little effect on the shopping patterns of these travellers.

The assumptions for the public finance forecasts relate to the impact on behaviour of those travellers purchasing at the previous indicative levels for tobacco. For this group of travellers it was assumed that:

> those who are purchasing with intent to resell illegally in the UK would increase their purchases to the new indicative level; and > the remainder would increase their purchases to an average level of 1,600, equivalent to a three-month supply for an average smoker.

Company Accounts

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to issue a report on the new approach to investigations of company accounts. [92816]

Dawn Primarolo: In consultation with representative bodies, the Inland Revenue has recently extended the framework developed for inquiries into Income Tax Self Assessment returns to cover Corporation Tax Self Assessment inquiries. The framework does not involve any new powers and does not affect taxpayers' rights. Rather, it is designed to enhance co-operation in inquiries between the Inland Revenue and tax practitioners. Details of the framework, as it extends to Corporation Tax, will be published in a 'Working Together' newsletter in February or early March 2003. The Working Together Group is a partnership between the Inland Revenue and those bodies who represent tax practitioners. There are no plans to issue a separate report.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93051]

Ruth Kelly: The information is as follows.

HM Treasury

	Cases of potential misuse investigated	Disciplinary action
1998	Nil	Nil

2000	300	233
2001	226	188
2002	211	205

The Inland Revenue has over 70,000 employees the vast majority of whom have access to customer records to carry out their duties.

The Department's records of these cases are not broken down by category of misuse.

HM Customs and Excise employs over 20,000 people. The majority of staff have access to internal e-mail and external Internet services. A limited number of staff have access to databases that contain information regarding the business activities of registered traders. This access is required to enable staff to undertake their duties.

Congestion Charge

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether payments made by public sector employers to employees working within the Central London congestion charging zone by way of reimbursement of congestion charges incurred on travel to their place of work will be treated as taxable emoluments, subject to (a) tax and NI payments by the recipient employee and (b) employers' NI contributions. [92569]

Dawn Primarolo: Yes, in the same way as other payments made by employers to employees for travel costs to their normal place of work.

Corporate Profitability

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the levels of UK corporate profitability were in each year since 1996. [92819]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Howard Flight, dated 27 January 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question on levels of UK corporate profitability in each year since 1996.

Information on profits and rates of return for private sector non-financial companies is available in the "Profitability of UK Companies" First Release which is published by the Office for National Statistics and is available from the House of Commons Library. It is also available from the National Statistics website: www.statistics.gov.uk.

Tables 1 to 7 give data back to 1989 or earlier. The latest currently available data cover the 3rd quarter of 2002. Data for the whole of 2002 will be published on 2nd April 2003.

The ONS does not produce estimates of rates of return for financial companies, but estimates of profits for this period are in table A3 of "United Kingdom National Accounts" which is also available from the National Statistics website.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the total excess working hours worked by staff in his Department in each year from 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [93448]

Ruth Kelly: Information before January 1999 is not available. Information from January 1999 is available in the Library of the House and was referred to in the answer I gave on 25 February 2002 to the hon. member for Twickenham (Dr. Cable) Official Report, columns 1045–46W.

ECOFIN

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the outcome was of the ECOFIN Council held on 21 January; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [93156]

Mr. Gordon Brown: I attended the ECOFIN meeting on 21 January.

The Presidency and the Commission introduced their work programmes for ECOFIN. The principal objective would be to maintain a stable macroeconomic environment and boost confidence and growth through a renewed commitment to structural reforms.

The council reached political agreement on the tax package, based on proposals outlined by the presidency at the 3 December 2002 ECOFIN meeting, and discussed at the 11 December 2002 ECOFIN meeting.

The council confirmed the agreement at the Feira European Council that the objective of the EU should be exchange of information on as wide a basis as possible. And it confirmed the rejection at Feira of an EU-wide withholding tax, which would have had severe implications for the London bond market.

Political agreement was reached that 12 member states will move to automatic exchange of information on the savings income of EU residents. Austria, Belgium and Luxembourg will move to automatic exchange of information by the end of the first full fiscal year from the date when the council agrees by unanimity that the third countries named at Feira have committed to the OECD standard of exchange of information on request.

Austria, Belgium and Luxembourg will operate a transitional withholding tax of 15 per cent. from 1 January 2004, 20 per cent. from 1 January 2007, and 35 per cent. from 1 January 2010. The council agreed that the EC should enter into an agreement with Switzerland, Liechtenstein, Monaco, Andorra and San Marino to adopt the same rates of withholding and maintain the 35 per cent. after adoption of exchange of information to the OECD standard.

The council assessed that in respect of dependent and associated territories the necessary reassurances had been received that the same measures would be applied as in EU member states, and that in respect of the United States the necessary reassurances had been received that equivalent measures would be applied.

The council committed itself to formal adoption of the tax package before the European Council in March 2003. This is dependent upon receiving firm offers from Switzerland, Liechtenstein, Andorra, San Marino and Monaco to enter into agreements as outlined, and on the council assessing the work of the Code of Conduct Group on the rollback of the identified harmful business tax measures of member states and of dependent and associated territories.

In furtherance of the ultimate objective of exchange of information on as wide a basis as possible, the council asked the commission to continue negotiations with Switzerland and the other third countries for the exchange of information and to report back to the council before 2007, and to enter into discussions with other important financial centres.

On the Stability and Growth Pact, the council adopted Opinions on the Stability and Convergence programmes of Sweden, Finland, Greece, Italy, Germany and France. The council adopted a Recommendation on an Excessive Deficit Procedure for Germany. It also adopted a Recommendation on an Early Warning for France, with France abstaining.

In view of the lengthy discussion on the tax package, the presidency decided to postpone discussion of energy taxation and VAT administrative co-operation to the 18 February ECOFIN.

No formal votes were taken at this meeting.

Employment Distribution

Mr. Cousins: To ask Mr Chancellor of the Exchequer what the distribution of employment in finance and insurance was in each Government office region and nation of the United Kingdom in (a) 1996, (b) 2000 and (c) the most recent available period. [89905]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Jim Cousins, dated 27 January 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question (158) about the distribution of employment in finance and insurance in each Government Office Region and nation of the United Kingdom in (a) 1996, *(b)*2000 and (c) the most recent available period. (89905).

The attached table shows the number of employee jobs in financial intermediation by Government Office Region for 1996, 2000 and 2002. The latest earlier years also relate to September. figures are for September 2002, and, for improved comparability, the figures for earlier years also relate to September.

Equitable Life

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer who has assumed the (a) responsibilities and (b) potential liabilities of the regulatory bodies previously charged with regulating the affairs of the Equitable Life Assurance Society. [93256]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury was responsible for the prudential supervision of insurers between 5 January 1998 (prior to this responsibility rested with the Department of Trade and Industry) and 30 November 2001. Between 5 January 1998 and 31 December 1998 the Treasury undertook this task directly. From 1 January 1999 the Treasury contracted out most of its functions relating to prudential insurance supervision to the FSA. The FSA became responsible for prudential insurance supervision in its own right from midnight on 30 November 2001 when the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 (FSMA) came into force.

Under the provisions of Part II of the Deregulation and Contracting Out Act 1994, the Treasury remains responsible for the actions carried out by the FSA on behalf of the Treasury during the period of contracting out. Under the Transfer of Functions (Insurance) Order 1997 (S11997/2781) the Treasury became responsible for all the liabilities of the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in connection with the functions which were transferred to the Treasury.

Under the Financial Services Act 1986, conduct of business regulation was the responsibility of the Personal Investment Authority (PIA), a self-regulating organisation recognised by the FSA. Between 1 June 1998 and 30 November 2001, FSA staff carried out work on behalf of the PIA Board, under contract, in preparation for the implementation of FSMA when conduct of business regulation also became the responsibility of the FSA.

Under transitional provisions made under FSMA, the FSA assumed the liabilities of the PIA and other Self Regulatory Organisations when the Act came into force.

Euro

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he proposes, within the assessment of the five economic tests, to verify whether present and planned levels of public expenditure could be maintained if the UK were to join the Euro. [93117]

Ruth Kelly: A comprehensive and rigorous assessment of the Five Economic Tests will be completed within two years of the start of this Parliament.

The Government remains fully committed to its plans for public spending. These plans provide a much needed boost to public investment in key public services including schools, hospitals and transport, redressing years of under-investment, while maintaining economic stability.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment was made by HM Treasury of the economic consequences of joining the euro in the first wave; and if he will publish it. [93118]

Ruth Kelly: "UK Membership of the Single Currency: An Assessment of the Five Economic Tests" was published by HM Treasury in October 1997. A copy can be found in the Library, and is also available on the HM Treasury website.

Euro Pamphlets

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many businesses were sent the pamphlets, "Do you trade with business or individuals from the euro area?" and "Do you know whether the euro's introduction in the euro area could affect your cashflow and profits"; how many have responded to date; and what the cost was of this exercise. [91618]

Llew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the statement by the Financial Secretary to the Treasury, of 15 January, Official Report 307–88WH, what the cost was of the printing and distribution of the factsheets and business case studies on the euro. [92319]

Ruth Kelly: Details of HM Treasury expenditure on business euro preparations were included in the 'Sixth Report on Euro Preparations', published on 18 July 2002. Copies of the report were deposited in the Library of the House.

In Autumn 2002, over 1.4 million businesses were sent a mailer containing the 'Dealing with the euro' leaflet. 11,600 requests for additional information on how to deal with the euro as a foreign currency have been received to date and 34,600 copies of material relating to the euro as a foreign currency sent to UK businesses. The cost of this mailing was met from within departmental resources.

Exchange Rates

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the impact of exchange rates on small businesses in (a) 1992, (b) 1997 and (c) 2002. [93010]

John Healey: The effects of exchange rate changes are difficult to isolate with any confidence, but the Government recognise the difficulties that the recent weakness of the euro has caused for exporters, including many small businesses.

The Government seek a stable and competitive pound over the medium-term, and the best contribution it can make is to deliver low, stable inflation and sound public finances. Previous experience shows that any short-term attempt to manipulate the exchange rate can lead to wider economic instability, with damaging consequences for small businesses.

Financial Advisers

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will relax the requirement on small independent financial advisers with a good claims record to obtain professional indemnity insurance; and if he will make a statement. [93354]

Ruth Kelly: This is a matter for the Financial Services Authority (the FSA). The requirement for independent financial adviser firms to have professional indemnity insurance is contained in their rules.

The FSA is aware of the difficulties facing such firms and will be publishing a consultation document shortly.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. John Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) his Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in 2002. [89897]

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money has been lost by his Department and its agencies and non-departmental public bodies through (a) fraud and (b) theft for each year since 1996–97. [92437]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Members to my answer of 21 January 2002, Official Report, column 651W. On the basis set out there, the Treasury's losses to theft and fraud in 2001–02 were £1,000.

Fuel Poverty

Estelle Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect of fuel duty on low-income families in rural areas. [92354]

John Healey: We have made no specific assessment of the effects of fuel duty on low-income families in rural areas. As with all families, they will have benefited from the effective duty reduction on ultra low sulphur petrol and diesel in Budget 2001, and the duty freeze on other oils in that Budget, and on [illegible] oils in Budget 2002.

Health and Safety Strategy

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what information he has collated on the application to his Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the Revitalising Health and Safety Strategy Statement; and if he will make a statement; [89522]

(2) which senior officials within his Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised; [89521]

(3) whether his Department and its agencies have met the commitment arising from Action Point 13 of the June 2000 strategy statement on Revitalising Health and Safety to summarise health and safety performance and plans in Annual Reports from the year 2000–01 onwards. [89520]

Ruth Kelly: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to her by the Minister of State, Department of Work and Pensions on 20 January, Official Report, columns 85–86W.

In addition, my Department and agencies are fully committed to supporting the aims of the "Revitalising Strategy" and to continuous improvement in all areas within the checklist circulated by Sir Richard Mottram and the good practice guide issued by the High Level Forum.

The Treasury and Office of Government Commerce (OGC) summarise health and safety performance within their departmental Annual Reports. The Debt Management Office and the Royal Mint plan to do so in their departmental reports for 2002–03.

At departmental board level within the Treasury and its agencies the following board members have been given responsibility for health and safety:

HM Treasury—Managing Director Corporate Services and Development;

Office of Government Commerce—Chief Executive;

The Royal Mint—Director of Human Resources and Corporate Affairs;

The Debt Management Office—Chief Executive.

These details are published in our Health and Safety Policy Statements and made available on our intranet sites.

HM Treasury

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what his estimate is of total public spending on HM Treasury in (a) current and (b) capital terms in each year from 1990–91 to 2003–04 (planned), in 2001–02 prices; and if he will make a statement; [93454]

(2) what his estimate is of total staff numbers within HM Treasury for each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [93453]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to expenditure figures in the Treasury's annual reports (of which the most recent is Cm 5425). GDP deflators are available in the 'Economic Data and Tools' section of the Treasury website: www.hm-treasury.gov.uk Details on staff numbers are published in "Civil Service Statistics", copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

HM Treasury Staff

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many HM Treasury staff are based at Great George Street in London; and what floor space of office accommodation they are occupying. [92221]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury moved to 1 Horse Guards Road in July 2002, where all staff are now based. The Department occupies 22,223 square metres of net usable area. Details on staff numbers are published in Civil Service Statistics copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library.

Immigration

Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the net non EU foreign immigration to the UK was, including the dependants of asylum seekers, in each year from 1992 to 2001 (a) before the recent adjustments to take account of the census results and (b) after these adjustments had been made. [93370]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. N. Soames, dated 27 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your question on the net immigration of non-EU nationals to the UK from 1992 to 2001. (93370)

The information requested is provided in the attached table which shows the net migration estimates for non-EU nationals for 1992 to 2001. Two different estimates are shown in the table: (i) interim revised net migration estimates for non-EU nationals for 1992 to 2001 that take preliminary account of the 2001 Census results, and (ii) the original series of net migration estimates for non-EU nationals compiled prior to the results of the 2001 Census becoming available; it should be noted that the latter series has now been withdrawn.

The estimates shown in the table take account of dependants of asylum seekers. The Office for National Statistics are working closely with the Home Office to ensure that the best use is made of the recently available detailed Home Office information on dependants of asylum seekers in preparation of the revised international migration series which will be published in late Spring 2003. These revised estimates will be based upon more detailed information from the 2001 Census and further research work and will supercede the interim series included in the attached table.

Net migration to the UK of non-EU[1] nationals

Thousands

Year	Interim revised series[2]	Original series[3]
1992	+31.2	+ 68.9
1993	+ 36.5	+ 72.5
1994	+ 58.7	+ 95.7
1995	+ 77.0	+ 116.7
1996	+ 69.0	+ 105.4
1997	+ 70.4	+ 110.8

1999	+ 132.3	+ 182.5
2000	+ 165.0	+ 222.3
2001	+ 178.1

[1] Figures for all years show EU as it was constituted on 1 January 1995.

[2] These estimates represent interim revised migration estimates, adjusted in light of first results of the 2001 Census. Further revisions to the series, in the light of more detailed 2001 Census data, will be made available in late Spring 2003. This table includes adjustments for asylum seekers, and for persons admitted as short-term visitors who are subsequently granted an extension of stay for other reasons—for example, as students or on the basis of marriage.

[3] These are the original published estimates for 1992–2000 compiled prior to the results of the 2001 Census being available. This series has now been withdrawn and superceded by the interim revised estimates released on 28 November 2002 and shown in the first column.

Income Tax Evasion

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many taxpayers have been prosecuted for fraudulently evading income tax in each year since 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [90980]

Dawn Primarolo: A new offence of fraudulently evading Income Tax, which can be tried in a magistrate's court or in a crown court, was introduced in Finance Act 2000 in response to the recommendations of Lord Grabiner's report "The Informal Economy (March 2000). The legislation applies to offences committed from 1 January 2001. No prosecutions have as yet been completed using the new legislation.

Industrial Action

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many days were lost to industrial action in the UK in each month since January 1991 up to the most recent date for which information is available. [92766]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. Howard Flight, dated 27 January 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question about the days lost to industrial action in the UK in each month since January 1991 up to the most recent date. (92766)

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the state of manufacturing industry in the UK. [92767]

John Healey: The global economic slowdown of 2001 was the principal cause of recent difficulties faced by UK manufacturers. G7 industrial output grew by 4.7 per cent. in 2000. During 2001 it contracted by 3.6 per cent. This was the sharpest slowdown in G7 industrial activity since 1975. But manufacturing output showed signs of stabilising in the course of 2002—in Q3 it rose by over 1 per cent., ending six consecutive quarters of decline.

The stable macroeconomic framework is creating the right underlying conditions to enable manufacturing to invest, grow and prosper. The UK stands ready to benefit from any sustained recovery in the sector due to strong economic fundamentals and the Government's pro-active enterprise agenda.

In particular, corporation tax is now lower than in any major industrialised country. Cuts in capital gains tax mean the UK's CGT regime will be more favourable than the US's from April. R&D tax credits for large companies will provide an important boost to UK manufacturing and RDAs have been created to drive growth in every English region.

New Deal

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the expenditure on (a) New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds, (b) New Deal for over-25s, (c) New Deal for over-50s, (d) New Deal for lone parents, (e) New Deal for disabled people, (f) New Deal for partners of unemployed people, (g) New Deal for schools, childcare and University for Industry was in each year from 1997–98 to 2001–02. [93385]

Ruth Kelly: Information on the allocation of the windfall tax can be found in the pre-Budget report published in November 2002, which is available in the Library.

Expenditure within Departmental Expenditure Limit can be found in the departmental annual reports.

Information on the expenditure of (a) through (f) can be found in Appendix 3 of the Department for Work and Pensions departmental report published in May 2002, which is available in the Library.

Information on the expenditure for New Deal for schools, childcare and University for Industry can be found in Table 4.2 of the Department for Education and Skills 2002 departmental report, which is available in the Library.

Other sources of child care expenditure include local authorities and devolved Governments.

Office of Government Commerce

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how effective the Office of Government Commerce has been at reducing costs for HM Government. [92982]

Mr. Boateng: OGC has a target of delivering £1 billion of savings in Government procurement in the three years 2000–01 to 2002–03. After the first two years of this target period, Departments have reported total gains of £815 million.

Partnerships UK

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 16 December 2002, Official Report, column 169W, on Partnerships UK, what percentage of Partnerships UK is owned by HM Treasury. [93027]

Mr. Boateng: HM Treasury and the Scottish Ministers hold 44.56 per cent. and 4.44 per cent. respectively of Partnerships UK's share capital. Further details of the company's structure and business activities can be found on its website, www.partnershipsuk.org.uk, and in the company's Public Information Memorandum and Annual Report for the year 2002 which are available from the House Library.

Peter Gershon

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the speeches made by Peter Gershon in his capacity as Chief Executive of the Office of Government Commerce since his appointment; and if he will place copies of the speeches in the Library. [93196]

Mr. Boateng: The information is contained in the table and copies of the speeches made by Peter Gershon, Chief Executive of the Office of Government Commerce are available on the OGC Website www.ogc.qov.uk

Public Services

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of HM Treasury spending on improving the cost-effectiveness and quality of public services in each year from 1997; and if he will make a statement. [93440]

Mr. Boateng: Since 1999–2000 figures for expenditure in support of the Treasury's better public services objective have been published in schedule 5 of its annual resource accounts (Cm 5062 and HC 573). The 2001–02 accounts will be published shortly. No figures are available for earlier years.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress he has made in delivering on his public service agreement target to improve the productivity of public services year by year; and if he will make a statement. [93452]

Mr. Boateng: Progress against this target is set out on page 6 of the HM Treasury Autumn Performance Report, Cm 5665.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the level of NI employee contribution paid on behalf of individuals in their main job is protected during periods of service as an armed forces reservist; and if he will make a statement. [93341]

Dawn Primarolo: Armed forces reservists receive earnings from the Ministry of Defence for periods of service. These earnings are liable to national insurance contributions.

Reservists' Pensions

Mr. Heald: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether periods of service as an armed forces reservist count as periods of continued employment in a taxpayer's main job for the purposes of the favourable tax treatment given to the share option scheme called Enterprise Management Incentive; and if he will make a statement; [93345]

(2) whether favourable tax treatment available to taxpayers in continued employment is lost to them during periods of service as an armed forces reservist; and if he will make a statement. [93344]

Dawn Primarolo: The Enterprise Management Incentive rules dealing with employees' working time do not cater specifically for periods of service by armed forces reservists. Normally this will not cause difficulty in determining an employee's eligibility to the tax advantages available under Enterprise Management Incentives. However, I will be asking my officials to consider whether any issues may arise.

I am not aware of other instances where favourable tax treatment will in practice be lost, but if the hon. Gentleman has any particular case in mind perhaps he will write to me.

Royal Mint

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 16 December 2002, Official Report, column 596W, on the Royal Mint, for what reasons the review is commercially confidential; and if he will make a statement. [92825]

Ruth Kelly: The review is considered commercially confidential because if made public the review might unfairly prejudice the commercial position of the Royal Mint, to the detriment of the taxpayer.

Skye Bridge Toll

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government will return to the Scottish Executive the revenue derived following the Scottish Executive's decision to pay the VAT on the Skye Bridge toll. [90899]

John Healey: Any agreements entered into by the Scottish Executive in respect of the Skye Bridge following the imposition of VAT on tolls will be funded from within the existing 2002 Spending Review settlement.

Stock Exchange

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the growth rate of the London Stock Exchange in comparison to the other major stock exchanges of the world in the last three years. [92984]

Mr. Boateng: Between 1999 and 2002 the number of UK equity transactions conducted on the London Stock Exchange's main market rose by 78 per cent. Other major stock exchanges have also experienced a rise in transactions.

Student Loans

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the annual cost is to the Inland Revenue of the collection of student loan repayments; and if he will make a statement. [91724]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue operates the collection of student loans scheme on behalf of the Department for Education and Skills. All costs are met by DfES.

Tax Evasion (Construction Industry)

Phil Sawford: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he is taking to combat tax evasion in the construction industry. [93386]

Dawn Primarolo: Since April 2002, the Inland Revenue has increased the number of specialist units which deal with industry compliance with the construction industry scheme from nine to 12.

In addition, there are around 70 Employer Compliance Units that review businesses' compliance with their PAYE obligations and carry out employment status reviews. Each unit has staff specialising in status and construction industry work. These units are:

participating in a national project which is examining all contracts between a sample of contractors and sub-contractors to ensure proper compliance with tax obligations; ensuring that a minimum percentage of resource is deployed on construction industry reviews (6 per cent.), including those identified by the national project; and ensuring that a minimum percentage of reviews relate to cases with a significant construction industry element (6.5 per cent.).

A consultation paper, "The Inland Revenue and the Construction Industry: Working Together for a New Scheme", was published alongside the Pre-Budget Report. The paper outlines proposals for a replacement scheme that would reduce the burden of the scheme on the industry while providing the Revenue's compliance officers with new systems to enable them to tackle non-compliance quickly and effectively.

Treasury Building (PFI Deal)

Mr. Bacon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the total professional fees were for the Treasury Building PFI deal, broken down by (a) payer and (b) payee. [93404]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 27 June 2002, Official Report, columns 1051–52W.

Treasury Expenditure (Parliamentary Bodies)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of his Department's spending on the (a) Commonwealth Parliamentary Association, (b) British American Parliamentary Group, (c) Inter-Parliamentary Group and (d) British-Irish Parliamentary Body in each year from 1997–98; and if he will make a statement. [93451]

Mr. Boateng: The annual amounts of grant-in-aid paid to the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association (CPA), the British American Parliamentary Group (BAPG), the Inter-Parliamentary Union (IPU) and the British-Irish Parliamentary Body are set out in the table.

	CPA	BAPG	IPU	BMP

[1] Forecast

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. Syms: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to change the exemption date for vehicle excise duty on classic cars to vehicles made before 1 January 1973. [92805]

John Healey: The Chancellor announced in his 1998 Budget speech that rolling forward exemption for vehicles over 25-years-old would stop so that only vehicles manufactured before 1 January 1973 remained eligible for the exemption. Continuing the rolling forward exemption was difficult to justify on environmental grounds. Any changes to taxation policy will be announced by the Chancellor in the context of his Budget judgment.

Working Families Tax Credit

Jeff Ennis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average length of time is which it takes for a new applicant to receive Working Families Tax Credit; and how much back-dating of Working Families Tax Credit is allowable. [92892]

Dawn Primarolo: Specific figures are not available giving average UK processing times for new Working Families Tax Credit applications. But the Inland Revenue aims to decide 91 per cent. of all Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC) applications within 30 days of receiving them, and for the period from 1 April 2002 to 31 December 2002, the Inland Revenue assessed 97 per cent. of all WFTC applications within 30 days of receipt.

Entitlement to Working Families Tax Credit is generally based on a family's circumstances at the date they make their application. Where a late application is made, there are prescribed circumstances in which back-dating of up to a maximum of three months may be allowed.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Affordable Housing

Helen Southworth: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will take action to ensure that housing designated as affordable housing when planning consent is given is (a) affordable in relation to the market in the planning authority area rather than solely in relation to the specific site land values and (b) retained within the affordable housing sector for a reasonable period. [93005]

Mr. McNulty: Circular 06/98 "Planning and Affordable Housing" advises that local planning authorities should define in their local plans what they regard as affordable housing, based on up-to-date surveys and other data of local need. The circular explains that definitions should be framed to endure for the life of the plan, for instance, through references to the level of local incomes and their relationship to house prices or rents, rather than to a particular price or rent.

Circular 06/98 also provides guidance on the securing and controlling of the occupancy of such housing by, for example, the involvement of a registered social landlord or through the use of appropriate planning conditions or obligations. The Government are looking at circular 06/98 and whether it needs to be revised. An announcement will be made shortly.

Annual Report

Norman Lamb: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how much producing his Department's latest annual report cost; how many copies were printed; how many copies of it were sold at its cover price; to whom copies of the report have been provided free of charge; and how many copies were provided free of charge. [90876]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was created as a separate Department on 29 May 2002 and will publish its first annual report in the spring of 2003. Material which is relevant to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's responsibilities can be found in the annual reports of the former Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions and the Cabinet Office.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to publish his Office's annual report for 2002–03. [91619]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister expects to publish its first Annual Report in April 2003.

Contaminated Land

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps his Office is taking to promote (a) the decontamination of contaminated land and (b) its development in preference to development of green field sites; and if he will make a statement. [91623]

Mr. McNulty: As my right hon Friend the Deputy Prime Minister said in his statement on sustainable communities, housing and planning on 18 July 2002, Official Report columns 438–442. the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister needs to make better use of land. The Government target that 60 per cent. of additional homes should be on brown-field land is being met but the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister needs to keep up the pressure.

English Partnerships have been appointed as the Government's expert advisors on brown-field land. They are currently working with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to draw up a National Brown-field Strategy to be presented to the Deputy Prime Minister for approval in Spring 2003.

In addition, The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister consulted in February 2002 on new technical planning advice on the development on land affected by contamination. This emphasised the positive role of planning in bringing about the remediation of contaminated land. It recognised particularly that much of the contaminated land identified under Part IIA of the Environmental Protection Act 1990 will be subject to voluntary remediation through the planning system as part of the process of redevelopment. This revision of the contaminated land aspects of Planning policy guidance note 23 will be incorporated later this year in a new Planning policy statement, accompanied by a technical annexes on development on land affected by contamination.

Departmental Credit Cards

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many credit cards have been issued for official use by the Department since May 2002; how many departmental credit cards are in use; what has been the itemised cost for each credit card; and how many departmental credit cards are in use that were issued prior to May 2002. [91629]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister uses the Government Procurement Card and Corporate Card; there is no cost to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is unable to separate figures from Department for Transport without incurring disproportionate cost.

There were 84 cards issued since May 2002, which brings the total number in use at present to 214. Prior to May 2002 there were 125 cards in use.

External Consultants

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total cost to his Department was of the use of external consultants in 2002. [90511]

Mr. Leslie: The total cost to the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister on external consultants since it was established on 29 May 2002 is £24,126,108.

Golden Jubilee Medals

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what reasons underlie the delay in awarding firefighters with their Golden Jubilee medals; and if he will make a statement. [92841]

Mr. Raynsford: There is no delay. The schedule agreed with the Royal Mint when the contract was extended to include emergency services, provided for the issue to be completed by June 2003.

Headstones

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) what mechanism exists for compensating relatives for the cost of raising headstones that have been laid flat for safety reasons by local authorities; [91879]

(2) what measures he advises local authorities to take to advise relatives of the instability of headstones in cemeteries; [91882]

(3) how many (a) deaths and (b) injuries have been attributed to unsafe headstones in cemeteries in each year since 1990; [91878]

(4) if he will estimate the cost to local authorities in 2002–03 of the safety testing of headstones; [91880]

(5) what guidance is issued to local authorities on funding the safety of headstones in cemeteries. [91881]

Hilary Benn: I have been asked to reply.

Information on the total number of deaths and injuries is not recorded centrally, but I understand that, sadly, there have been at least one death and 14 injuries attributed to unstable memorials in recent years.

Advice for all burial authorities on the issues arising from unsafe memorials is currently being considered by the Home Office-chaired Burial and Cemeteries Advisory Group. The aim is to supplement and expand on existing advice issued by the Health and Safety Executive and the relevant professional organisations. I expect to issue that advice later this year.

If a local authority has acted in a way which gives ground for compensation, or is found by a court to have so acted, it will be a matter for the authority to decide whether or how to meet any proper claim.

Information is not available on the extent of safety testing by local authorities and an estimate on such costs cannot therefore be made.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list for each region from the latest available English house condition survey the figures for (a) construction date, (b) unfitness, (c) worst and best condition, (d) unfit vacants, (e) unfitness, broken down by dwelling type, (f) reason for vacancy and (g) variation of general comprehensive and urgent repair costs, broken down by type of tenure. [92068]

Mr. McNulty: The 1996 English House Condition Survey (EHCS) regional report provides the currently available EHCS results which can be produced at the regional level. A copy of the report is available in the Library of the House. Copies of the supporting data tables are available on the website at http://www.odpm.gov.uk.

Housing (Rural Areas)

Andrew George: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many households were classified as homeless and in priority need of housing in (a) England and (b) local authorities defined as rural, by region, in each year since 1978; [90828]

(2) how many people were on the waiting list for social housing in (a) England and (b) local authorities defined as rural, by region, in each year since 1978. [90829]

Mr. McNulty: A table presenting available information reported by local authorities in England since 1985–86 in respect of homeless households in priority need accepted annually, and total households on their housing register at 1 April deemed to be "in need", has been placed in the Library of House. Figures are presented for each region, distinguishing activity in authorities categorised as either "mixed rural" or "deep rural".

Local authorities have different practices for compiling and managing their housing register which mean that comparisons between authorities can be misleading. Authorities' policies and practices may change, which can also affect comparisons over time.

Andrew George: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average (a) public sector and (b) private sector rent was for housing in (i) England and (ii) local authorities defined as rural, by region, in each year since 1978. [90837]

Mr. McNulty: In all three tables "rural areas" refers to those local authorities classified by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister as "mixed rural" or "deeply rural".

The figures shown do not go back to 1978, as requested. This is because the current definitions of urban/rural apply to current local authority boundaries only. Rental figures prior to 1996 would require us to refer to earlier local authority boundaries and could be determined only at disproportionate cost.

Housing Investment

Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what capital resources for housing investment have been allocated at 2002–03 prices to Birmingham City Council in each year since 1990–91. [93097]

Mr. McNulty: The information requested is tabled as follows:

£ million

	Actual allocations[1]	In 2002–03 prices[2]
1990–91	62.3	87.2
1991–92	54.3	71.6
1992–93	54.1	69.2

2003–04[3]	74.0	72.4

[1] Covers housing annual capital guidelines (which include an element to be financed from authorities' capital receipts); the major repairs allowance; support for disabled facilities grants; the Capital Receipts Initiative; and ring-fenced support for a number of housing schemes, eg Cash Incentive Schemes. Estate Action scheme funding is excluded.

[2] Allocations have been converted to 2002–03 prices using the GDP Deflator.

[3] The reduction in the allocation in 2003–04 mainly reflects a change in the local government capital finance system which means the allocations no longer include an element assumed to be financed from authorities capital receipts. The figure also excludes the allocation for disabled facilities grants which has not yet been announced.

Lynne Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the annual housing investment that will be needed to ensure that his target for decent homes is met. [93098]

Mr. McNulty: To meet the decent homes target for social housing the investment needed has to both tackle homes that currently fail the standard and prevent homes from falling below it. For homes currently owned by local authorities the estimated average annual investment in their stock required to deliver decent homes is £3.5 billion at current prices This figure will reduce with stock losses from this sector. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister does not yet have comparable figures for homes owned by Registered Social Landlords.

Job Sharing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the extent of job sharing in his Department. [90862]

Mr. Leslie: Approximately 7.8 per cent. of staff in the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister Central work part-time. Information specifically on job sharers is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Job sharing forms just one strand of a range of possible alternative and flexible working arrangements. Under Office of the Deputy Prime Minister central posting arrangements, all posts are open to part-time workers or job sharers. In very exceptional cases where line managers consider that a post cannot be filled on a part-time/job share basis, they must make a case to Human Resources setting out compelling reasons for this.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, in conjunction with the Department for Transport, supports a part-time workers network.

The executive agencies of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister agencies, in almost all cases, also operate a policy of advertising all posts as open to part-time workers or job sharers. All operate a range of flexible working options.

Local Government Finance

Mrs. May: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many local authorities (a) requested meetings with ministers to discuss their funding settlement for 2003–04, (b) were granted meetings with ministers as requested and (c) were refused a meeting but were subsequently called to such a meeting; [93355]

(2) what criteria were used to determine which local authorities were granted a meeting with a minister to discuss their funding settlement for 2003–04. [93356]

Mr. Leslie: The cover letter to the provisional local government finance settlement consultation paper stated that meeting requests should be received as early in the consultation process as possible and by the 20 December at the latest. We warned that it would be very difficult, if not impossible, to offer meetings to every individual authority that would ideally like one. All meetings had to take place before the end of consultation on the 14 January.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister received 51 requests before this deadline and held meetings with each of these delegations. We received nine requests for meetings after the 20 December. These were allocated on a first-come first-served basis and we were able to meet four of these delegations. No authority was refused a meeting and then subsequently called to a meeting during this consultation period.

We received a total of 385 written responses to consultation, including representations from all those who requested meetings after the deadline but whom we could not accommodate.

Local Government Finance (Somerset)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the cash reserves of (a) Taunton Deane Borough Council, (b) Somerset County Council, (c) Mendip District Council, (d) West Somerset District Council, (e) Sedgemoor District Council and (f) South Somerset District Council were in each of the last 15 years. [92183]

Mr. Raynsford: The available information, as reported by local authorities, is tabled.

Mobile Phone Masts

David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many appeals he has received from mobile phone companies to erect transmission masts in the East Riding of Yorkshire in the last 12 months; and how many appeals were upheld. [92907]

Mr. McNulty: Since 1 January 2002, for the East Riding area of Yorkshire, 12 appeals regarding the erection of telecoms masts were received, 10 of which were allowed.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2002, Official Report, column 887W, concerning neighbourhood renewal status, what guidelines are issued to or requirements made of local authorities in receipt of neighbourhood renewal status funds about expenditure of such money; and if he will make a statement. [92670]

Mrs. Roche: Guidelines for local authorities in receipt of the Neighbourhood Renewal Fund (NRF) are set out annually in a Special Grant Report.

Special Grant Report No. 93, which has been placed in the Library of the House, explains the purpose, allocations and spending conditions of NRF grant in 2002–03. The grant conditions include the requirements that: local authorities should agree the use of NRF with their Local Strategic Partnership (LSP), and they should submit my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister an annual Statement of Use, also agreed with the LSP, setting out how the grant is being spent and what impact is expected to be achieved with the grant.

(Arrangements for 2003–04 will be specified shortly, in a Special Grant Report for that year).

Payment of Bills

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what percentage of bills to his Department since May 2002 were paid (a) in accordance with agreed contractual conditions and (b) within 30 days of receiving goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice where no contractual conditions applied. [91611]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister only pays invoices which are valid and in accordance with contract conditions 96.88 per cent. of valid invoices were paid within 30 days, this is the latest figure available for the period up to 30 November 2002.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many days were lost due to sickness absence in the Department in 2002. [90532]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was established following machinery of Government changes in May 2002. The most recent 'Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service' published by the Cabinet Office and announced by Ministerial Statement on 19 December 2002 covered the calendar year 2001. Figures for 2002 will be announced in due course.

St. Oswalds Park

Mr. Dhanda: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the ODPM will release the findings of the public inquiry on Gloucester's St Oswalds Park development. [93494]

Mr. McNulty: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister has not yet received the report and recommendations from his Inspector following the Public Inquiry into the proposed development at St. Oswalds Park, Gloucester.

On receipt of the report my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will aim to make his decision as soon as possible.

Travellers Sites

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his policy is on the provision of permanent sites for travellers; and what action he will take to ensure that all local authorities provide such sites where there is a need. [93109]

Mr. McNulty: Local authorities have a power to provide Gypsy and Traveller sites within their areas.

The Government continues to issue guidelines to local authorities reminding them of their need to establish both permanent and temporary sites with adequate facilities for Gypsies and Travellers who pass through their areas on a regular basis.

In order to assist with provision, the 2003–04 round of the current Gypsy Sites Refurbishment Grant has been extended to provide funding for transit sites and emergency stopping places as well as to continue to refurbish existing sites.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will issue additional planning policy guidance to make it easier for local authorities to obtain planning permission for local authority sites for travellers. [92954]

Mr. McNulty: The procedures dealing with development undertaken by local authorities are contained in the Town and Country Planning General Regulations 1992. Guidance on the regulations is given in DOE Circular 19/92. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to issue further guidance.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he plans to impose a duty on local authorities to provide suitable sites for travellers. [92955]

Mr. McNulty: There are no current plans to reintroduce the statutory duty placed on local authorities to provide gipsy and traveller sites in their areas.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what means he plans to make available to (a) private and (b) public landowners to remove travellers from unauthorised encampments more easily if local authorities have been (i) unable and (ii) unwilling to provide suitable sites for travellers. [92956]

Mr. McNulty: The Home Office are proposing to introduce new police powers to manage unauthorised encampments, but these powers will be used only if the local authority has provided alternative site provision for gipsies and travellers.

If no alternative local authority sites are available then the existing powers under Sections 61 to 62 and 77 to 79 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 will still be available to police and local authorities to remove travellers.

Private landowners will also be able to go through the civil courts for the recovery of their land under Orders 24 and 113.

Unitary Development Plans (Affordable Housing)

Martin Linton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) how many London boroughs have (a) unitary development plans and (b) revised unitary development plans specifying in an objective or other paragraph that is not a policy what proportion of affordable housing should be provided on suitable sites. [92129]

(2) how many London boroughs have (a) unitary development plans and (b) revised unitary development plans specifying in a policy what proportion of affordable housing should be provided on suitable sites. [92130]

Mr. McNulty: Of the thirty three London Boroughs nineteen have adopted or revised but not yet adopted unitary development plans specifying in policy what proportion of affordable housing should be provided. Three have the proportion specified in supporting text. The proportions are typically expressed as ranges, minima or borough averages rather than a requirement for each site.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the targets are for numbers of refuge places for women in (a) Coventry and (b) the West Midlands, and how much refuge provision for women there is in each. [92345]

Mrs. Roche: Targets are not set centrally for refuge places for women. It is for local authorities to assess need for refuge places in their areas and to take steps to address that need. Supporting People Commissioning Bodies have recently completed shadow strategies setting out their assessment of service provision for local people, including for women experiencing domestic violence, and how they will address gaps in supply. The Government's steer to Commissioning Bodies on preparing these strategies encouraged them to give particular consideration to provision for high risk or vulnerable groups, such as women fleeing domestic violence.

Data on refuge provision was gathered in September as part of the preparations for the Supporting People programme. In Coventry, 35 household spaces in women's refuge provision for women at risk of domestic violence were recorded. In the West Midlands, 474 such spaces were recorded.

DEFENCE

Aircraft Carrier Modernisation

15. Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the procedures to be followed in the competitive bidding for the contract for aircraft carrier modernisation. [93182]

Mr. Ingram: The Future Aircraft Carrier project has utilised a Continuous Assessment process for the selection of prime contractor. This takes account of all relevant factors in order to ensure that we acquire the capability required at best value for money. Wider industrial issues are also being considered, consistent with the defence industrial policy published in the autumn. Our decision will be announced shortly.

Iraq

16. Mr. Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the assistance the US has requested for possible action in Iraq. [93183]

Mr. Hoon: As I told the House on 25 November 2002, the United States has approached a number of countries, including the United Kingdom, seeking support in the event that military action against Iraq proves necessary.

Armed Forces (Middle East)

17. Mr. Stunell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the length of time forces deployed in the middle east can remain effective. [931[illegible]]

Mr. Ingram: While we want Saddam Hussein to disarm voluntarily, it is evident that we shall not achieve this unless we continue to present him with a clear and credible threat of force. As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence told the House on Monday 20 January 2003, the United Kingdom forces being deployed to the Mediterranean and the middle east have the balance and flexibility for the tasks that might be asked of them. Exercise Saif Sareea II in Oman, towards the end of 2001, clearly demonstrated our ability to deploy United Kingdom ground forces to the middle east and sustain them there. I am confident therefore that we can sustain forces in the region for as long as necessary.

A-bomb Tests

18. Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to assess the health problems of ex-military staff subjected to radiation from A-bomb tests. [93185]

Dr. Moonie: Two epidemiological studies of some 22,000 participants of the British nuclear test programme have been carried out on the Ministry of Defence's behalf by the National Radiological Protection Board. The results of these studies were published in 1988 and 1993. They showed that, as a group, participation in the tests has had no detectable effect on the expectation of life, or on the risk of developing cancer or other fatal diseases by those who took part.

The results of a third study are to be published in a few months' time. There are no plans for any further studies.

The Ministry of Defence is aware of clinical study programmes being undertaken at various universities worldwide. We have reservations about the applicability to test participants today since any radiation exposures involved in the tests were generally very small and over 40 years ago.

Royal Navy (Gulf)

19. Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the activities of the Royal Navy in the Gulf. [93186]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently six Royal Navy and two Royal Fleet Auxiliary ships on long-planned deployments to the Gulf. The Type 42 Destroyer, HMS Cardiff, is on Armilla Patrol contributing, with other nations, to the enforcement of UN embargoes against Iraq. It is usual for a United Kingdom tanker to be deployed in the region to support the Armilla patrol. At present, RFA Bayleaf is the Armilla tanker.

The Type 22 Frigate, HMS Cumberland, is in the Gulf in support of operations against international terrorism. Four Mine Counter Measures vessels, HMS Bangor, HMS Brockelsby, HMS Blyth and HMS Sandown, together with RFA Sir Bedevere, are in the region at the invitation of the Saudi Government, made early last year, to carry out a series of joint exercises. This invitation followed on from the success of similar co-operation during Exercise Saif Sareea II. In addition, the survey vessel, HMS Roebuck, is also on a long-planned deployment to the Gulf.

Iraq (Post-conflict)

20. Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what role British troops will have in a post-conflict Iraq. [93187]

Mr. Ingram: There is no inevitability about military action against Iraq; this question is therefore hypothetical at this stage. What I can say is that we take very seriously our current and potential responsibilities towards the Iraqi people. In the aftermath of any conflict, Britain would remain at the forefront of efforts to help the Iraqi people.

US Missile Defence System

21. Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of whether the US missile defence system could protect the UK and her allies from ballistic missile attack. [93188]

Mr. Hoon: The United States missile defence programme remains evolutionary and its future architecture has still finally to be decided. The US has offered to extend missile defence coverage and make missile defence capabilities available to the United Kingdom as the evolution of the system permits, subject to appropriate political and financial arrangements. An assessment of how coverage of the UK and allies might be achieved is included in the discussion paper published by the Ministry of Defence on 9 December 2002. The UK will continue this process of assessment, not least through agreeing a technical Memorandum of Understanding with the United States to gain further insight into the missile defence programme.

First World War (Military Executions)

22. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent representations he has received on the subject of British soldiers executed after courts martial in the first world war; and what replies he has given. [93189]

Dr. Moonie: In the last six months, I have received five representations from hon. and right hon. Members and 32 from members of the public on this issue.

The position has not changed since the detailed and careful review by my right hon. Friend Dr. John Reid, the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, who announced his conclusions to this House on 24 July 1998, Official Report, columns 1372–86.

This review resulted in very important steps being taken to recognise these men as victims of the war and to draw them and their families into the nation's consciousness and remembrance. The public commemoration of these men in the National Memorial Arboretum is very fitting.

Fylingdales

23. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the use of Fylingdales for national missile defence. [93190]

Mr. Hoon: As I informed the House on 15 January 2003, the Government's preliminary conclusion is that we should agree to the US request to upgrade RAF Fylingdales for missile defence purposes. Ballistic missile early warning would continue to be the station's primary role. The upgrade would enable the radar to track incoming missiles more accurately and guide interceptions by defensive missiles if necessary. We will take full account of the views which have been expressed in public and parliamentary discussion before communicating a final decision to the US Administration.

Departmental Suppliers (Lancashire)

24. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement on suppliers to his Department based in Lancashire. [93191]

Mr. Ingram: The importance to the Ministry of Defence of our Lancashire-based suppliers is well understood. Work on defence contracts valued at many hundreds of millions of pounds is currently being carried out by well over 150 suppliers located in the county. The aerospace industry is of particular significance in the area, with BAES maintaining substantial facilities at Warton and Samlesbury. Prime contractors, together with a wide range of smaller companies supplying components and services, play an important role in equipping our Armed Forces.

Afghanistan

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, if he will make a statement on the operation of the new joint regional teams in Afghanistan. [93192]

Mr. Ingram: We welcome the recent United States announcement on the deployment of Provincial Reconstruction Teams in Afghanistan, intended to help stabilise further the Afghan regions. We are examining the role we might play in these teams, and the possibility of leading one, but no decisions have been taken.

845 Squadron

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the last three operational deployments of 845 Squadron and the length of time between them; and if he will make a statement. [92668]

Mr. Ingram: The following table lists the last three operational deployments of 845 Naval Air Squadron, the period of deployment from their parent Air Station and the length of time between each deployment:

Serial	Operational deployment/location	Period of operational deployment[1]	Length of time between operational deployment
1	Operation TELIC Location-Middle East	16 January 2003 to date	7 months 12 days (Serial 2–1)
2	Operation ORACLE Location-Middle East	11 November 2001 to 4 June 2002	10 months 10 days (Serial 3–2)
3	Operation PALATINE Location-Bosnia	11 November 1992 to 1 January 2001	17 months 8 days (Serial 4–3)
4	Operation GRANBY Location-Middle East	5 January 1991 to 3 June 1991	—

[1] The objectives contained in Royal Navy guidelines include individual personnel deployments being no longer than nine calendar months and the total deployed time in any three-year period not exceeding 18 months. There has been general adherence to these objectives

Aircraft Carriers

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of success for each of the bidders in the future aircraft carrier programme on the possibility of future co-operation with France on the construction of a new French carrier; and if he will make a statement. [93349]

Mr. Ingram: We have made no such assessment. The possibility of co-operation with France on carrier construction has not been a factor in the selection of a preferred prime contractor for the Future Aircraft Carrier programme.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has established the origin of anthrax and other vaccines washed up on the South Dorset coast; and if he will make a statement. [93167]

Dr. Moonie: The anthrax vaccine found on the South Dorset coast is from a batch produced by the centre for Applied Microbiology and Research and purchased by the Ministry of Defence in February 2001. Because ampoules from the batch were issued to a large number of units it has not yet been possible to identify how they came to be in the sea. As far as we are aware, this is the only vaccine found, although a number of other pharmaceutical products, including drugs, have been recovered. Investigations into the source of the items found are continuing.

BAE Systems

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's relationship with BAE Systems; and what assessment he has made of (a) the strengths and (b) the weaknesses of BAE Systems in delivering his Department's procurement requirements. [93205]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence has an excellent relationship with BAE Systems. The company is a key supplier to the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence. It has delivered substantial military capability over the years and I expect that it will continue to do so in the future.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the strategic significance to the UK of BAE Systems. [93206]

Mr. Hoon: BAE Systems is the largest supplier to the United Kingdom Ministry of Defence and is involved in many of our largest and most complex programmes. It is a very successful British and international company, with an excellent track record of winning overseas business. Our defence industrial policy, published in October 2002, made clear the importance the Government places on the whole of the UK defence industry.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department has been advised in 2003 of interest by a non-UK company in merging with or taking over BAE Systems. [93207]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence has not been advised of any interest by any company in merging with or taking over BAE Systems.

Battalion Deployments

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the last three operational deployments of (a) 1st Armoured Division and (b) 102 Logistics Brigade, broken down by battalion, stating in each case the length of time between operational tours. [93260]

Mr. Ingram: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Battalion Strength

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what occasions during the last five years were battalions and corps attached to other battalions and corps to bring that battalion up to strength for the purposes of operational deployment, giving in each case (a) the source and size of the attached unit and length of time attached, (b) location of deployment and (c) the length of time that the attached unit was rested before subsequent deployments. [92704]

Mr. Ingram: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Challenger

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Challenger II tanks are (a) undergoing desertification, (b) fully serviceable and (c) 1, 2, 3, 4th line inserviceable, broken down by regiment. [92133]

Mr. Ingram: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced in the House on 20 January 2003, 120 Challenger 2 tanks are to be deployed in support of current contingency planning. It is expected that all of these will be modified to improve their performance in desert conditions. In addition to the Challenger 2 tanks that we are modifying for contingency operations, consideration is being given to modifying further Challenger 2s. This decision does not in any way effect those tanks deploying, and will therefore be taken as part of the routine equipment planning process. I will write to the hon. Member with details of availability.

Clansman

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether Clansmen radios have been issued to the task force commanded by Ark Royal; and if he will make a statement. [92134]

Mr. Ingram: Clansman portable radios are carried by all Royal Navy warships, including those in the task force commanded by HMS Ark Royal.

Container Spares

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stocks of spares his Department holds for containers handling rough terrain and how many units would the Ministry of Defence currently be able to deploy on operations; and if he will make a statement. [92662]

Mr. Ingram: There are sufficient stocks of spares to support and sustain the fleet of 26 Rough Terrain Container Handlers. Arrangements are also in place with our industrial suppliers to ensure rapid re-provision as needed. There are 17 of these container handlers available for deployment now. Of the remainder three are already deployed in the Balkans, four are required to maintain essential capability in the United Kingdom and two are undergoing in-depth repair.

Contingency Plans (Iraq)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his medical contingency plans in respect of Iraq with particular reference to military hospitals, after care and convalescence contingency planning for armed forces personnel (a) not involved in Iraq, and (b) based in Iraq. [90912]

Dr. Moonie: Our medical contingency plans for Service personnel deployed to the Gulf area in the event of military action against Iraq include the provision of integrated medical support within units, dressing stations and field hospitals and, if necessary, medical evacuation back to the United Kingdom where aftercare and convalescence would be provided as appropriate. Service personnel serving elsewhere overseas and those in the UK would continue to receive medical care under existing arrangements.

Defence Reviews

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his policy is on defence reviews; and what further defence reviews are planned for the armed forces. [91038]

Mr. Hoon: The Government published the results of its comprehensive Strategic Defence Review (Cm 3999) in 1998. Following the events of 11 September 2001 we launched work to ensure that our defence policies, capabilities and force structures matched the new challenges we faced. The conclusions of this work were published in the SDR New Chapter (Cm 5566) in July 2002.

In announcing the publication of the new Chapter and the allocation of increased resources to defence in the Spending Review, I said that this provided a "mandate for accelerating the modernisation and evolution of the Armed Forces" Official Report, column 462. The capabilities and force structures of the Armed Forces must continue to evolve in the direction set by the New Chapter. I intend to publish a Defence White Paper later this year. This will provide an updated statement of Defence policy and explain in detail our plans for modernising the delivery of enhanced defence capability.

Departmental Buildings

Mr. Bacon: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the professional fees were to each payee for the redevelopment of his Department's main building, broken down by (a) his Department and (b) the PFI contractor. [93403]

Mr. Ingram: The total professional fees (excluding VAT) paid by the Ministry of Defence to each payee to date are as follows:

Total professional fees (excluding VAT) paid by the Ministry of Defence to each payee to date

Payee	Profession	Fee
IBM Business Consulting Services (formerly Pricewaterhouse Coopers)	Financial Advice and Management/Administration Team	5.62 million
DEGW	Architects and Space Planning	1.51 million
Waterman Partnerships	Structured Engineers	0.47 million
Bernard Williams Associates	Cost Consultants and Facility Management Specialists	0.47
DTZ	Town Planners	0.18
Roger Preston and Partners	Mechanical, Electrical Engineers, IT Infrastructure	0.64
Bovis Program Management	Construction and Programming	0.65 million
Herbert Smith	Legal Advice	2.12 million

Fees paid by the PFI Contractor are a matter for Modus Services plc (the PFI contractor).

Eurofighter

Mr. Carmichael: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what criteria were applied in selecting areas of airspace suitable for testing the Eurofighter; what consultation was carried out with local communities; and what steps he is taking to monitor nuisance caused by test flights. [91153]

Mr. Ingram: The Eurofighter aircraft requires large areas of airspace in which to train. Following a review of current allocation of air space, the National Air Traffic Control Services and the Ministry of Defence have therefore agreed to redesignate airspace over the North Sea. Three large managed areas have been designated which, when required, may be "booked" and used for military training. Only the most northerly designated training area covers any land, and within this area all flights will be conducted above 24,500ft. Under Government guidelines public consultation regarding the use of airspace is not required except where flight takes place below 7,000ft.

The conduct of military flying is taken extremely seriously and any complaints are thoroughly investigated by the Ministry of Defence. Particular rules govern supersonic flight and these will continue to be strictly enforced.

European Procurement Projects

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what progress has been made to help deliver major European collaborative procurement projects on schedule. [93175]

Mr. Ingram: We remain committed to maximising the benefits that can be derived from collaborative defence equipment programmes. The smart acquisition initiative stresses the need to predict and plan against those issues that have the potential to cause delay. This aims to ensure that risks and opportunities are addressed before we commit to new co-operative programmes. More generally, the development of the international agency OCCAR continues to be an important part of our aim to provide an effective route for the management of defence equipment collaborative programmes.

Exercises and Operational Deployments

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which (a) exercises and (b) operational deployments were undertaken during (i) 2001, (ii) 2002 and (iii) 2003 by (A) HQ3 Commando Brigade, (B) 40 Commando Royal Marines and (C) 42 Commando Royal Marines; and if he will make a statement. [92798]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 23 January 2003]: In 2001, HQ 3 Commando Brigade Royal Marines took part in Exercises, ROLLING DEEP, JMC 01, ARGONAUT 01 and SAIF SAREEA 2 and were operationally deployed to Kosovo. 40 Commando Royal Marines took part in Exercises DRUIDS DANCE, ROLLING DEEP, ARGONAUT 01 and SAIF SAREEA 2 and were operationally deployed to Afghanistan. 42 Commando Royal Marines took part in the WINTER Deployment, Exercises TARTAN RELIEF, FASTBALL and BLACKHORSE and were operationally deployed to Sierra Leone.

In 2002, 40 Cdo who took part in Exercise BLACKHORSE were operationally deployed to Afghanistan, as were HQ 3 Cdo Bde RM. 42 Cdo RM were operationally deployed to Northern Ireland.

Currently 40 Cdo are deployed with Naval Task Group 03 and will undertake training exercises in the Eastern Mediterranean. There have been no operational deployments in 2003.

HMS Ocean (Helicopters)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many helicopters, of which type, are aboard HMS Ocean. [92664]

Mr. Ingram: As at 20 January 2003 the following helicopters aboard HMS Ocean were:

Helicopter	Total
Sea King HC Mk4	10
Lynx AH Mk 7	6
Gazelle AH Mkl	6

HMS Sussex

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how he plans to safeguard the archaeological integrity of HMS Sussex. [93176]

Dr. Moonie: The project has been developed on the basis of archaeological best practice in deep water condition. An Independent Monitoring Panel of archaeologists, with the participation of English Heritage, has been set up to review the Project Plan. The agreement with the contractor provides for official observers to be present during the whole exploration and recovery process at sea and to oversee the arrangements and standards of conservation work ashore.

Military Clothing

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what stocks his Department holds of (a) desert boots, (b) desert clothing and (c) Combat 95 clothing; and if he will make a statement. [92136]

Mr. Ingram: As at 17 January 2003 we held, in central stocks: 16,300 pairs of desert combat boots; 30,800 pairs of desert trousers and 24,000 desert jackets; and 262,986 lightweight jackets, 399,902 pairs of combat trousers and 220,877 field jackets.

Information on unit level holdings of these items is not held centrally. Contracts have been placed to ensure the supply of sufficient desert boots, desert jackets and desert trousers. Our normal requirement is to hold sufficient stocks of desert boots and clothing to kit to scale the Joint Rapid Reaction Force.

Mobility

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress made since 1997 in (a) making British forces more mobile and (b) increasing their ability to contribute to international peace and security. [91855]

Mr. Hoon: The Strategic Defence Review recognised that conflict prevention, peace support, and crisis management require a powerful force that is capable of immediate and, if necessary, sustained operations. It established the concept of Joint Rapid Reaction Forces to provide more capable, more deployable, and better supported Joint Forces. The initial operating capability was achieved in 1999, and elements have been deployed successfully both on operations and exercises. 16 Air Assault brigade, also formed in 1999, combines airborne and air mobile assets with, in the future, the new attack helicopter, and provides a further significant enhancement to our tactical mobility.

In addition, the lease of four C17 aircraft in 2001, followed by the introduction of the A400M at the end of the decade, the procurement of a new Strategic Sealift Service of six RoRo vessels through a PFI-type contract in 2000, the provision of an interim strategic sealift capability through commercial charters until this new service is fully available (currently expected to be late this year); and the ordering of four new Bay class Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliary)s expected to enter service before the end of 2005, all represent a significant enhancement to the current and future mobility of our Armed Forces.

The ability of the United Kingdom's Armed Forces to contribute to international peace and security has consistently been demonstrated throughout the period since 1997, most recently in peace support operations in Sierra Leone and in Afghanistan.

Morale

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how Army personnel when last questioned described the morale of (a) themselves, (b) their working group, (c) their unit and (d) the Army as a whole; how many people responded; what percentage responded to each option asked; and if he will make a statement. [92147]

Dr. Moonie: On the basis of responses to a Continuous Attitude Survey (CAS) carried out in April/May 2002, the numbers of Army personnel expressing an opinion about their morale, that of their working group, that of their unit and that of the Army as a whole, are as given in the following Of 3,978 surveys issued, 1,867 (47 per cent.) completed forms had been returned at time of analysis.

Morale of themselves:

	Low		Neither high nor low		High
Officers	36	10%	85	23%	245	67%
Soldiers	247	16%	413	28%	826	56%

Note:

99 per cent. (1,852) of those replying responded to this question.

Morale of their working group:

	Low		Neither high nor low		High
Officers	40	11%	126	35%	196	54%
Soldiers	358	24%	542	37%	585	39%

Note:

99 per cent. (1,847) of those replying responded to this question.

Morale of their unit:

	Low		Neither high nor low		High
Officers	58	16%	152	42%	153	42%
Soldiers	461	31%	577	39%	434	30%

Note:

98 per cent. (1,835) of those replying responded to this question.

Morale of the Army:

	Low		Neither high nor low		High
Officers	88	25%	184	52%	83	23%
Soldiers	499	36%	634	45%	273	19%

Note:

94 per cent. (1,761) of those replying responded to this question.

NBC Equipment

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many NBC suits are (a) issued to personnel and (b) in stock; and if he will make a statement. [92135]

Mr. Ingram: There are sufficient stocks of NEC suits to meet our contingency plans. I am withholding the information relating to the quantities held, under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Operation Fresco

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service people have been given warning orders for both Operation Fresco and possible operations in Iraq. [92804]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 23 January 2003]: Over time it has been necessary to make adjustments to the forces allocated to Operation Fresco to ensure that those units that may be required for contingent operations elsewhere were available for duty. Most recently, elements of 16 Air Assault Brigade have been withdrawn from Operation Fresco in a phased manner as they have been assigned for potential future military action in Iraq. Consequently, there are no forces assigned concurrently to both Operation Fresco and possible operations in Iraq.

Redundant Weapons

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many redundant weapons there were in each year since 1997; and what the nature was of those weapons. [93575]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested will take some time to compile, therefore I will write to the hon Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of theHouse.

Richard Younger-Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how redundant weapons are disposed of. [93576]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence disposes of significant amounts of munitions annually for a variety of reasons including that they become unserviceable or surplus to requirements. The United Kingdom approved methods are by burning, detonation, dilution by solvent and chemical destruction. MOD employs the first two methods. Small quantities are disposed of in licensed demolition grounds on MOD property. Large quantities of ammunition are normally disposed of under civilian contract either in the UK or abroad.

Reservists' Pensions

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether the pensions rights of individuals in their main job are protected during periods of service as an armed forces reservist; and if he will make a statement. [93342]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has arrangements in place to ensure that reservists who are called-out for permanent service with the armed forces are not disadvantaged in pension terms.

Individuals may have a number of pension options dependent on their personal circumstances. Those individuals who wish to remain in their civilian pension scheme during their period of called-out service can do so and the MOD will meet the cost of the employer contribution to the pension scheme. Alternatively, individuals may opt to have the period of their called-out service covered by MOD's full time reserve service pension arrangements, or they can opt to be contracted-in to the state pension arrangements (state second pension). Those individuals who have previous service that gave them pension rights under the Armed Forces Pension Scheme (AFPS) may opt for an enhancement to their AFPS pension rights.

Royal Marines

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the main current deployments of the Royal Marines. [92895]

Mr. Ingram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave today to the hon. Member for Hereford (Mr. Keetch).

Royal Navy

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what modifications his Department has made to (a) Royal Naval and (b) Royal Marines tactical doctrine since 11 September 2001. [92901]

Mr. Ingram: Following 11 September 2001 the increased danger from terrorist organisations to the Royal Navy (including the Royal Marines) has been recognised and work undertaken to ameliorate the risks to both deployed forces and those in their base port. Detailed Force Protection advice on countering the Asymmetric threat from terrorist attack is available in both Tactical and Reference publications and is the subject of continual assessment and periodic update as new information and feedback is obtained. This doctrine comprises both a generic description of likely threats and consideration of numerous measures that Commanding Officers need to consider adopting depending on their area of operations. The advice covers methods of reducing ship and personnel vulnerability to attack, enabling Commanding Officers to formulate a defensive posture commensurate with their operational state and location; reducing the risk of attack from an enemy who holds the advantage of surprise and method.

When ashore, RM tactical doctrine follows Land (Army) tactical doctrine. Events since 11 September 2001 have not forced modifications to existing doctrine but lessons identified in operations since, by the Army and RM, are undergoing evaluation in order to capture them, as necessary.

Service Personnel (Gulf)

Mr. Paul Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what contingency plans he has made to replace the troops on their way to the Gulf; which troops from which units and regiments would be used; and if he will make a statement; [93259]

(2) what the maximum amount of time is that he estimates 30,000 soldiers could be maintained at a high level of readiness in the Gulf before rotating personnel. [93261]

Mr. Hoon: We continue to hope that Saddam Hussein will disarm voluntarily but it is evident that we will not persuade him to do so unless we present him with a clear and credible threat of force. No decision has been taken to commit British forces to military action, nor is such a decision inevitable or imminent. It is therefore premature to speculate about the duration of military deployments or about the rotation or replacement of those forces involved.

Shipping (Terrorists)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures are in place to protect (a) merchant and (b) naval shipping from terrorist attack. [91235]

Mr. Ingram: The threat from terrorist attack is kept under constant review and the Ministry of Defence works closely with other Government Departments on the protection of merchant shipping. The Royal Navy's worldwide Maritime Trade Operations—known as UK MTO arrangements—enable a number of options to be offered in support of merchant shipping, graduated to the prevailing threat. These range from the provision of routine advice and guidance through to naval supervision. The appropriate level of MTO support required in a given area remains under constant assessment. For example, UK MTO arrangements in the Gulf have been enhanced since October 2001 by the establishment of a UK MTO liaison cell in the region. If necessary, higher level Maritime Trade Operations can be implemented very quickly. Information on specific measures to protect naval shipping were provided in my answer to the hon. Member on 15 January, Official Report, column 640W.

Turkey

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what numerical restrictions there are under the CFE Treaty on deployments of armed forces to Turkey. [92532]

Mr. Ingram: The Conventional Armed Forces in Europe (CFE) treaty limits the numbers of conventional armaments and equipment in Europe in five categories:

armoured combat vehicles

artillery pieces

combat aircraft, and

attack helicopters.

Numerical limits for the armaments and equipment apply within the area of application of the CFE treaty, which covers the entire land territory of the States Parties in Europe from the Atlantic Ocean to the Ural Mountains. In the case of the Republic of Turkey, an area in the south-east of Turkey bordering the non-CFE states of Syria, Iraq and Iran is excluded from the area of application.

Furthermore, the Republic of Turkey lies within a specifically defined CFE zone, commonly known as the flank zone. Within this zone additional numerical limitations apply with regard to temporary deployments of conventional armaments and equipment. In the area of application of the CFE treaty these are:

153 battle tanks

241 armoured combat vehicles, and

140 pieces of artillery.

Deployments of combat aircraft and attack helicopters are not numerically limited, nor is the number of personnel. There are also no restrictions on naval forces under the CFE treaty.

UN Peacekeeping Missions

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact on the operational effectiveness of British contingents in UN peacekeeping missions of the deployment of forces to the Gulf. [92953]

Mr. Ingram: We do not expect the deployment forces to the Gulf to affect the operational effectiveness of British contingents in UN peacekeeping missions.

Urgent Operational Requirement Orders

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what orders in excess of £500,000 his Department has placed for urgent operational requirements in the last three months. [92508]

Mr. Ingram: About 90 Urgent Operational Requirements for in excess of 500,000 have been approved in the last three months. These will, inter alia, accelerate already funded programmes, address many of the lessons identified in Exercise SAEF SAREEA II (including Challenger 2 and AS90 desertisation), enhance medical support, maximise interoperability with coalition allies and improve our secure communications capability.

Vaccines

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the take-up of anthrax vaccination among troops preparing to deploy to the Middle East. [91821]

Dr. Moonie: Immunisation against anthrax is just one component of the range of defensive capabilities available to our Armed Forces which protect them against, and enable them to respond to, chemical and biological threats. These include detectors, warning and reporting systems, physical protection including respirators, decontamination equipment and procedures, and other medical counter measures such as antibiotics. We have assembled a package of information and education materials which we hope will encourage Service personnel to take advantage of the additional protection that immunisation against anthrax provides. We are confident that the majority of personnel now deploying to the Gulf will opt to receive immunisations against anthrax, and expect take-up to improve further as the programme expands.

Wheeled Support Vehicles

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems have arisen in the evaluation of the bids for the contract for the new wheeled support vehicles; how near these are to resolution; and if he will make a statement. [91872]

Mr. Ingram: No problems have arisen, but evaluation of the tenders received in June 2002 for the Support Vehicle contract concluded that more information was needed on some aspects of the solution put forward by the bidders to enable a decision to be taken on which proposal represents best value for money. All four bidders have been invited to participate in a further round of tendering and responses are due on 22 January 2003. A further period of evaluation will then take place. An announcement on the award of a contract is planned for late 2003.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Child Benefit

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how much has been spent on child benefit for 16 to 19-year-olds in each year since 1997. [90915]

Malcolm Wicks: Entitlement to child benefit between the ages of 16 and 18 is dependent on the child staying on in full-time education—up to and including GCE 'A' level or equivalent. Entitlement ceases when the child reaches 19 years of age or when the child leaves full-time education, if earlier.

Estimated expenditure on child benefit, including the higher rate payable to some lone parents, for 16 to 18-year-olds since 1997 is as follows:

Estimated child benefit expenditure (inc. lone parent addition) for 16 to 18-year-olds

Final Salary Pension Schemes

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent discussions he has had with business representatives concerning the provision of final salary pension schemes [92828]

Mr. McCartney: My right hon Friend met with representatives of the Confederation of British Industry in September and November last year to discuss pensions.

As part of the consultation exercise on the pensions Green Paper Simplicity, Security and Choice, my right. hon Friend and ministerial colleagues will be attending a number of events to which employer organisations are being invited.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the effect of closing a final salary pension scheme upon a firm's financial risk. [92829]

Mr. McCartney: When employers close their defined benefit schemes, they are seeking to put a limit on the long term liabilities of the company. Given the nature of these liabilities, however, closure is unlikely to have an immediate or even necessarily a short term impact. This is because the existing liabilities will still have to be met for the continuing life of the scheme irrespective of whether new members are being accepted. The Green Paper 'Simplicity, security and choice: working and saving for retirement' (Cm5677) sets out the Government's view that, for this and other reasons, closing or winding up pension schemes are not in the interests of either employers or employees. The Green Paper, therefore, sets out a range of proposals to simplify the regulatory regime for pensions, which could save employers £150 to £200 million a year in administration, and thus make it easier for employers to continue to provide final salary schemes and other types of pension arrangements for their employees. We have launched a wide ranging consultation in which we are seeking views on this approach including its impact on employers.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what measures he is taking to strengthen the rights of employees in relation to final salary pension schemes. [91942]

Mr. McCartney: I refer the hon. Member to my written answer of 13 January 2003, Official Report, volume 397, columns 361–62W.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the impact of proposals in the Pensions Green Paper on the rate of closure of final salary schemes. [93055]

Mr. McCartney: The Green Paper 'Simplicity, security and choice: working and saving for retirement' (Cm5677), published on 17 December 2002, sets out the Government's strategy to encourage and support employers providing and contributing to good quality pension schemes through provision of a regulatory framework. The Green Paper,, therefore, sets out a range of proposals to simplify the regulatory regime for pensions, which could save employers £150-£200 million a year in administration, and thus make it easier for employers to continue to provide final salary schemes and other types of pension arrangements for their employees. We have launched a wide ranging consultation in which we are seeking views on this approach including its impact on employers.

Guaranteed Minimum Pensions

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the cost of commuting all entitlements to guaranteed minimum pensions to entitlements to SERPS at the rate used to make such commutations in 1997. [92184]

Mr. McCartney: This information is not currently available. However, relevant work on the costs of guaranteed minimum pensions is currently being undertaken as part of the follow-up to the Green Paper "Simplicity—Security and Choice: Working and saving for retirement" published (Cm5677) on 17 December 2002. I will place the information in the Library once this is available.

Automated Credit Transfer

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) when each benefit will begin to be paid by automated credit transfer; [91285]

(2) in what sequence state retirement pensions will be transferred to payment by automated credit transfer. [91287]

Mr. McCartney: For some time now the Department has been able to pay benefits into a bank or building society account.

We have started to write to customers to request their account details as part of the move to direct payment. People will start to be paid this way rather than by paper-based methods from April 2003. We started with some Child Benefit and Veterans Agency customers, and will begin to contact people in receipt of Retirement Pension from the end of January.

The conversion exercise will be completed by 2005.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if the migration of each benefit case load to automated credit transfer will take place on a common date. [91286]

Malcolm Wicks: The conversion exercise from paper based methods of payment to direct payment into a bank or building society accounts will be phased. It began in October 2002 when we started to write out to some Veterans Agency and Child Benefit customers to request their account details. Payment into accounts will start from April 2003.

Other benefits will be phased in from January this year and the whole exercise is due to be completed in 2005.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when automated credit transfer invitation letters will be sent out to each type of benefit recipient. [91288]

Malcolm Wicks: The first invitation letters were issued to some Veterans Agency and Child Benefit customers in October 2002. The first invitation letters for Retirement Pension will be issued later this month. The invitation process for customers in receipt of working age benefits will begin from March 2003. We will start to invite other benefit recipients from July 2003.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on his Department's policy on fraud in the payment of benefit through post offices; and what plans he has to protect against fraud when the post office card account is introduced. [88245]

Malcolm Wicks: Paper-based instruments of payment can be vulnerable to fraudulent attack in a number of ways: they can go astray in the post, be lost or stolen, or be manipulated or counterfeited by a determined fraudster. We estimate that total benefit and pension losses from paper-based instruments of payment fraud in 2000–01 were around £77 million.

We have several measures in place to counter fraud, such as the Order Book Control System (OBCS). This makes use of barcode readers in post offices to scan order books that have been printed with a barcode on the front cover. OBCS alerts the post office clerk when a stop notice has been placed on an order book and instructs them to impound the book immediately. Crucially, the stop notice is activated in whatever post office the book is presented for payment and not only in the customer's designated post office. This helps to ensure that order books reported lost or stolen are not cashed, but instead impounded.

Introducing direct payment into a bank, building society or post office card account as the normal method of benefit payment for the Department's customers will result in significant savings to public funds. It is a much more secure method of payment. Work is on-going to develop a more secure method of payment to replace existing order books and girocheques for those customers who cannot or choose not to be paid by direct payment.

The post office card account is a Post Office product and detailed operational questions are the responsibility of the chief executive for the Post Office. However, the Department's officials will continue to work in close co-operation with the Post Office to ensure that the card account is as secure as possible.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what instructions he has given to his staff who are dealing with the programme for migrating benefit payments from order book to direct bank credit, for responding to benefit recipients who express a wish to receive payment in cash via a Post Office card account. [90653]

Malcolm Wicks: All DWP staff who deal with customers will receive training about Direct Payment. This will highlight to staff the options that are available to customers who are transferring from a girocheque or order book to payment into an account. This will include the option to have payments made into a Post Office card account which can be collected from a Post Office branch.

Benefits (Direct Payment)

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions he has had with (a) postmasters and (b) the National Federation of Sub-postmasters on the introduction of direct payment of benefits into bank accounts. [91078]

Malcolm Wicks: Department of Trade and Industry Ministers meet the National Federation of Sub-postmasters (NFSP) on a regular basis. Officials from this Department and the Department of Trade and Industry also meet with the NFSP. The Post Office meet with individual postmasters to discuss the move to Direct Payment.

Benefits Agency (Fraud)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many Benefits Agency staff have been found to have committed fraud in each of the last five years. [92506]

Malcolm Wicks: The figures are an extract from the Departmental annual returns to HM Treasury on internal fraud, and show the number of Benefits Agency staff that have been found to have committed fraud in each year since 1997.

A breakdown by agency for 1997–98 is not available, and the figure given is the total for the then Department of Social Security.

Benefits agency staff that have been found to have committed fraud in each year since 1997

	Total DSS figure
1997–98	189
1998–99	112
1999–2000	139
2000–01	65
2001–02	128

Although technically defined as fraud cases for HM Treasury reporting purposes, many of the cases above involve little or no financial loss e.g. unauthorised use of software, or trading on official premises.

While these types of case are treated seriously, and disciplinary action inevitably follows, each case is treated individually and penalties therefore vary considerably, from an oral warning to dismissal, prosecution and custodial sentencing.

Cash Savings

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list for each year since 1997 his estimate of the average cash savings held by families on low incomes. [91982]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is not available. The Department's Family Resources Survey provides information on savings, however data are not available for average amounts of savings because this information is not collected for all respondents.

Child Care Costs

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what the basis is for his policy that a couple who are both in receipt of benefits where one receives invalidity or incapacity benefit and the other jobseeker allowance, are not eligible for child care costs when the parent on jobseeker allowance joins the Government New Deal and Training for Work programmes. [88601]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The Department does not have a policy to refuse help with child care for a couple who are both in receipt of benefits, one on incapacity benefits and the other on jobseeker's allowance, when the latter joins the New Deal. The child care arrangements for people in these circumstances are as follows.

Within the New Deal for Young People and New Deal 25 plus programmes, child care costs can be met where there is a genuine need and the individual would otherwise be unable to participate in a New Deal option or Intensive Activity Period. New Deal Personal Advisers decide on a person's eligibility for help with child care costs based on that individual's particular circumstances.

Under New Deal 50 plus, a person starting work receives financial support through 52 weekly payments (Employment Credit) to help them during the transitional period between benefit and work. It is up to the individual whether they use this money to help meet child care costs.

Jobseekers in Scotland may also be entitled to child care costs when applying for Training for Work. The Training for Work programme is the responsibility of the Scottish Executive. It is delivered by Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise who have discretion to fund child care costs for participants.

Child Poverty

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) if he will list for each year since 1997 the change in (a) numbers and (b) percentage of those children taken out of poverty; [91995]

(2) if he will list for each year since 1992 the percentage of children living in households below the poverty line. [91994]

Malcolm Wicks: Poverty is a complex and multidimensional problem. We published 'Opportunity for all—Fourth Annual Report' (Cm 5598) in September 2002, which contains information on a range of indicators of poverty for children and young people.

We expect to publish the preliminary conclusions of our consultation on Measuring Child Poverty in spring 2003.

Child Support

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he intends to evaluate the outcomes of the child support reforms IT system testing. [91295]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave the hon. Member for Galloway and Upper Nithsdale (Mr. Duncan) on 27 November 2002, Official Report, column 317 W.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many CSA cases were referred to the Independent Case Examiner in the last year; what the average time taken to determine each case; what and how many complaints were upheld. [88155]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is in the table.

Further information is available in the Independent Case Examiner's Annual Report for 2001–02, a copy of which is available in the Library.

April 2001-March 2002

Notes:

1. Complaints are only classified as fully, partially or not upheld if they cannot be resolved through conciliation between the client and the Child Support Agency.
2. It may be of interest for you to know that we are advised by the Agency that at the end of November 2002, the Agency's live and assessed caseload was 1,088,920.
3. Figures are in thousands and rounded to the nearest hundred.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if it is his intention to transfer the existing Child Support Agency caseload onto the new scheme on a single common date. [91296]

Malcolm Wicks: Current plans envisage that existing cases will be converted to the new scheme on a common date. Where it emerges that a new application for child support maintenance is linked to an existing case, for example, because the non-resident parent is the same person in both cases, then the existing case will be transferred to the new scheme early.

Clergy

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what effect changes proposed in the recent Green Paper on retirement would have on the retirement age of clergy. [90570]

Mr. Bell: I have been asked to reply.

Currently the majority of Church of England clergy must retire on reaching 70, under the Ecclesiastical Offices (Age Limit) Measure 1975. Since the Government is still consulting on how the Employment Directive—to which Chapter 6 of the Green Paper refers—should be implemented as regards discrimination on grounds of age, it is not yet possible to say what its effect will be and whether changes will be required to the 1975 Measure.

However, since most clergy choose to retire before reaching 70, I do not envisage significant effect in practice on the retirement age of clergy.

Computers

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions pursuant to his answer, ref. 88450, on the cost of new PCs installed in his Department, if he will provide a breakdown of the figure of £156.7 million into the cost of the (a) machines, (b) software and (c) network; how many machines were installed; what the average cost of each machine was; and if he will provide a breakdown of the figure of £58.5 million for installation costs, indicating what services were provided in relation to the installation of the machines. [89919]

Mr. McCartney: By 30 November 2002 the Department for Work and Pensions had installed 100,120 workstations (desktops and laptops) along with the associated software, smart card readers, printers, servers and switches.

The £156.7 million capital expenditure up to 30 November 2002 is broken down as follows.

	£ million
Desktops	85.2
Laptops	7.5
Printers	11.1
Software	18.2
Servers	24.0
Network Switches	10.7

The cost of a desktop workstation (including base unit, monitor, and keyboard) has been negotiated down from £838 to £804 during the course of rollout. The specification has also improved with each bulk order.

The £58.5 million installation costs are covered by two contracts with suppliers. The detailed breakdown of costs is commercially sensitive information which could enable suppliers to gain an advantage in pricing negotiations. Such information is not disclosed under part 2, paragraph 13 of the Code of Practice an Access to Government Information. However, the services provided are delivery, on-site allocation and testing, disposal and warehousing, implementation management, ordering, work scheduling, planning, central support, migration of data, network connection, on-site management and problem resolution.

Departmental Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; and if he will list such assets; and if he will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92402]

Mr. McCartney: No sales of heritage or antique assets have been made by the Department for Work and Pensions since May 1997.

Disability Living Allowance

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many deaf people were provided with a qualified British Sign Language interpreter when attending a medical assessment for disability living allowance in each year since 1997. [92720]

Maria Eagle [holding answer 23 January 2003]: The information requested is not available. SchlumbergerSema Medical Services do not keep records of the numbers of requests made for a Sign Language interpreter to attend at medical assessments. All customers are informed of the availability of interpreter services on request.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many disability living allowance awards have been made for which deafness is the main disability condition, broken down by (a) age and (b) type of award, including (i) care only component, (ii) mobility only component and (iii) combined care and mobility components. Disability Living Allowance (Deaf Recipients)

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many disability living allowance recipients, whose main disabling condition is deafness, are aged between (a) 0 to 16 years and (b) 16 to 64 years and live in (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) Scotland. [92811]

Disability Living Allowance (Fraud)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what investigations were (a) undertaken and (b) completed in 2002 into fraud in disability living allowance claims. [93559]

Malcolm Wicks: During 2001–02, a total of 2,021 disability living allowance benefit fraud cases were investigated, and of these, 1,172 resulted in identification of an overpayment. In addition, a total of 404 disability living allowance instrument of payment fraud cases were investigated, and of these, 229 resulted in identification of an overpayment.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his assessment is of the level of fraud and the amount of money defrauded in disability living allowance in 2002. [93561]

Malcolm Wicks: The most recent assessment of the level of fraud in disability living allowance found confirmed fraud in 1.5 per cent. of cases. This equates to approximately £78 million per year.

European Year of Disabled People

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many regional and local projects to be funded as part of the European Year of Disabled People are based in (a) the Scottish Borders and (b) Scotland. [92624]

Maria Eagle: Of the 171 projects in the UK, 22 are based in Scotland. There are no projects based in the Scottish Borders but three of the 22 projects cover the whole of Scotland and will therefore benefit the Scottish Borders.

Fair Trade Criteria

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what fair trade criteria he sets when deciding upon what suppliers to use. [89915]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary on 9 December 2002, Official Report, column 92W, which sets out the Government-wide position.

The Department for Work and Pensions is committed to fair trade and ethical supply routes. There are no prescribed fair trade criteria, and each contract is considered individually on its merits in line with EC procurement regulations and Government policy regarding value for money. However, our supply policy is that supply decisions must be based on a balanced assessment of benefits which must include value for money and ethical issues across the whole supply chain. This policy allows individual procurement exercises to set the right criteria, including fair trade criteria, that are appropriate to the business requirement and the commodity or service being procured.

Income Support

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how many people in receipt of income support have full refugee status; [89111]

(2) how many non-UK citizens who have been granted exceptional leave to remain in the United Kingdom are in receipt of income support; [89112]

(3) how many non-UK citizens are in receipt of income support by reason of their status of having suffered a recent upheaval in their country. [89118]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available.

Nationals from a country which my right hon. Friend, the Home Secretary, has declared a "country of upheaval" may claim asylum in this country. Asylum seekers no longer have access to income-related benefits, such as Income Support, as the National Asylum Support Service now deals with any claim for financial support.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many persons have claimed the minimum income guarantee in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in each year since 1997. [93087]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available relates to the number of people receiving Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) and is shown in the table.

Minimum Income Guarantee (Pensioners)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners have benefited from the minimum income guarantee in (a) Coventry and (b) West Midlands. [92346]

Mr. McCartney: As at August 2002 there were 13,700 people benefiting from the Minimum Income Guarantee in Coventry and 219,800 in the West Midlands region.

New Deal

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what number and proportion of those on each option of the New Deal for Young People and for those aged over 25 years went into a sustained job, in the most recent period for which figures are available. [90373]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information is in the tables.

New Deal for young people (from January 1998 to September 2002)

Stage of leaving	Number of people leaving the New Deal	Number who left New Deal for a sustained, unsubsidised job[1]	Proportion of leavers who moved into a sustained, unsubsidised job (per cent.)
From the gateway	429,500	187,400	43.6
After entering each option:

Voluntary sector	58,700	18,900	32.2
Environment Task Force	56,700	17,400	30.7

In addition to these job outcomes, we know from survey findings that around 56 per cent. of young people who leave the New Deal for unknown destinations do, in fact, find work.

Pre-April 2001 New Deal 25 plus (from July 1998 to September 2002)

In April 2001, New Deal 25 plus was extended and enhanced to provide a flexible, more individually-tailored service to help more people get jobs and remain in them. This included the introduction of an Intensive Activity Period (IAP) for participants after an initial Gateway period. The IAP provides a wider package of tailored help, which might combine, for example, work experience, work-focused training, help with motivation and soft skills, and help with job search. From April 2001, all those eligible for New Deal 25 plus joined this re-engineered programme.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether the changes to the priority order for winding up occupational pensions proposed in his Pensions Green Paper will apply retrospectively. [illegible]3056]

Mr. McCartney: Changing the priority order would increase protection on winding up for some scheme members but others would receive less. This being the case, we do not currently propose to introduce regulations on a retrospective basis because, for some, this would mean reducing pension already promised or in payment.

However, this is a difficult and complex area and we will look very carefully at it during the consultation on the Pensions Green Paper.

Payments Programme

Sir Archy Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, if he will make a statement on the results of the recent review of the modernisation of the payments programme. [86704]

Malcolm Wicks: The gated review process within the Department allows for a number of formal reviews. The Payment Modernisation Programme successfully navigated through the Operational Readiness Review approval gateway during September and October.

This enabled the Programme to commence the first phase in the move towards Direct Payment, including mailings sent to Veterans Agency customers from 7 October and Child Benefit customers from 28 October 2002.

Pensions

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the change as a percentage of gross domestic product in spending on pensions necessary to bring the average pension in the United Kingdom in line with that in (a) the Netherlands, (b) the USA, (c) Australia, (d) Japan, (e) Italy, (f) Germany, (g) France, (h) Sweden and (i) the average in the EU. [90124]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information that is available is set out in the following table.

Comparable cross-country data on public and private pensions expenditure are available only for European Union countries. According to data produced by Eurostat, the highest rate of old-age pension expenditure per capita is in the UK.

Expenditure on old age pensions at 1995 constant prices (index of EU average 1990 = 100) per head (population over 65)

France	111
Germany	102
Italy	113
Netherlands	108
Sweden	—
UK	134
EU-15	114

Notes:

1. Production of comparable cross-country estimates is extremely difficult due to substantially different rules in various countries. Eurostat say about their numbers:

"This indicator is not perfect. Old-age pensions may cover different areas in different countries, and the retirement age differs from country to country (for both the legal age and the effective age)."

However, Eurostat's: "European Social Statistics—Social Protection Expenditure and Receipts" (ESSPROS) is regarded as the best available measure.

2. The definition of pensions in the ESSPROS methodology includes basic and supplementary schemes, sometimes known as first-pillar and second pillar schemes, but excludes third-pillar arrangements, for example personal pensions in the UK. The ESSPROS pensions aggregate comprises of only part of periodic cash benefits under the disability, old-age, survivors and unemployment functions in ESSPROS.

3. In the case of the UK, the pensions aggregate recorded in ESSPROS comprises of benefits payable under the disability, old-age and survivors' functions and occupational pensions. It excludes lump-sum benefits payable on retirement (approximately 0.7 per cent. of GDP in 1999). Personal pensions are also not included in the ESSPROS social protection definition of pensions (approximately 1.5 per cent. of GDP in 1999).

4. Data are not available for Sweden.

Post Office Card Accounts

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what information the Government's public information campaign on the payment and banking options available for benefit customers has disseminated, with particular reference to the personal invitation documents for the Post Office card account. [91134]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government's information campaign, to support the move to Direct Payment, provides customers with factual information on the banking options available to them, including information on the Post Office card account. The information is presented in a way that enables customers to decide which option is best for their individual circumstances. Customers who want to open a Post Office card account are advised to contact the Department for Work and Pensions, who will issue them with a personal invitation document.

Prosecuting and Charging Standards

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will place in the Library the code for prosecutors and charging standards used by his Department when acting as a prosecuting authority. [88472]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Departmental officials follow the Code for Crown Prosecutors when taking the decision to prosecute and deciding what charges should be brought. The code is issued by the Director of Public Prosecutions under section 10 of the Prosecution of Offences Act 1985, and a copy is available in the Library.

Public-private Partnerships

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many departmental Minutes issued by his Department were outstanding on 30 November 2002 that referred to public-private partnerships, as included in Table B14 of the Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts; and what their value was. [89417]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 13 January 2003]: There were no departmental Minutes outstanding on 30 November 2002 that refer to public-private partnerships, as included in Table B14 of the Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts.

Racial Harassment

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what rights victims of alleged racial harassment in the workplace have to paid legal representation in employment tribunals. [91949]

Alan Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

Generally, legal representation in employment tribunal proceedings in England and Wales is excluded from the scope of public funding, though funding for general legal advice falling short of advocacy is available under the Legal Help Scheme. However the Lord Chancellor has the power under Section 6(8)(b) of the Access to Justice Act 1999 to authorise funding in exceptional cases where the Legal Services Commission asks him to do so. In Scotland representation before an employment tribunal is available to anyone who meets the statutory tests for Assistance by Way of Representation (ABWOR). ABWOR allows a solicitor to appear on behalf of a client before the Tribunal.

In addition, under section 66 of the Race Relations Act (RRA) 1976, the Commission for Racial Equality has discretion to provide paid legal representation.

Same-sex Couples

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) what estimate has been made of the number of same-sex couples in long-term relationships living together who are currently treated as separate households for the purpose of state pension and other benefits; [89697]

(2) for which benefits heterosexual unmarried couples living together as husband and wife are treated as a couple when same-sex couples are treated as individuals; and for each of these benefits what estimate he has made (a) of the cost of treating same-sex couples as individuals and (b) the savings made by not treating such heterosexual couples as individuals. [89698]

Mr. McCartney [holding answer 16 January 2003]: There is very little information about same-sex couples in this country. The Labour Force Survey suggests that there are about 50,000 cohabiting same-sex couples in the UK. Around one in twenty of the individuals in these couples say they are claiming income related benefits or tax credits. There appear to be very few who are pensioners. Same sex couples are treated as individuals for the purposes of determining entitlement to income related benefits.

We already treat same sex couples as individuals for the purpose of determining entitlement to income related benefits. Any estimate of the savings made from treating unmarried heterosexual couples as couples rather than as individuals would depend on assumptions about, for example, the number of individuals who would otherwise choose to claim benefit and about whether benefit would be paid for their children.

Notes:

a. Information is taken from the Labour Force Survey, spring 2002 and the Family Resources Survey 2001–02. However, they are very likely to under record the extent of same sex partnerships. In addition they will not necessarily capture all benefit recipients.

b. Definition of benefits includes all unemployment related benefits, including JSA (IB), IS, family related benefits or [illegible] credits and housing or council tax benefit.

c. There are very few pensioners recorded in the Family Resources Survey as being in same sex couples.

d. Estimated costs are based on the information in the Labour Force Survey and assumes that the proportion of working age individuals receiving benefit is the same for those in same-sex couples as in the wider population.

Standard Housing Allowance Pilot

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will estimate the cost of his standard housing allowance pilot in each of the next five financial years, identifying separately the cost of the evaluation of the pilots; and if he will estimate the eventual cost of the scheme if it were to apply to (a) all private rented accommodation nationwide and (b) all private or social rented accommodation nationwide. [93631]

Malcolm Wicks: Ten local authorities have been invited to be pathfinders for the standard local housing allowance pilot. We estimate that the pilot will cost around £20 million per year in additional benefit spending. Evaluation will cost around £2 million over the course of the project. We will be in a position to quantify the cost of supporting the pathfinder authorities in setting up and administering the scheme once all of the details of the pilot are worked out.

The cost of a nationwide scheme for the private rented sector would depend on the design of the scheme, which will be informed by the results from the pathfinders. We cannot, therefore, estimate the potential cost at this time.

It is not possible to estimate the cost of a housing allowance for social rented accommodation, which would have to be designed along different lines from the private rented sector pilot.

Targeting Fraud Campaign

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions by what means he assesses the effectiveness of the Targeting Fraud advertising campaign; and what his assessment is of its effectiveness. [92499]

Malcolm Wicks: The effectiveness of the Targeting Fraud advertising campaign is subject to a full evaluation after each major phase. In October 2001, a copy of the summary of the evaluation of the March 2001 burst of the Targeting Fraud campaign was placed in the Library. Evaluation shows that public attitudes are moving in a positive direction as a result of the campaign.

Tenancies

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions, how many households in (a) private regulated tenancies and (b) private deregulated tenancies there were in each English region in each year since 1996. [91690]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The private rented sector is now only some 10 per cent. of the whole housing market, and regulated tenancies have become only a small part of the private rented sector. This means that even though the Survey of English Housing is a large survey, the sample of regulated private tenancies is not large enough to allow reliable figures to be produced for individual regions and for individual years. Tabled is the estimated annual average number of regulated and deregulated tenancies for the period 1998–99 to 2001–02 for London, and for broad regional groupings. Annual estimates of regulated and deregulated tenancies in England are also shown from 1996–97 to 2001–02. There is no reason to expect that the trends in individual regions have been significantly different from those for England as a whole.

Winter Fuel Allowance

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many people over 60 qualify for the £200 Winter Fuel Allowance in Telford. [93282]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available in the format requested. Most, but not all, people aged 60 and over are eligible for a Winter Fuel Payment. The vast majority of those eligible receive their payment automatically, without the need to claim. Of those who need to claim, it is up to the individual to choose whether to do so.

However, for winter 2001–02, payments of £200 were made to some 6,500 people living in Telford.

HEALTH

ACT

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research regarding changes to corporate investment behaviour consequential to the changes to ACT announced in the 1997 Budget has been (a) carried out and (b) commissioned by his Department. [92316]

Dawn Primarolo: I have been asked to reply.

The abolition of ACT was part of a package of measures introduced over the period 1997 to 1999 aimed at creating an improved climate for long term investment. Subsequent tax changes have also been designed to promote enterprise and encourage economic growth. There are practical difficulties in assessing the impact of these changes, and in any case, it does not make sense to evaluate the impact of one part of this series of measures in isolation.

Acute Beds

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the level of occupancy of (a) general and (b) acute beds in the NHS is. [91596]

Mr. Hutton: The average occupancy of beds in general and acute wards in 2001–02 was 86 per cent. This information is published annually on the Department's website at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity.

Acute Hospital Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the strategic reviews into the provision of acute hospital services that are taking place in the NHS in England; and when those reviews are due for completion. [91479]

Mr. Hutton: All strategic health authorities are in the process of developing local delivery plans for the next three years. These will show systematically how improvements will be made locally to deliver the increases in capacity and quality set out in the priorities and planning framework 2003–06 and will include acute hospital services.

Plans are due to be submitted to the Department by the end of March 2003.

Acute Hospitals

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the changes to working patterns resulting from the Agenda for Change settlement will take effect in acute hospitals. [87535]

Mr. Hutton: Subject to the outcome of staff side consultation, the new national health service pay system is expected to be introduced in 'early implementer' sites, including some acute hospitals, in June 2003 and will be implemented across the rest of the NHS from October 2004. The new pay system will give NHS organisations much greater flexibility to design jobs and working practices around the needs of NHS patients both in the short term following implementation and on an ongoing basis in the future.

Ambulance Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the diversion policies operated by ambulance services. [88162]

Mr. Lammy: National health service ambulance services will decide to which accident and emergency department they will take a patient depending on the local circumstances prevailing at the time. They will use local information to make that decision.

Anit-smoking Campaigns

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take steps to ensure that forthcoming public information anti-smoking campaigns will raise awareness of the link between smoking and stroke; and what targets have been set to reduce the number of stroke deaths caused by smoking. [90553]

Ms Blears: The Department's current television advertising campaign is based on testimonials in which real people describe the effects of their illnesses and their feelings about having smoked.

Since January 2002, one of the testimonials we are showing has featured a 38-year-old man who describes how his life has been devastated by a series of smoking related strokes.

One of the warnings required to appear on cigarette packets in accordance with the Tobacco Products (Manufacture, Presentation and Sale) (Safety) Regulations 2002 warns that, "Smoking clogs the arteries and causes heart attacks and strokes".

Although no specific targets have been set for stroke deaths, we have a series of smoking prevalence targets. By reducing the overall level of smoking we will tackle all smoking related illness, including strokes. My officials have recently met with the Stroke Association to examine what more can be done to raise awareness of the risks of smoking related strokes.

Body Piercing

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to prohibit body piercing of minors without their parents' or guardians' consent; if he will list the statutory provisions which cover the body piercing of minors. [92520]

Ms Blears: The Government have no current plans to introduce legislation to make the body piercing of minors without their parents' or guardians' consent a criminal offence, as this might lead to them piercing themselves or each other in an unsafe and unhygienic manner or to going to disreputable businesses. We keep the position under review.

There are no statutory provisions relating specifically to the cosmetic body piercing of minors. The following statutory provisions are relevant to the regulation of cosmetic body piercing businesses:

London Local Authorities Act 2000

London Local Authorities Act 1995

London Local Authorities Act 1991

Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 (relates to ear piercing)

Greater London Council (General Powers) Act 1981

In general, body piercing organisations and local authorities take the good practice view that children, either under 16 or under 18 years of age (depending on viewpoint), should not have body piercing without parental consent. However, practice by individual businesses may vary.

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the need for further regulation of body piercing; what plans he has for the further regulation of body piercing; and what recent consultations the Government have had with local authorities concerning the body piercing of minors. [92521]

Ms Blears: Since January 2002, we have received a small number of representations about the regulation of body piercing businesses.

We intend to introduce primary legislation to give local authorities outside London specific powers to regulate cosmetic body piercing business, when parliamentary time allows.

We have had no recent consultations with local authorities about the cosmetic body piercing of minors.

Cancelled Operations

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cancelled operations there were at each NHS hospital in each of the past four quarters. [91480]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the response I gave him on Wednesday 15 January 2003, Official Report, at column 676W.

Child Offenders

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children have (a) been convicted, (b) been in the care of a local authority for a year or more, (c) received a reprimand and (d) received a final warning, in each year since 1997. [85639]

Mr. Denham: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is contained in the tables.

Number of 10 to 17 years cautioned, given final warnings or reprimands, and found guilty of all offences at all courts 1997 to 2001[1]

Number

	Cautioned	Given final warning	Reprimanded	Found guilty
England and Wales
1997	104,520	—[2]	—[2]	79,151
1998	109,725	—[2]	—[2]	86,506
1999	103,978	—[2]	—[2]	90,280
2000[3]	36,764	42,773	18,004	91,423
2001	—[2]	66,538	31,504	95,530

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.

[2] Not applicable.

[3] Final warnings and reprimands were implemented nationally from 1 June 2000.

Children who ceased to be looked after by local authorities during the years ending 31 March 1997 to 2001

Number

	Number of children	Of which looked after for 1 year or more

Child Organs

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to ensure that families of children whose organs were retained without their consent receive compensation on a consistent basis across the country, regardless of which hospital was involved; and if he will make a statement. [92813]

Mr. Lammy: The NHS Litigation Authority is dealing with the retained organs litigation action and negotiations are subject to a confidentiality agreement between all parties. Both the Liverpool and nationwide group actions will be dealt with on their legal merits and any settlement will reflect this principle.

Children (Mental Health Problems)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on his assessment of the risk factors increasing the likelihood of mental health problems in children; [91989]

(2) if he will list for each year since 1997 the percentage of children who were diagnosed as suffering from each category of mental disorder. [91988]

Jacqui Smith: A survey of the mental health of children and adolescents in Great Britain was carried out in 1999 by the Office for National Statistics on behalf of the Department of Health, Scottish National Executive and National Assembly for Wales. Prevalence rates were produced for five to 15-year-olds in the three main categories of mental disorder; ie, conduct disorder, hyperactivity and emotional disorder.

The key findings on prevalence were that:

about 10 per cent. of children aged five to 15 in Great Britain had a mental disorder in 1999;

5 per cent. had conduct disorders (eg aggressive and antisocial behaviour), 4 per cent. had emotional disorders (eg anxiety, depression) and 1 per cent. were hyperkinetic (inattention, over-activity); mental disorders were significantly more common in boys than girls in both the five to 10 and the 11 to 15-year-old age groups.

The survey also found that mental disorders were more likely among children:

in lone parent compared with two parent families who had a parent with a mental disorder

in families of social class V (unskilled occupations) compared with social class I (professional occupations) in families with a gross weekly household income of less than £200 compared with £500 or more who had a physical health complaint who had special educational needs.

The prevalence of mental disorders in children were not unexpected nor were the associations between the risk factors and levels of disorder. They are in line with similar studies in Western Europe and the United States. This information has proved very useful in providing a benchmark for further work, such as that being undertaken by the child and adolescent mental health module of the Children's National Service Framework.

Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what remuneration (a) the Chairman (b) the Chief Executive and (c) each commissioner of the new Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health will receive. [92594]

Mr. Lammy: The Chair of the Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health receives £25,000 per annum. Each commissioner receives £5,305 per annum. The Chief Executive post was advertised at between £80,000 to £100,000 per annum.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will name those people who took part in the interview and selection process for the position of Chairman at the new Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health; and how many people applied for the position. [92597]

Mr. Lammy: The selection and interview panel consisted of Sir William Wells, chair of the national health service independent appointments commission, Sarah Mullally, chief nursing officer at the Department of Health, and Harry Cayton, chief executive of the Alzheimers Society and the director for patients' experience and public involvement at the Department of Health.

The independent assessor, supplied by the office of the commissioner for public appointments, was Cindy Butts. 52 people applied for the position.

Congestion Charge

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from within the NHS in London about the impact of the congestion charge. [91477]

Mr. Hutton: I have received three letters from national health service professionals employed in London about the impact of the congestion charge. No representations have been received from NHS organisations.

Correspondence

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when the hon. Member for Broxbourne will receive a reply to her letters of 11 September, 8 October, 7 November and 5 December, relating to her constituent, Miss P. V. Kennion; [87005]

(2) when he will reply to the letters from the hon. Member for Broxbourne of (a) 11 September 2002, (b) 8 October 2002, (c) 7 November 2002, (d) 5 December 2002 and (e) 7 January relating to Miss P. V. Kennion of Broxbourne, a constituent. [90222]

Mr. Lammy [holding answers 16 December 2002 and 13 January 2003]: I understand that the Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs sent a reply on 21 January.

Delayed Discharges

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were subject to delayed discharge in each hospital trust in England as at (a) 31 December 2002 and (b) 31 December 2001. [89936]

Jacqui Smith: The table shows the data for England from September 2001 to September 2002. Information for December 2002 is not yet available. The detailed breakdowns of these figures by health authorities and primary care trusts have been placed in the Library.

England: numbers of delayed discharges of patients of all ages by primary care trust[1]

	Number	Rate (percentage)
September 2002	5,385	5.1
June 2002	5,489	5.1
March 2002	5,473	5.2
December 2001	6,419	6.1
September 2001	7,065	6.6

[1] March 2002, December 2001 and September 2001 figures were collected by health authorities.

Departmental Performance Report

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish his Department's Autumn Performance Report, Service Delivery Agreements and Departmental Investment Strategy. [92157]

Mr. Lammy: In December 2002, the Department published the chief executive's Report to the National Health Service, setting out progress during 2001–02 and for the first six months of the year.

This report sets out clearly how the increased resources within the NHS are being used improve performance by providing more care for patients, improving quality and providing investment for the future. We intend to link this report to Her Majesty's Treasury website and will review it to ensure it covers reporting of public service agreement performance in full.

The Departmental Investment Strategy, which explains the Department's capital investment plans for the years 2003–4 to 2005–6, will be published shortly, before Her Majesty's Treasury's March Budget Announcement.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the running costs of (a) the Department and (b) each of its sponsored agencies were in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90711]

Mr. Lammy: Detailed information on administration costs for the Department of Health administration costs expenditure and its agencies, going back to 1998–99 and with projections to 2003–04, is set out in Figure 8.1 of the 2002 Departmental Report (CM5403). Copies are available in the Library.

Data for years before 1998–99 are not available on the same basis. Provisional out-turn for gross and net administration costs limits were published in Public Expenditure 2001–02 provisional out-turn (Cm 5574), Tables 4 and 5. Updated information, with plans to 2005–06 will be published in the 2003 Departmental Report in the spring.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the distribution of his Department's wholetime equivalent staff was, including the staff in agencies and other bodies reporting to him was in each Government office region and nation of the UK (a) in 1996 and (b) at the most recent available period. [90477]

Mr. Lammy: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) on 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 609W.

Draft Mental Health Bill

Julie Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what proportion of the responses to the draft Mental Health Bill consultation came from Wales; [87732]

(2) when he plans to publish a summary of the responses to the draft Mental Health Bill consultation. [87731]

Jacqui Smith [holding answers 17 December 2002]: We have received over 1,900 responses to the consultation on the draft Mental Health Bill. We are currently considering them carefully. The results of the consultation will be made public in due course. Approximately 17 per cent., have been identified as from people and organisations based in Wales.

Drugs Budget

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the Answer of 8 January 2003, Official Report, column 277W, on the drugs budget, what the budgets were for this provision. [91592]

Mr. Hutton: The answer of 8 January, 2003 Official Report, column 277W, gave figures for the total expenditure on drugs for National Health Service trusts in England between 1998–99 and 2001–02.

The Department does not hold information on resources set aside by NHS trusts for the provision of drugs.

The resource amounts set aside from the unified allocation for drugs are essentially a local decision for NHS trusts to agree, in collaboration with primary care trusts, strategic health authorities and pre 2002–03 health authorities. NHS trust drug budgets are held and managed locally.

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the total spending of his Department on entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92383]

Mr. Lammy: Expenditure arises on hospitality and entertainment only in the context of promoting the Department's business objectives. All such expenditure is made in accordance with published departmental guidance on financial procedures and propriety, based on the principles set out in Government Accounting.

Information in the required form is only available from 1995–96. The total amount spent by the Department of Health on hospitality since 1995–96 is as follows:

1995–96	73,516
1996–97	105,192
1997–98	90,883
1998–99	67,953
1999–2000	50,114
2000–01	93,091
2001–02	121,968
2002–03	88,503

The 2002–03 figure represents expenditure from April to December.

Fruit and Vegetable Consumption

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 15 January (ref. 84461), what cost benefit analysis has been carried out on expenditure on promoting consumption of fruit and vegetables. [92006]

Ms Blears [holding answer 20 January 2003]: Increasing intakes of fruit and vegetables could reduce the risk of deaths from chronic disease, such as heart disease, stroke and cancer, by up to 20 per cent.

The two major spending programmes to promote consumption, the national school fruit scheme and local Five-a-day community initiatives, are being funded by the new opportunities fund which will be commissioning detailed evaluations of their effect on diet including consumption of fruit and vegetables.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 15 January (ref. 84461), by how much consumption of (a) fruit and (b) vegetables has changed since 2001. [92007]

Ms Blears [holding answer 20 January 2003]: National trends in fruit and vegetable consumption since 2001 cannot as yet be fully ascertained due to the considerable time it takes to undertake dietary surveys and their analyses. The latest national food survey data shows that between 1999 and 2000, household weekly purchase of fruit and fruit juice continued to increase, from 1,063 g to 1,121 g, whereas household consumption of vegetables continued to decrease, from 1,095 g to 1,077 g. This information does not take account of wastage.

National evaluation of pilot five a day community initiatives—one year intervention between 2000 and 2001—showed that the initiatives stemmed a fall in fruit and vegetable intakes. There was no overall change in fruit and vegetable intake in the intervention group but there was a fall in intake by almost half a portion in the control group. The intervention was found to have had a positive effect in people with the lowest intakes. Those who ate less than five a day at baseline increased their intakes by one portion over the course of the study.

Detailed information on fruit and vegetable intakes was collected as part of the Health Survey for England for the first time during 2002. The collection of this information in future years will allow an examination of national trends by age, sex and geographic region.

Health and Safety

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what information he has collated on the application to his Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the revitalising health and safety strategy statement; and if he will make a statement; [89492]

(2) whether his Department and its agencies have met the commitment arising from Action Point 13 of the June 2000 Strategy statement on revitalising health and safety to summarise health and safety performance and plans in annual reports from the year 2000–01 onwards. [89490]

Mr. Lammy: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Work and Pensions (Mr. Smith) on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 85W.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which senior officials within his Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised. [89491]

Mr. Lammy: Hugh Taylor, the Director of Corporate Affairs, will shortly be appointed by the Chief Executive as the board member with specific lead responsibility for health and safety in the Department of Health. Details of the appointment will be publicised in the annual report and included in the revised health and safety policy statement for the Department. The policy statement will be available on the Department's website.

Roy Alder, Head of Executive Support, is responsible within the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). His name is publicised on the MCA website and in the Agency's published annual report and accounts.

Tom Crawley, Branch Head of Corporate Services, is responsible within the Medical Devices Agency (MDA). His name is publicised in the MDA's annual report, though without specific reference to health and safety.

Peter Wearmouth, Chief Executive of NHS Estates (NHSE), holds overall responsibility within NHSE. This is publicised in the Agency's annual report and to staff at their induction.

John Short, Health and Safety Officer for the NHS Estates Agency, is the executive officer responsible for ensuring Estates complies with British and appropriate European legislation concerning health and safety. This information is publicised on the Estates intranet, on the health and safety law poster and to staff at their induction.

Pat Corless, the acting Chief Executive, has framework document responsibility for health and safety within the NHS Pensions Agency (NHSPA). Nigel Holden, the Resource and Development Director, has board level responsibility for health and safety within NHSPA. Nigel Holden is named in the annual report as the lead on health and safety.

Chris Uden, the NHS Purchasing and Supply Agency's Director of Corporate Development, is the nominated board level lead for health and safety matters within the Agency. This is publicised within the Agency during staff induction sessions and in the minutes of the health and safety policy group meetings.

Heritage and Antique Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; if he will list such assets; and if will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92384]

Mr. Lammy: The Department has not sold any heritage assets or antique assets in the period since May 1997.

This answer does not include information about the national health service.

Hospitals (Somerset)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many tasks he has set for each hospital in Somerset; and when they are due to be completed. [91507]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has set no tasks specifically for hospitals in Somerset. Service delivery targets for the whole health system were set out in the NHS Plan.

HPA

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to maintain intelligence and service delivery in health protection after 1 April 2003 across the new structure for health protection. [90051]

Ms Blears: We propose to establish the Health Protection Agency as a special health authority from 1 April 2003. As outlined in my response of 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 130W, to the hon. Member, the Department has identified interim organisational arrangements to ensure that the HPA can maintain intelligence and service delivery at national level. Similar arrangements are being finalised at regional and local level, including the identification of interim leads on microbiology services at regional level, to co-ordinate and support the public health outputs of HPA and national health service microbiology laboratories.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the action plan for the creation of the HPA has been updated since 30 November 2002. [90063]

Ms Blears: The action plan is regularly updated.

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the ability of the HPA to respond to a biological attack on the UK during the first six months of its operations. [90070]

Ms Blears: We propose to establish the Health Protection Agency (HPA) as a special health authority from 1 April 2003. The establishment of the HPA will improve our ability to respond to the deliberate release of biological agents and other hazards. In particular, HPA will be able to tackle incidents in a very structured way, especially those where it is not clear at the outset what the nature of the problem might be.

We shall be looking to the HPA to deliver a robust service, including the response to outbreaks caused by deliberate release of biological agents. We envisage that local, regional and national public health teams will be assisted by better microbiological services consisting of a complementary network of local public health and regional microbiologists, working with others at the national level, all of whom will have responsibility for operational support in the event of a major incident, including biological attacks. Interim management arrangements are being put in place at national, regional and local level to ensure that the HPA will be able to address key threats from its inception.

Surveillance to detect untoward events and outbreaks will continue to be monitored by the communicable disease surveillance centre. This new, nationally consistent, coherent and co-ordinated approach offers better public health security to detect and respond to outbreaks of infection.

Lifestyle Survey

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 15 January (ref. 84467 and 84461), if he will list the programmes and the amount of money spent on each. [92009]

Ms Blears [holding answer 20 January 2003]: The Department commissions several annual surveys that include questions on lifestyle issues:

The Health Survey for England is a series of annual surveys about the health of people in England. This information is used to underpin and improve targeting of nation-wide health policies. The survey was carried out in 1991–1993 by the Office for Population Censuses and Surveys, which is now part of the Office for National Statistics (ONS). From 1994 onwards, the survey has been carried out by the joint survey unit of the national centre of social research and the department of epidemiology and public health at University College, London. The survey includes questions on smoking, drinking, obesity, fruit and vegetable consumption and in certain years, physical activity, but it extends beyond lifestyle questions and covers a wide range of subjects to do with the general health of the population.

The ONS general household survey, "Living in Britain", is a continuous survey which has been running since 1971 and is based each year on a sample of the general population resident in private; that is, non-institutional, households in Great Britain. It covers a wide range of topics of relevance to households, families and individuals, including questions on smoking and drinking.

The ONS omnibus survey is a multi-purpose survey carried out by the ONS for Government Departments and other public or non-profit making bodies.

Interviewing is carried out every month and each month's questionnaire covers a variety of topics, reflecting different user's requirements. Included among these from time to time will be questions on smoking, drinking and contraception.

The annual survey of drug use, smoking and drinking among young people in England is part of a series established in 1982 and provides national estimates of the proportion of young people aged 11–15 who smoke, drink alcohol and/or take illegal drugs.

Costs in 2001–02

	£ million
Health Survey for England	2.75
General Household Survey	[1]0.26
Omnibus Surveys	[1]0.24
Drug Use Smoking and Drinking[1]	0.18

[1] Represents the cost of the Department of Health contribution to the ONS.

M&M Impact Ltd.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which NHS trusts in the North West have contracts with M&M Impact Ltd., formerly known as M&M Associates; [88012]

(2) when the tendering process took place for the public relations contract with (a) Warrington Hospital NHS Trust and (b) North Cheshire Hospital NHS Trust; and in each case, (i) where advertisements inviting tenders were placed, (ii) how many applications were received and (iii) how many applications were received from firms based in Warrington. [88013]

Jacqui Smith [holding answers 19 December 2002]: The tendering process for the public relations contract with Warrington Hospital took place in December 1994 and there has been no subsequent re-tendering for this contract. Invitations to tender were issued to three external organisations and one in-house bidder. Information regarding any advertisements which may have appeared eight years ago is no longer available.

Four applications were received; in additional to the in-house bid there was one bid from a company based in Warrington. The lowest bid was successful.

M&M Impact Ltd. and M&M Associates are separate companies. M&M Impact is a design consultancy. None of the national health service trusts in the Cheshire and Merseyside Strategic Health Authority area hold contracts with M&M Impact.

Three NHS trusts within the StHA area hold contracts with M&M Associates: North Cheshire Hospitals; Wirral Hospitals and Cheshire and Wirral Partnership. In addition, Bebington and West Wirral and Birkenhead and Wallasey Primary care trusts are honouring a contract previously held by the former Wirral Health Authority, which ends in March 2003.

Mersey Regional Ambulance Service

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place a copy of the report by Dr. Kirkup on Mersey Regional Ambulance Service in the Library. [84283]

Jacqui Smith: I have today arranged for a copy of the Kirkup Report to be placed in the Library.

Milk

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has assessed concerning the introduction of cows' milk in infant diets before the age of two and the incidence of iron deficiency anaemia. [91077]

Ms Blears: The Department undertakes regular surveys to monitor the diet and health of children. The National Diet and Nutrition Survey showed that more than one in ten children aged 1½ to 2½ years were anaemic. Early introduction of cow's milk is associated with increased risk of anaemia. The Infant Feeding Survey 2000 reported that by the age of nine months 54 per cent. had introduced cow's milk, compared to 61 per cent. in 1995, while 8 per cent. were giving cow's milk as a main drink, compared to 15 per cent. in 1995.

The Department recommends that unmodified cow's milk be given as a main drink only after the age of one year and may be used in small quantities in the preparation of solid foods in the second half of infancy. After one year, diet should include a variety of foods to ensure that it is adequate in iron, vitamin C and D.

Miller Group

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the property portfolio being transferred to Miller Group as part of the acquisition of inventures. [92526]

Mr. Lammy: The list of properties in the portfolio being sold to Miller/HBOS is still in the process of being finalised.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90607]

Mr. Lammy: We are unable to provide data on the impact of increasing the minimum wage in line with average earnings as these statistics are not collected centrally.

There would be no impact on the Department of Health of increasing the minimum wage by the amounts listed.

The minimum wage in the Department of Health, as of August 2002, is 11,100 (Full time equivalent).

For staff based in London (36 hours per week) this works out to be 5.90 per hour.

For staff based outside of London (37 hours per week) this works out to be 5.74 per hour.

Ministerial Visits

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next plans to visit a children's hospice. [87470]

Ms Blears: There are no current plans in my right hon. Friend's official diary to visit a children's hospice. Should a request to do so be received in the Department, he will give it his full consideration.

Mixed Sex Wards

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals in the south west have mixed-sex wards. [88004]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not collected at individual hospital level but at trust level.

The reasons for measuring at trust level is because hospital wards generally care for both men and women. To provide the required levels of privacy and dignity for patients, wards are split into single sex bays, or single rooms, or otherwise configured to provide adequate segregation of gender. It is the responsibility of each national health service trust to determine the most appropriate configuration to meet their specific requirements.

In 1998, we set three clear objectives which were designed to deliver separate sleeping areas and separate toilet and washing facilities for men and women, and to safeguard the privacy and dignity of patients who are mentally ill.

Today, 98 per cent. of NHS trusts provide single-sex sleeping accommodation and have robust operational policies in place which protect patients' privacy and dignity. 95 per cent. of NHS trusts have met additional criteria set for mental health facilities. The target to provide separate toilet and washing facilities for men and women will be met by the end of March. 93 per cent. of NHS trusts currently meet this requirement, and a further 2 per cent. of NHS trusts have works underway to deliver the required standard, affecting just 32 wards, which will be completed by the end of the March.

Nationally, over 98 per cent. of NHS wards meet privacy and dignity guidelines. New hospitals and hospital facilities currently being built will bring the remaining wards to the necessary standard.

Mortuary Provision

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions the Government have taken with regard to the provision of mortuary facilities in the NHS in the past year. [88425]

Mr. Hutton: The Government have published the NHS estates document, "Health Building Note 20 Facilities for mortuary and post-mortem room services", giving revised guidance on the planning and design of comprehensive NHS mortuary and post mortem facilities.

The document is available on www.nhsestates.gov.uk.

NHS Advertising

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the purpose was of the recent NHS advertisement in the German press entitled "Become one in a million". [91114]

Mr. Hutton: The aim was to attract suitably qualified senior doctors who were interested in working in the National Health Service.

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans there are for the NHS to advertise for consultants and general practitioners in the foreign media; and if he will list such campaigns since 1 May 1997. [91115]

Mr. Hutton: The Department did not undertake any advertising in foreign media before August 2001. Since that date the following advertisements have been placed.

In addition, national health service employers have placed advertisements for specific vacancies.

The Department plans to advertise the International Fellowship Scheme in March to April and September to October 2003. Plans for additional advertising have not yet been finalised.

Date	Advertisement	Countries
August 2001	Consultant recruitment	Spain
September 2001	General practitioner recruitment	Spain
September 2001	Consultant and general practitioner recruitment	Europe, North America, Australasia and the Middle East
January 2002	Consultant and general practitioner recruitment	Germany
March 2002	International Fellowship Scheme	Europe, North America and Australasia

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the total cost of (a) the recent NHS advertisement in the German press entitled 'Become one in a million' and (b) the seminars referred to in the advertisement. [91116]

Mr. Hutton: The most recent advertisement that appeared in the German press entitled 'Become one in a million' cost £5,794 in total. The seminars referred to in the advertisement in Vienna and Salzburg will cost £5,500. Costs for the seminar in Dusseldorf have not yet been finalised.

NHS Direct

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the expected waiting time is for patients to speak to a doctor when calling NHS Direct. [86070]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 10 December 2002]: There is no expected time for a patient to speak to a doctor when calling NHS Direct. NHS Direct is a nurse led service.

NHS Doctors

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the annual (a) total and (b) percentage increases in the number of NHS doctors have been in each year since 1992. [91593]

Mr. Hutton: The information requested is shown in the table.

All NHS doctors[1] (excluding GP retainers) in England, 1992–2001

		Change
Year	Total	Year	Percentage
1992	79,232	1992–93	1.9

NHS Indicators

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish key indicators about NHS performance and staffing in 2003. [91478]

Mr. Hutton: As the independent regulator for national health service performance, the Commission for Health Improvement will be responsible for all future publications of NHS performance ratings. The next publication will be in summer 2003.

It is intended that statistics on NHS workforce numbers will be published before the end of the financial year. Vacancy data at March 2003 will be published in the second half of 2003.

NHS Staff (Herefordshire)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) general practitioners, (b) nurses and (c) consultants are employed in Herefordshire. [91736]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is shown in the table.

All General Medical Practitioners[1], Nurses[2] and HCHS Consultants in Herefordshire Health Authority as at 30 September 2001

NHS Treatment Abroad

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has had with healthcare officials in Tunisia about possible treatment of NHS patients. [92535]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not held any discussions with healthcare officials in Tunisia about possible treatment of national health service patients, nor has it any plans to do so.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether any of his officials have visited hospitals in Tunisia. [92536]

Mr. Hutton: No departmental officials have visited any hospitals in Tunisia, nor do they have plans to do so.

Nursing Vacancies (Somerset)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nursing vacancies there were in each Somerset NHS trust in (a) March 1997 and (b) December 2002; and if he will make a statement. [92561]

Ms Blears: The Department's three-month vacancy survey has been collected yearly since March 1999 and is therefore not available for 1997.

However, the numbers of nursing vacancies in each Somerset national health service trust for the two nearest dates (March 1999 and March 2002) are shown in the tables.

Department of Health Vacancies Survey, March 1999—vacancies in NHS trusts in England and Somerset Health Authority area by trust, qualified nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff—three month vacancy rates, numbers and staff in post

	Qualified nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff (excluding HA staff)

Taunton and Somerset NHS Trust	2.4	26	1,034	1,298

Notes:

1. Three month vacancy information is as at 31 March 1999.
2. Three month vacancies are vacancies which trusts are actively trying to fill, which had lasted for three months or more (whole time equivalents).
3. Three month vacancy rates are three month vacancies expressed as a percentage of three month vacancies plus staff in post.
4. Three month vacancy rates are calculated using staff in post from the Non-Medical Census, September 1998.
5. Staff in post data are from the Non-Medical Census, September 1998.
6. Staff in post data exclude staff employed by health authorities, as vacancy information was only collected from trusts.
7. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number.
8. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place.
9. Due to rounding, totals may not equal the sum of component parts.
10. Calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual vacancy rates.
11. HA figures are based on trusts, and do not necessarily reflect the geographical provision of healthcare.

Operation Cataract

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the unit cost was of cataract operations carried out at the Royal Lancaster Infirmary under Operation Cataract by a visiting South African team; and what the equivalent cost is (a) normally at the Royal Lancaster Infirmary and (b) on average in NHS hospital trusts in England. [92555]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is currently unavailable for cataract operations at the Royal Lancaster Infirmary.

A major procurement exercise for clinical services, including cataracts, is currently being undertaken at the Royal Lancaster Infirmary and as such is regarded as commercially confidential. However, the average unit cost of phakoemulsification cataract extraction with lens implant undertaken as a day case in a national health service trust in England is £632.

Overseas Surgical Teams

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of utilising overseas surgical teams was for each trust up until 31 October. [84098]

Mr. Hutton: The information required is not available in the format requested. £24 million has been allocated for various overseas clinical teams initiatives for 2002–03.

Paper Supplies

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who the suppliers are of his Department's (a) paper and (b) paper products. [91899]

Mr. Lammy: The Department has three main avenues for the supply of paper and paper products.

Paper used in connection with normal business needs is supplied by the Department's contracted stationery supplier, Guilbert Niceday. Paper used in the production of bulk photocopying is supplied by our reprographics contractor, Xerox. Paper products used in publications and reports are not purchased separately but are provided as part of the contract by a range of print suppliers under competitively tendered framework agreements.

Parkinson's Disease

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received the extension of the exemption from prescription charges for sufferers from Parkinson's disease; what estimate he has made of the average annual cost of prescriptions to sufferers of Parkinson's disease; and if he will make a statement on the age profile of those who suffer from Parkinson's disease. [93203]

Mr. Lammy: Since January 2002 we have received 13 letters requesting that Parkinson's disease be included in the list of medical conditions conferring exemption from prescription charges.

There is no cost of prescriptions to sufferers from Parkinson's disease who are aged 60 or over, who are (or their partner is) receiving income support, income based Jobseeker's allowance or tax credits (where income is below a specified limit, currently around £226 net per week) or who have successfully claimed help under the national health service low income scheme. We estimate that most sufferers from Parkinson's disease who are not entitled to free prescriptions will have sufficient prescriptions each year to make purchase of a pre-payment certificate worthwhile. These cost £89 for 12 months.

There are more than 120,000 people with Parkinson's Disease in the United Kingdom. It is uncommon in people younger than 30; after that the risk of developing it increases with age. The incidence of Parkinson's Disease is approximately 1:1000 in the general population, rising to 1:100 over the age of 65 and 1:50 over the age of 80.

Parliamentary Questions

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to reply to the questions tabled by the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham Refs. 83295, 83289, 86703, 86805 and 86807. [92593]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the replies that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Tottenham (Mr. Lammy) gave on 4 December 2002, Official Report, column 901W and on 10 December 2002, Official Report, column 304W and to the reply that the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Salford (Ms Blears) gave on 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 688W. The other replies were sent on Monday 20 January and Tuesday 21 January.

Patients Forums

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients forums have been established. [92596]

Mr. Lammy: No statutory patients forums have yet been established.

PHLS Laboratories

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action has been taken to minimise the risks from disbanding the PHLS before the Health Protection Agency is fully functional. [90083]

Ms Blears: In England, most of the Public Health Laboratories Service (PHLS) laboratories which carry out general diagnostic microbiology are planned to transfer to national health service trusts by 31 March 2003. They are transferring with their current level of funding, which will be maintained for at least the first two years. Each transferring laboratory will have a public health microbiologist, who will work with consultants in communicable disease control, local authorities, the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre and other public health agencies. Service level agreements are being prepared to maintain this work. In addition, there will be a regional microbiologist in each of the nine public health regions, who will work with regional epidemiologists in the implementation of key infectious disease programmes as well as in the investigation of outbreaks of communicable disease. Regional microbiologists will also work to co-ordinate the work between the laboratories in the Health Protection Agency and the NHS. In Wales, PHLS laboratories and the Communicable Disease Surveillance Centre Wales are transferring to the national public health service—Wales, on 1 April 2003.

The PHLS Board will remain in existence until primary legislation is changed. From 1 April 2003, we intend that it will be responsible for the production of media for microbiology laboratories, following the transfer of its other current functions to the HPA which we propose to create as a special health authority from the same date.

Pre-hospital Care

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health to what extent the National Health Service is bound by the Joint Royal College Ambulance Liaison Committee guidelines on pre-hospital care. [92529]

Mr. Lammy: The guidelines on pre hospital care were issued to all ambulance trusts and it was for them to decide whether or not to use them.

Harry Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost to public funds was of the preparation of the Joint Royal College Ambulance Liaison guidelines on pre-hospital care. [92530]

Mr. Lammy: There was no cost to public funds for the preparation of the Joint Royal Colleges Ambulance Liaison guidelines on pre hospital care.

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92451]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is shown in the table.

Financial Year	Number of Press Releases Issued
2002 to 20 January 2003	378
2001–02	609
2000–01	697
1999–2000	743
1998–99	559
1997–98	330
1996–97	296
1995–96	431

Quarterly figures for the past seven years could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Primary Care Trusts

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 15 January (ref. 84461), for what reason primary care trusts need to supplement the national expenditure programme on promoting consumption of fruit and vegetables. [92008]

Ms Blears [holding answer 20 January 2003]: One of the roles of a primary care trust is to improve the health of their communities. This requires them to take the lead on public health issues in their area, develop health improvement and modernisation programmes based on health needs, and integrate service planning and health promotion. Their public health role encompasses, for example, smoking cessation, teenage pregnancy and healthy eating.

By 2004, primary care trusts will be managing up to 75 per cent. of the total national health service budget. They will use the money to commission services to meet the needs of their local population, which may include projects to increase fruit and vegetable consumption.

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria are applied in the selection of non-executive directors of PCTs. [92124]

Mr. Lammy: Details of the qualities required of all primary care trust non-executive directors have been placed in the Library. In addition, particular attributes can be sought for individual vacancies, to ensure that the board has an appropriate mix of skills and experience.

Prostate Cancer

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the causes of the regional differences in the incidence of prostate cancer in Great Britain. [89670]

Ms Blears: Rates of prostate cancer per 100,000 population in 1999, broken down by region, are shown in the table.

Health regional office of residence	Rate of prostate cancer per 100,000 population (1999)
Northern and Yorkshire	82.3
Trent	70.0
Eastern	92.1
London	71.4
South East	93.9
South West	101.3
West Midlands	89.8
North West	80.3
England	84.9

Prostate cancer is related to affluence. It is also possible that these figures reflect in part differential take-up of prostate specific antigen testing in different parts of the country.

Public Information

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer given to the hon. Member for East Worthing and Shoreham on 7 January 2003, Official Report, column 208W, on public information, how much it cost to establish his Department's Customer Services Centre; and how many staff work here. [92600]

Mr. Lammy: The team has been established within existing resources. There are 38 members of staff managing correspondence from hon. and right hon. Members and members of the public, departmental e-mails and the call centre.

Public Service Agreements

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish his autumn departmental reports on public service agreement targets; and if he will make a statement. [91007]

Mr. Lammy: In December 2002, the Department of Health published the chief executive's report to the National Health Service, setting out progress during 2001–02 and for the first six months of the year. This report sets out clearly how the increased resources within the NHS are being used improve performance by providing more care for patients, improving quality and providing investment for the future.

We intend to link this report to Her Majesty's Treasury website and will review it to ensure that it covers reporting of Public Service Agreement performance in full.

Reconfiguration of Hospitals

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 8 January 2003, Official Report, column 277W, if he will make a statement on his reference to thinking about how to reorganise services safely and effectively as moved on; what his policy is on the ideal population size to be served by an acute hospital; when the consultation exercise for the new project will be published; and what impact he expects that consultation to have on future plans for the NHS. [91595]

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the document on reconfiguration of hospitals will be published; and whether it includes an assessment of the place of foundation hospitals in the reorganisation of hospital services. [91503]

Mr. Hutton: A document on the configuration of hospital services is to be published shortly. The document will be relevant to all parts of the national health service.

Roaccutane

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people in the UK have been prescribed roaccutane in each of the past five years; and what proportion of those people have reported symptoms of depression or psychiatric disorders; [91831]

(2) what assessment he has made of the European Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products' review of safety information for roaccutane. [91832]

Ms Blears: It is not possible to estimate the precise number of patients who have received Roaccutane (isotretinoin) in the United Kingdom in the last five years. However, it has been estimated that approximately 375,000 treatment courses of isotretinoin have been prescribed between 1983 and May 2002.

The table provides the total number of suspected psychiatric disorders reported during each of the past five years through the Yellow Card Scheme for Roaccutane. It also shows the number of reports of symptoms of depression, which forms part of the total psychiatric disorders.

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
Psychiatric disorders	48	44	50	26	25
Depression	23	17	17	11	11

A report of a suspected adverse reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the medicine. The number of reports received should not be used as a basis for determining the incidence of a reaction as neither the total number of reactions occurring, nor the number of patients using the drug is known.

With expert advice from the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Medicines Control Agency is currently leading a European-wide review of the product information of isotretinoin products, including Roaccutane, with the aim to ensure that up to date and consistent information is provided to health professionals and patients to optimise its safe use. This review is likely to take some months to complete. Any new advice will be communicated to health professionals and patients.

Single-sex Wards

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether his Department has met in full its three objectives regarding single sex wards. [92584]

Mr. Hutton: I refer the hon. Member to the written ministerial statement made on 14 January 2003, Official Report, column 24WS.

West Midlands Hospitals (Red Alert)

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many hospitals within the West Midlands (South) Strategic Health Authority area were on red alert on each day since 1 December 2002; and if he will make a statement; [90348]

(2) on how many days since 1st December 2002 hospitals within the Worcestershire Acute Hospitals NHS Trust were on red alert; and if he will make a statement. [90349]

Mr. Lammy: The term "red alert" is used by a few National Health trusts. It does not have a standard definition.

Since 1 December 2002, a total of seven red alerts on seven separate days were issued by the Worcestershire Acute Hospitals NHS Trust. No other hospital trusts within the West Midlands South Strategic Health Authority (StHA) area have issued red alerts in the period.

During this period, the trust experienced a significant amount of pressure, largely due to diarrhoea and vomiting outbreaks, in addition to an increase in thelevels of emergency admissions. Each health community within the StHA has an agreed escalation policy described in winter plans. Each phase of escalation policy is triggered by specific operational difficulties. When the circumstances deteriorate to such a level, patients are diverted to a nearby, alternative hospital, often within the same trust.

It is the StHA's view that the steps that were taken by the Worcestershire health economy were acceptable within the local guidelines and in line with the escalation policy.

Worcestershire Acute Hospital NHS Trust

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was to the Worcestershire Acute Hospital, NHS Trust of their preparations for the recent inspection by the Commission for Health Improvement. [91504]

Mr. Lammy: The Worcestershire Acute Hospitals National Health Service Trust did not collect this information at the time of the inspection, nor is it collected centrally.

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what costs have been incurred by the Worcestershire Acute Hospital NHS Trust since September 2000 as a consequence of suspension of consultants. [91505]

Mr. Lammy: The Worcestershire Acute Hospitals National Health Service Trust has had one consultant suspension during the period. During that suspension, a locum consultant was employed by trust at NHS locum rates. In this particular case the costs amounted to approximately £30,000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Speeding (Motorways)

Kate Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were convicted of motorway speeding offences, broken down into speed bands, in each of the last five years. [92712]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Information held centrally on the number of convictions for speeding offences does not distinguish the classification of road on which the offence took place nor the speedband registered.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been made in the Easington constituency; and if he will make a statement. [91608]

Mr. Denham: The number of notifications received by the Home Office of anti-social behaviour orders (ASBOs) issued, from 1 April 1999 up to 30 September 2002 (latest available), within the Easington district council area, (in which the Easington constituency is situated), are four.

We are aware that the numbers of ASBOs made nationally have been consistently under reported in returns made by magistrates courts and are considering how reporting can be improved.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure that it is easier for the police to issue behaviour orders. [92018]

Mr. Denham: Changes under the Police Reform Act 2002 make it easier for all relevant authorities to obtain anti-social behaviour orders (ASBO). Interim orders are now available, as are orders on conviction in the criminal courts. From April orders will also be available in the county courts. In addition, the British Transport Police can now apply directly for orders. The Home Office has issued guidance on these changes to assist practitioners in their implementation.

Measures to further improve ASBOs are being introduced under the forthcoming anti-social behaviour bill.

Asylum Seekers (EU Fingerprinting)

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the launch of the EU's centralised fingerprinting system aimed at asylum seekers. [92100]

Beverley Hughes: The Government welcome the implementation on 15 January of the centralised EURODAC fingerprint database. Fingerprint technology is an important tool to cut fraud and prevent abuse of national immigration and asylum systems. Co-operation with our European partners through the EURODAC system builds on this and EURODAC will provide a valuable resource to tackle multiple asylum applications. As it becomes established EURODAC will help speed up the processing of asylum cases under the Dublin Convention and its replacement, the Dublin II Regulation, by improving the detection of multiple asylum applications made within the EU or Norway and Iceland.

Asylum Seekers (Infant Formula Milk)

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether vouchers for infant formula milk are provided for asylum seekers with young children; and if he will make a statement. [91828]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 22 January 2003]: Asylum seekers and their dependants are not eligible to obtain milk tokens under the Welfare Food Scheme Regulations 1996. On 5 November my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary announced that the asylum support regulations 2000 would be amended to allow for additional payments to be made to supported pregnant women and children under the age of three. Supported pregnant women and children aged one to three will each receive £3 per week. Babies under the age of one will receive £5 per week.

Asylum Seeking Children

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many unaccompanied children applied for asylum within the UK in each year since 1997, broken down by country of origin. [91992]

Beverley Hughes: Reliable information on the entry routes of unaccompanied asylum seeking children (UASC), including when UASCs first enter the UK, is not available. However, information on the nationality of UASC applicants who applied at port and in-country between 1997 and 2001, inclusive, is given in the table. Annual figures for 2002 are not yet available.

Information on asylum applications from unaccompanied children is published annually. The next annual publication will be available later this year.

Information on asylum applications and initial decisions is published quarterly. The next publication will present data for the final quarter of 2002, and will be available from 28 February 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Blueprint Research Programme

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the current status of the Blueprint research programme is; and if he will make a statement. [92268]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Blueprint is a drug prevention programme for 11 to 13-year-olds based on the principles that underpin effective school-based drug education. The project aims to recruit 30 schools to the project by April 2003. Invitations to participate in the project (dated 13 January 2003) have been sent to 122 secondary schools across eight local education authorities (Birmingham, Cheshire, Derby, Derbyshire, Lancashire, Leeds, Staffordshire and Stoke). The project is on target.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the Department for Education and Skills regarding the Blueprint research programme. [92269]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Blueprint is a partnership of the Home Office, the Department for Education and Skills (DfES) and the Department of Health. The Home Office is the budget holder. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health endorsed the programme in October 2001. Subsequently, DfES have been involved at both ministerial and official level in every stage of the project.

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department show much his Department has invested in the Blueprint research programme. [92270]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The expected expenditure for Blueprint in the financial year 2002–03 is £397,117 out of a total budget of £5 million. Expenditure will continue until the end of the third quarter of the financial year 2007–08.

Caythorpe Court

Mr. Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he will reply to the letter of 11 December 2002 from the hon. Member for Sleaford and North Hykeham regarding the possible use of Caythorpe Court, Lincolnshire for the accommodation of asylum seekers; [92087]

(2) what plans his Department and its agencies have to use Caythorpe Court, Caythorpe, Lincolnshire for the accommodation of asylum seekers; and if he will make a statement. [92089]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: I replied to the right hon. Member on 17 and 20 January 2003. As I explained the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) is considering the use of Caythorpe Court as emergency accommodation for asylum seekers while their application for support and dispersal elsewhere is considered. No decision has yet been made.

CCTV

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase funding to police authorities to extend CCTV schemes. [92017]

Mr. Denham: Under the Crime Reduction Programme Closed Circuit Television (CCTV) Initiative over £170 million is being spent funding 684 CCTV schemes. More than 540 of these schemes are already fully operational, with further schemes coming on line weekly.

Although this strand of funding is now closed, other opportunities for funding of CCTV schemes currently exist through the funds available to Crime and Disorder Reduction Partnerships, on which the police are partners. Funding of £94 million was announced on January 21 as being available to partnerships for 2003–04. Potential funding is also available through the Small Retailers in Deprived Areas initiative.

General Police Grants will increase by 4.3 per cent. to £7.3 billion in 2003–04. These grants are used by police authorities and chief officers to support their policing programme and plans.

Community Beat Wardens

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of community beat wardens in helping reduce nuisance and crime. [92016]

Mrs. Roche: I have been asked to reply.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister warden schemes work in partnership with local communities and are still relatively new. Robust evaluation is not yet available, but interim findings are positive and show that warden schemes can contribute to improving the liveability of neighbourhoods and the reduction of crime and fear of crime. Residents report significant improvements in community spirit and the quality of life in their neighbourhoods where wardens have proven beneficial and popular.

Community Cohesion (Lancashire)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps the police in Lancashire are taking to promote community cohesion; and if he will make a statement. [91185]

Mr. Denham: Lancashire Constabulary has conducted successful operations to deal with major criminal activities which affect the community, such as drug dealing, burglary and car crime. The Chief Constable's July 2002 Constabulary Ambition Statement for Lancashire gives priority to leadership, resource management, communication, community engagement and delivering results. All are important for the promotion of community cohesion, which is central to the work of the police across the country and particularly in areas with fragmented communities.

Specific steps being taken by Lancashire Constabulary include:

> community beat managers in strategic areas around the county, particularly in Burnley and Pendle, each with responsibility for a particular area, providing a constant link with the public, dealing with community issues and reducing crime; they are also the best link with young people, and help respond to rumours and provide reassurance. To raise their profile, they are having a new uniform insignia, and commitment is being made to continuity by not redeploying them to other duties and by maintaining individuals in post for a minimum of two years; > the proactive work of the newly-formed hate crime unit in Burnley and Pendle, which has significantly improved detection rates for racially aggravated violent crime, enhancing community confidence;
> the community and race relations (CRR) strategy incorporates youth issues, responses to racial incidents and crimes, ensuring equitable service delivery and developing the recruitment, retention and progression of staff with regard to CRR and cohesion issues through training;
> intelligence-led problem-oriented approaches, at all levels of policing and in all departments, which involve monitoring tension indicators and other threats to public safety and working in partnership with outside agencies and members of the public; and > community safety teams in each of the six divisions, with a central strategic team at headquarters, dedicated to working on community-based projects, particularly those that relate to minority communities; the teams work to reassure the public, provide communities with a link to the police, deal with hate crime and gather intelligence on community tensions.

I would like to express appreciation of the work of Lancashire Constabulary in these and other measures implementing the recommendations of the Burnley Taskforce (Clarke report), of the Cantle report and of the Ministerial Group on Public Safety and Community Cohesion following the summer 2001 disturbances in Burnley. This has been taken forward by a multi-agency forum with local authorities and other agencies, [illegible] view to ensuring effective partnership working.

Czech Roma

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Roma from the Czech Republic have (a) sought and (b) been granted asylum in the UK in each year since 1997. [91869]

Beverley Hughes: It is not possible to say how many asylum applicants from the Czech Republic are of Romany origin. Data on the ethnic origin of asylum seekers are not collated centrally and are therefore not available; the number of those who applied would be available only by examination of individual case-files at disproportionate cost.

The tables show the number of applications and initial decisions of nationals of the Czech Republic from 1997 to September 2002.

Deportations

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were deported last year having served a custodial sentence in a UK prison. [92619]

Beverley Hughes: 634 persons were deported during 2002 on completion of a custodial sentence.

DNA Data

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what DNA data are held on people with criminal convictions; and if he will make a statement. [91155]

Mr. Denham: The DNA profile of people with criminal convictions is held on the National DNA database. The profile is derived from a sample taken by the police from the offender. A part of the original sample is also preserved for possible use in the future. This is to enable the profile to be upgraded if necessary in the light of advances in DNA technology and for quality assurance purposes.

Domestic Violence

Margaret Moran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to consult on guidance to police authorities on dealing with perpetrators of domestic violence by police officers. [86422]

Mr. Denham: Work is continuing to produce guidance on dealing with perpetrators of domestic violence within police ranks. Consultation will take place with relevant bodies later this month, and guidance issued in spring. Work is also being done to ensure that police discipline procedures complement the guidance when it is issued.

Drug Treatment Testing Orders

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of drug treatment testing orders in (a) Tunbridge Wells and (b) Kent have been breached; [92105]

(2) how many drug treatment and testing orders have been made in (a) Tunbridge Wells and (b) Kent; [92107]

(3) what proportion of those given drug treatment testing orders in (a) Tunbridge Wells and (b) Kent have subsequently reoffended; [92106]

(4) what estimate he has made of the cost of drug treatment testing orders in (a) Tunbridge Wells and (b) Kent. [92104]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: No unit cost information is available for the specific costs of drug treatment and testing orders (DTTO) in Kent and Tunbridge Wells. The assessed national average unit cost of a DTTO is £6,000, of which £2,400 is retained by the probation service to cover supervision, enforcement and other related costs. The balance of £3,600 per order is transferred to the Department of Health pooled treatment budget to cover treatment and related costs. 234 orders have been commenced in Kent since the national roll-out of DTTOs in October 2000. Kent probation area has been set a target of 160 DTTOs in the current year and 86 orders have been made to 30 November 2002 including six orders in Tunbridge Wells.

It is increasingly the practice of the courts when considering a breach of an order, to allow the DTTO to continue where good progress has otherwise been shown. Information is collected centrally on the total number of breach actions initiated but is not available in a form which allows the incidence of breaches to be linked to an individual order.

Since national roll-out in October 2000, Kent probation has initiated breach action which resulted in the revocation of 121 orders: 91 for failure to comply, and 30 following a conviction for another offence. However, some of these offences were committed before the order began. Results from local intelligence sources, including the police, suggest that the volume of offending for this chaotic group of offenders is reduced and maintained over time for those responding to their treatment.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of each type of crime in (a) Tunbridge Wells and (b) Kent in each of the past five years was deemed to be drug-related. [92116]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Recorded crime figures include statistics on drugs offences, such as possession, and on acquisitive crimes, such as burglary, but do not record whether the latter are related to an offender's drug habits.

However, the New English and Welsh Arrestee Drug Abuse Monitoring (NEW-ADAM) research programme, which involves interviewing and drug testing those arrested by the police, confirms a link between drug misuse and crime, although the conclusions do not relate specifically to Kent. Analysis of the data from the first eight sites in the survey, collected during 1999–2000, shows that 65 per cent. of arrestees provided a urine sample that tested positive for one or more illegal drug. The analysis also shows that up to 29 per cent. of arrestees tested positive for opiates (including heroin) and/or cocaine (including crack).

As a guide to the proportion of crime that is drug-related, analysis of the NEW-ADAM self-report data indicates that while only 21 per cent. of non-drug using arrestees reported having previously offended in the past 12 months, this figure rises to 75 per cent. for those arrestees who use heroin and/or cocaine/crack. Moreover, while users of both heroin and cocaine/crack represented just under one quarter of all arrestees interviewed, they were responsible for more than three fifths of all the illegal income reported.

In support of this, 55 per cent. of arrestees who reported using one or more drugs in the last 12 months and committing one or more acquisitive crimes, acknowledged a link between their drug use and their offending behaviour. This proportion rose to 78 per cent. for arrestees who said they had used heroin and cocaine/crack.

Drug-related Offences (Durham)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there were for drug-related offences in the Peterlee sub division of the Durham police in (a) 2001 and (b) 2002; and if he will make a statement. [91609]

Mr. Denham: The available information relating to illegal drugs, is given in the table.

Persons[1] proceeded against in the Easington petty sessional area for the possession of and dealing in a controlled drug, 1999, 2000 and 2001

	Easington petty sessional area
Possession of a controlled drug
1999	21
2000	61
2001	118

1999	21
2000	61

[1] Persons for whom these offences were the principal offence for which they were dealt with.

[2] Includes offences of importation/exportation, production, supplying, possession with intent to supply etc.

The number of arrests within the Peterlee sub division of Durham constabulary are not available centrally. The 'use' of illegal drugs is not an offence.

Statistics for 2002 will be available in the autumn. 2001 Criminal statistics is available on the Stationary Office website (http:www.homeoffice.gov.uk.rds. pdfs2hosb402.pdf), and copies are available in the Library.

Examining Officers' Powers

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 19 December 2002, Official Report, column 987W, on examining officers' powers, when he will respond to Lord Carlile of Berriew QC on the issue raised in his report on the operation in 2001 of the Terrorism Act 2000; when he will report his response to the House; and if he will make a statement. [92360]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 21 January 2003]: I will be giving my full consideration to all of these proposals, including examining officers' powers, and I will be responding to Lord Carlile on the issues raised imminently. I will, of course, report my response to the House.

Firearms

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) prosecutions and (b) convictions have been recorded in each of the last three years for (i) carrying a loaded firearm in a public place, (ii) acquiring a firearm under the age of 17, (iii) a person under 14 possessing an airgun or ammunition, (iv) a person under 17 having an air weapon in a public place, (v) a person under 14 making improper use of an airgun when under supervision, (vi) supplying an air weapon to a person under 14, (vii) discharging a firearm within 50 feet of the centre of a highway, and (viii) an adult supervisor of a person under 14 making improper use of an airgun. [92267]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information contained in the table gives the number of defendants proceeded against and convicted of the various firearms offences requested, in England and Wales, 1999 to 2001, apart from 'discharging a firearm within 50 feet of a highway', which is not separately identifiable on the Home Office Court Proceedings database.

Statistics for 2002 will be published in the autumn.

[1] These data are on the principal offence basis.

[2] Staffordshire Police Force were only able to submit sample data for persons proceeded against and convicted in the magistrates courts for the year 2000. Although sufficient to estimate higher orders of data, these data are not robust enough at a detailed level and have been excluded from the table.

[3] For the purposes of recording offences, firearms are divided into three groups as below:

Group I—All firearms etc. other than those described in Groups II and III.

Fraud (Asylum Support)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many investigations have been commenced into suspected fraud concerning Asylum Support, and what the outcomes have been; and if he will make a statement about the arrangements in place to prevent Asylum Support fraud; [91210]

(2) pursuant [illegible] his answer of 8 January, ref. 88475, how many fraud investigators are employed by or contracted to the National Asylum Support Service; and what arrangements are in place for advice and assistance from the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service to NASS; [91212]

(3) what arrangements are in place for referrals from the Benefit Fraud Hotline and the Targeting Fraud Website to be made to NASS fraud investigators in respect of cases of suspected Asylum Support fraud; and how many reports of suspected fraud have so far been received by NASS. [91211]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 16 January 2003]: About 40 staff are employed directly by the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) to undertake fraud investigations. In the period April-December 2002 investigations were carried out into 3,161 cases of alleged benefit fraud. As a result of the investigation 1,286 support claimants had their NASS support terminated.

All asylum seekers are being issued with Application Registration Cards (ARCs) which contain photographs and biometric data. Arrangements are under way for NASS support to be paid via the person's ARC. This represents a more secure method of payment and will help to prevent fraud.

NASS has a full time liaison officer on secondment from the Department for Work and Pensions (DWP) to establish closer working links with that Department's Benefits Fraud Investigations unit. In addition NASS contributes to multi-agency operations aimed at combating illegal working in partnership with other Government Departments including the Department for Work and Pensions.

There are no formal arrangements for referring calls to the Benefit Fraud Hotline and the Targeting Fraud Website to NASS.

Gwent Police

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will send to Mr. Alan Bolton, ex-Superintendent of Gwent Police, the final report of assistant chief constable Drane on alleged breaches of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 which was presented to the Gwent Police Authority on 11 July 2002. [91537]

Mr. Denham: The report referred to is the property of the Chief Officer of Gwent and it is for him to decide whether a copy should go to Mr. Alan Bolton. I am advised by Gwent Police that the report will not be disclosed. The report is currently in the hands of the Police Complaints Authority who will inform Mr. Bolton of the outcome of the investigation into his allegations.

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the report of the inquiry into the conduct of ex-Acting Chief Constable Richard Thomas of Gwent Police will be published. [91543]

Mr. Denham: The report referred to is the property of Gwent Police Authority and it is for them to decide whether it should be published. I am advised by Gwent Police that the report will not be published.

Identity Cards

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the possibility of introducing identity cards in the UK. [92015]

Beverley Hughes: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary launched a consultation exercise on 3 July 2002, with the publication of a consultation paper on Entitlement Cards and Identity Fraud. Official Report, columns 227–42.

There are strongly held views on all sides of the debate on entitlement or identity cards. The Government have made it clear that the introduction of an entitlement card would be a major step and that we would not proceed without consulting widely and considering all the views expressed very carefully.

The consultation period will last until 31 January 2003 after which, the Government will assess and evaluate all the responses received before reaching a conclusion.

Immigration Detainees

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to prevent immigration detainees who have not been charged with a criminal offence from being held in prison. [93332]

Beverley Hughes: Our policy on the use of prisons to hold immigration detainees was set out in the White Paper "Secure Borders, Safe Haven—Integration with Diversity in Modern Britain". We made it clear that, although the routine use of prison accommodation for immigration detainees had ended, there would remain a need to hold small numbers of individual detainees in prison for reasons of security and control. There has been no change in that policy.

Juvenile Motor Bike Riders

Mr. Pickthall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the police about means of controlling nuisance by juvenile riders of off-road motor bikes; and if he will make a statement. [92079]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 22 January 2003]: The Government have responded to public concerns about the nuisance and distress caused by juveniles riding off-road motor bikes across public parks, village greens or the countryside without authority by securing new powers for the police to deal with the anti-social use of any motor vehicle whether on- or off-road. The new powers are contained in section 59 of the Police Reform Act 2002 and the Police (Retention and Disposal of Motor Vehicles) Regulations 2002, both of which came into force on 1 January.

The new powers build on existing road traffic legislation by enabling the police to seize any vehicle being driven carelessly or inconsiderately or off-road without authority and in such a way as to cause alarm, distress or annoyance. This will enable the police to deal more immediately and more effectively with the nuisance. The new powers will inconvenience those who misuse their vehicles and see them liable to meet the costs involved in seizure and storage in order to recover them.

The Home Office has written to all chief officers of police, drawing their attention to the new provisions and advising them on application.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90603]

Mr. Blunkett: The information requested is in the table:

		Impact on the paybill
Increase	Total	England	Scotland	Wales	Northern Ireland
(a) In line with inflation	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil
(b) To £4.17 per hour	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil	Nil

(e) To £5.30 per hour (percentage)	<0.1	<0.1	<1.0	<0.1	≈1.0

Orpheus Centre

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives of the Orpheus Centre; and if he will make a statement. [92044]

Mr. Blunkett: I attended a reception at the House of Commons on 13 January 2003, which was organised by the noble Lord Hunt of Wirral, in conjunction with the right hon. Member to celebrate the work of the Orpheus Centre. The Orpheus Centre is doing excellent work, not only by helping young disabled people to achieve their potential in music and drama, but also by drawing attention to the wasted talent that results from negative attitudes towards disability.

Paper Supplies

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who the suppliers are of his Department's (a) paper and (b) paper products. [91904]

Mr. Blunkett: The contract to supply paper and paper products to the Home Department is held by the company Guilbert Niceday. In addition to the aforementioned contract the Prison Service also hold a contract with James McNaughton to supply paper and paper products to Prison Service industries.

In June 2002 the Home Office mandated all offices within the Department to use re-cycled paper in photocopiers, fax machines and printers, unless technical reasons precluded them from using this paper. The provision of re-cycled paper is part of the agreed contract with Guilbert Niceday.

Police (Herefordshire)

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are employed in Herefordshire. [91748]

Mr. Denham: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) on 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 589W, setting out police strength for each Basic Command Unit for each force in England and Wales as at 31 March 2002.

The deployment of resources between the six territorial divisions and other specialist operational and support units of the West Mercia Constabulary is an operational matter for the Chief Constable.

Police Force (Civilian Staff)

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many civilian staff have been employed in each police force in England and Wales in each year since 1996–97; and how many of these civilians have been employed as a consequence of the civilianisation of posts formerly performed by uniformed officers. [91080]

Mr. Denham: The figures for the number of civilian support staff employed by police forces since 1996–97 are provided in the table. Information for the number civilians employed as a result of the civilianisation of uniformed police posts is not available.

Police Numbers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of police officers in (a) England and Wales, (b) Avon and Somerset and (c) East Somerset district in each year from 1980–81 to 2003–04; and if he will make a statement. [92084]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 22 January 2003]: Information on the number of officers in England and Wales and Avon and Somerset Constabulary for 1980–81 to 2001–02 (the latest available statistics) is set out in the table. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has set a target for there to be 130,000 officers in March 2003 and 132,500 officers in 2004, but he has not set targets for individual forces.

The deployment of resources between the eight territorial divisions and other specialist operational and support units of the force is an operational matter for the Chief Constable.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) on 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 589W, setting out police strength for each Basic Command Unit for each force in England and Wales as at 31 March 2002.

Police Pay and Pensions

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assumptions the Home Office made about the change in police pay and pension costs between 2002–03 and 2003–04 in determining the police grant distribution. [90217]

Mr. Denham: The average increase in Police Grant and Revenue Support Grant and National Non-Domestic Rates income in 2003–04 will be 4.3 per cent. Each police authority will receive an increase of at least 3 per cent.

Within the total sum available, distribution of Police Grant is based, by formula, on predicted relative demands on policing services for each police authority. Formula changes for 2003–04 do not relate to pay or pension costs. The proportion of the formula attributable to projected pensions costs remains at 14.5 per cent.

Grant is not specifically earmarked for pay and pension costs. Authorities will take grant into account when setting budgets to meet these costs from their total available resources.

Police Precept

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the level of the police precept in each English police authority, based on (a) Band D council tax and (b) other measures for which comparative information is available, in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92082]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 22 January 2003]: Precept levels are determined by police authorities.

Police precepts (Band D level) for English Police Authorities since 1995–96 are set out in the table. Before April 1995 policing in shire areas was provided by county councils. Figures for the police component of county precepts are unavailable.

Police Response Times

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the target time is for the police to respond to 999 calls in (a) Essex Constabulary, (b) Tendring division, (c) Colchester division and (d) England; and if he will list the most recent performance in each case. [91463]

Mr. Denham: The Government do not set target times for emergency response.

The emergency response targets set by Essex Police Authority within Essex Police are the same for all divisions:

Rural—20 minutes,

Urban—10 minutes.

There is not a national target—forces set their own, although the majority are rural 20 minutes and urban 10 minutes; the others are very similar.

The latest Essex performance figures are as follows:

Essex Police—Target 86 per cent. Performance (rolling 12 months to end December 2002) 83.5 per cent.

Tendring Division—Target 88 per cent. Performance (rolling 12 months to end December 2002) 88.3 per cent.

Colchester Division—Target 88 per cent. Performance (rolling 12 months to end December 2002) 83.9 per cent.

The most recent figures available for England and Wales are those given in the Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary annual report 2001–02 published on 9 December 2002. These show that the average response times for attending incidents within target times were 78.7 per cent. in urban areas and 86.9 per cent. in rural areas.

Police Standards Unit

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police forces have been subject to intervention by the Police Standards Unit since its creation; [92688]

(2) how many separate interventions the Police Standards Unit has made since its creation. [92687]

Mr. Denham: There have been no formal interventions by the Police Standards Unit under the powers provided by sections 4 and 5 of the Police Reform Act 2002.

The Police Standards Unit is, however, working with police forces in England and Wales—and in conjunction with Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary—to share good practice, to provide support where performance issues have been identified and to aid specific initiatives such as the work with 10 forces to tackle street crime.

Policing (London)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the current level of policing in (a) the London Borough of Havering and (b) other London boroughs; [91333]

(2) how many police officers there are in each London borough; [91332]

(3) what recent discussions he has had with police borough commanders on police numbers in the London boroughs; [91339]

(4) what plans he has to increase police numbers and resources in the London Borough of Havering. [91334]

Mr. Denham: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, has regular meetings with the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis (Sir John Stevens QPM) at which a range of policing issues are discussed.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) on 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 589W. This sets out police strength for each Basic Command Unit for each force in England and Wales, including the London boroughs.

Under the provisional grant settlement for 2003–04 announced on 5 December 2002 the MPS will receive £2,021.7 million in Government grant.

Decisions about the allocation of resources, including police officers, to the London boroughs are matters for the Commissioner and the Metropolitan Police Authority.

Radiological Terrorism

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what liaison has taken place between the Civil Contingencies Unit and the Office of Civil Nuclear Security in respect of preparation of counter measures against radiological terrorism. [91961]

Mr. Wilson: I have been asked to reply.

None. The Office for Civil Nuclear Security (OCNS), the security regulator, provides advice on protective security of nuclear materials and nuclear facilities in the civil nuclear industry. OCNS does not provide advice on the consequences of terrorism.

Stray Dogs

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his policy is on the provision by local police forces of temporary kennels for stray dogs collected by local authority dog wardens. [92590]

Mr. Denham: The provision of temporary kennels for stray dogs by the police is a local matter determined individually by each police force. The Policing Bureaucracy Taskforce recommended that this function may transfer to local authorities. The proposals are being discussed in consultation with the relevant stakeholders.

Sussex Police

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers have left Sussex constabulary in the last 12 months because of (a) retirement, (b) early retirement, (c) injury and (d) other employment. [92577]

Mr. Denham: The precise information requested is not collected centrally. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary has provided the figures set out in the table for the 12 months ending 31 March 2002.

Sussex police wastage: 2001–02

	Number
Dismissed or required to resign	2
Voluntary resignations	63
Medical retirements	16
Ordinary retirements	82
Transfers	34
Died in service	2
Total wastage	199

Terrorism Act

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 14 January 2003, Official Report, column 597W, on arrests made under the Terrorism Act 2000 since 1 December 2002, if he will list (a) the locations where the 50 arrests were made, (b) the numbers arrested and charged or released at each location and (c) the date of each of these incidents. [92037]

Mr. Blunkett: Since 1 December 2002 and to date, a total of 75 arrests have been made under the Terrorism Act 2000. The table details dates, locations and outcomes.

Date	Number of arrests	Location	Outcome
1 December 2002	1	Manchester	Released without charge
3 December 2002	2	Manchester	Released without charge

18 January 2003	3	Gloucestershire	Released without charge
20 January 2003	7	London	All remain in custody

Traffic Police

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police in England have been allocated to traffic duties in each year since 1990; and what training in road accident investigation is given to police officers. [91852]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The table gives the readily available information on the number of traffic officers in each police force in England. This covers the three years since 1999, in which year the definition of traffic officer used by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary changed. The definition is now "staff who are predominantly employed on motor-cycles or in patrol vehicles for the policing of traffic and motorway related duties". This definition excludes those engaged in accident investigation, vehicle examination or radar duties.

The adoption of an intelligence-led approach to traffic policing, the integration of such policing with other core activities, the increased use of cameras and other technology, and the more effective use of police resources can lead to a reduction in dedicated traffic officers without a reduction in performance in meeting traffic-related targets or enforcement levels.

The Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) has created a protocol to safeguard expertise and credibility by providing a common standard within the police service for the conduct of collision investigation and reconstruction. Under this, police forces should aim, at the primary level, to train collision investigation officers to the level of the appropriate City and Guilds qualification or an approved equivalent. The recommendation is that the qualification should be achieved within two years of the officer first undertaking this type of work. In addition, specialist officers are required to undergo continuing professional development, which provides a means of maintaining and enhancing their expertise and ensuring the maintenance of standards.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) Zimbabwean nationals and (b) British passport holders previously resident in Zimbabwe without the right of residence have applied for residence in the UK in each of the last 24 months. [91947]

Beverley Hughes: The available information relates to the number of Zimbabwe nationals granted settlement. Monthly statistics for 2000 and 2001, the latest available, are given in the table. Data for 2002 are due to be published later this year. Information on the number of applications made for settlement is not available.

In 2001, 515 British overseas citizens (British passport holders without the right of residence) were granted settlement. The corresponding figure for 2000 was 630. It is not possible to identify how many of these citizens were previously resident in Zimbabwe.

CABINET OFFICE

E-Government

24. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made with the development of e-government. [93526]

Mr. Alexander: The Government are committed to a radical reform of public services and e-government is a powerful catalyst for bringing about the transformation necessary to deliver the Government's vision. In recognition of this commitment, we are investing £6 billion over the next three years in e-government.

Disabled People (Civil Service)

25. Miss Begg: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress has been made in improving the recruitment of disabled people into the civil service. [93527]

Mr. Alexander: The Government are committed to employing disabled people. As at April 2002 disabled staff accounted for 3.6 per cent. of the civil service, up from 2.8 per cent. in 1995. A service wide target has been set at 3.0 per cent. disabled people in the senior civil service by 2004–05. In April 2002 the percentage of disabled staff in the senior civil service was 1.7 per cent., up from 1.5 per cent. in 1998.

Regulatory Reform

26. Mr. Prisk: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress his Department is making in implementing the Regulatory Reform Action Plan. [93528]

Mr. Alexander: The Regulatory Reform Action Plan (RRAP) contains 268 reform proposals that the Government have committed itself to delivering over the next three years. So far, 27 per cent. of the items it contains have been completed.

Civil Contingency Bill

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when he plans to bring forward a Civil Contingency Bill. [93555]

Mr. Alexander: Work is progressing well on preparing new civil contingencies legislation. Proposals will be published this Parliamentary Session. New legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93049]

Mr. Alexander: There were a total of 35 cases of computer misuse in the Cabinet Office during the five years 1998–2002, broken down as follows. The numbers of those resulting in disciplinary action are shown in parentheses.

	Inappropriate use of internet	Using another's password	Totals
1998	2(2)	2 (2)	4 (4)
1999	3 (3)	0	3 (3)
2000	19 (12)	0	19 (12)
2001	8 (7)	0	8 (7)
2002	1 (1)	0	1 (1)
Total	33 (25)	2 (2)	35 (27)

Congestion Charge

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office whether individual passengers of the Government Car and Despatch Agency will reimburse the agency for congestion charges it incurs. [92996]

Mr. Alexander: The responsibility for the provision of ministerial cars and drivers has been delegated under the terms of the Framework Document to the Government Car Despatch Agency. I have asked its Chief Executive Mr. Nick Matheson to write to the hon. Member. Copies of his letter will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Industrial Action/Illness

Andrew George: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many working days have been lost in the Cabinet Office owing to (a) industrial action and (b) illness in each year since 1997. [93465]

Mr. Alexander: Working days lost through industrial action are recorded as unauthorised absence for which pay is stopped. The Cabinet Office (including agencies) keeps records of unpaid absence generally but they also include authorised absence. Separating the records could be achieved only at disproportionate costs.

Sick absence figures for Government Departments are published annually in the report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service". The most recent report for calendar year 2001 was announced by Ministerial Statement 19 December 2002. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House. Figures for 2002 will be announced later this year.

Cabinet Office figures (including its agencies and non-departmental public bodies) are:

	Days per staff year
1997	6.6
1998	7.3
1999	6.8
2000	4.6
2001	5.7

Public Appointments

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what progress is being made in providing training for people considering making an application for public appointments. [93522]

Mr. Alexander: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) earlier today, Official Report, column 716.

TRANSPORT

Aviation Inquiry

11. John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on submissions to his inquiry into aviation. [93539]

Mr. Darling: The Department has so far received over 70,000 responses to the airport consultation from a wide range of interest groups and individuals.

I will shortly publish a revised south-east consultation paper which will include runway options for Gatwick airport.

The consultation will remain open for four months from the date of publication.

17. John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many responses his Department has received to the "Future of Air Transport" consultation document. [93545]

Mr. Spellar: The Department has so far received over 70,000 responses to the airport consultation from a wide range of interest groups and individuals. We will shortly publish a revised south-east consultation paper, which will include runway options for Gatwick airport. The consultation will remain open for four months from this date.

M6

12. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make a statement on the proposed widening of the M6 motorway. [93540]

Mr. Spellar: I wrote to the North West Regional Assembly on the 10 December 2002 giving the Secretary of State's response to the 'West Midlands to North West Multi Modal Study' (MIDMAN). The study has clearly demonstrated that some road widening is a necessary component of a strategy aimed at tackling congestion on the M6 motorway. Government therefore support the study recommendation to widen the motorway from dual 3 to dual 4 lanes between Junctions lla and 19. The Highways Agency has been instructed to progress this work.

Rail Services (Scotland)

13. Mr. Luke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will make a statement on investment in the east coast main line rail services north of Edinburgh. [93541]

Mr. Spellar: Last year the Strategic Rail Authority announced £100 million of investment for the east coast main line under a deal to extend the GNER franchise by two years. The Authority is considering how to deliver improvements to the east coast main line in order to secure greater capacity and increased line speeds.

Transport Infrastructure

14. Jon Trickett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what priority he gives to economic regeneration when planning new transport infrastructure. [93542]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department's method for appraising transport schemes looks at a wide range of costs and benefits including the reduction of travel times, safety, accessibility and impacts on the environment, as well as a scheme's contribution to regeneration. We take decisions on particular schemes in the light of all of these factors.

Cycling

15. Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on departmental funding for local cycling projects. [93543]

Mr. Jamieson: The Minister for Transport announced on 9 January 2003 the second round of our Cycling Projects Fund. This provides a further £1 million of funding for local, practical projects aiming to deliver an increase in cycling. The fund builds on the more than £2 million that was made available in 2002 to support 138 cycling projects.

Road Traffic

16. Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is on road traffic reduction. [93544]

Mr. Jamieson: The Government's position has consistently been that we seek to reduce the adverse impacts of road traffic, rather than the level of traffic per se.

Central Railway

18. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a decision on Central Railway's application for a hybrid Bill. [93546]

Mr. Spellar: We are considering carefully Central Railway's proposals and will respond to Central Railway in due course.

Wales Railway Franchise

19. Ian Lucas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the specifications set out in the Wales railway franchise. [93547]

Mr. Jamieson: The franchise will include all local and regional passenger services within Wales, and some cross-border services. Its terms will reflect the outcome of negotiations with bidders, among other things.

Strategic Rail Authority

20. Vernon Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the Strategic Rail Authority about improving local rail services. [93548]

Mr. Spellar: I, and other departmental Ministers, meet the Chair and Chief Executive of the Strategic Rail Authority on a regular basis; and discuss a range of issues.

Air Travel Trust Fund

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will introduce legislation to increase the air travel trust fund. [93661]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 20 January 2003 Official Report, column 38W.

Bus Services (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) new, (b) improved and (c) withdrawn bus services there were in (i) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (ii) Shropshire in each year since 1997. [93086]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department does not collect this information. However, I am informed by Shropshire County Council that since 1998 the total number of commercial bus journeys in the county withdrawn by operators is 1,936. In the same period the county council has provided subsidy for 2,500 new additional bus journeys some of which replaced those commercial ones that have been withdrawn.

The council does not have available separate information about services in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

Concessionary Travel (Pensioners)

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will take steps to introduce free off-peak travel for pensioners on public transport. [93698]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Stroud (Mr. Drew) on 30 October 2002, Official Report, column 863W.

Cross-Solent Fares

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received since 1977, other than from hon. Members, that the Government should subsidise cross-solent fares. [93863]

Mr. Jamieson: Since 1997, 15 representations from members of the public have been received on this matter.

Cycling (Protective Equipment)

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation to compel cyclists to wear personal protective equipment; and if he will make a statement. [93734]

Mr. Jamieson: We have no current plans to make the wearing of personal protective equipment by cyclists compulsory. The Highway Code advises cyclists to wear clothing which will make them visible and which is appropriate for cycling. It also advises them to wear helmets. We have engaged TRL to monitor wearing rates. The latest study shows that in 1999 the overall wearing rate was 22 per cent. on major built up roads. That is not a high enough level of public acceptance to introduce compulsory wearing. There would be enforcement difficulties and it could have adverse effects on the levels of cycling. However, we will continue to monitor wearing rates and will review the option of compulsory wearing from time to time.

External Consultants

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the benefit to (a) his Department, (b) taxpayers and (c) road users of the value of each external consultant used by his Department since its inception. [93957]

Mr. Jamieson: Guidance on the use of consultants by my Department requires that each consultancy project should have a sound business case which sets out the deliverables and benefits expected to accrue . Details of individual consultancies and supporting business cases are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Freight (Shipping)

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much freight was carried by water in and around the UK in (a) May 1992, (b) May 1997 and (c) September 2002 by (i) all flagged ships and (ii) UK flagged ships; and if he will make a statement. [93662]

Mr. Jamieson: The available information relates to UK coastal shipping. The statistics are compiled on an annual basis only. Coastal freight traffic carried (i) in all flagged ships and (ii) in UK flagged ships for years 1991, 1996 and 2001 (the latest available year), in terms of goods lifted (tonnage) and goods moved (tonne-kilometres), were as follows:

	Goods lifted (million tonnes)		Goods moved (billion tonne-kilometres)
Year	All flagged ships	UK flagged ships	All flagged ships	UK flagged ships
1991	63.10	22.44	40.69	9.84
1996	70.87	17.30	45.14	7.27
2001	58.53	7.74	34.12	2.96

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90597]

Mr. Jamieson: Increasing the minimum wage in the manner described would have no impact on the cost of salaries for employees in my Department.

Ports (Security Breaches)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many official breaches of security have taken place at UK ports in each year since 1997, broken down by (a) region, (b) port and (c) type of breach. [93244]

Mr. Jamieson: Since 1997 my Department has recorded a total of 20 breaches of port security, ie instances where individuals have gained unauthorised access to Restricted Zones at ports. It is not appropriate to give a detailed breakdown of either the specific port or region where these breaches took place for obvious reasons.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what (a) court actions and other prosecutions have taken place and (b) fines or other actions have been imposed, against (i) UK ports and (ii) other marine organisations and activities in response to breaches of security which have taken place at UK ports in each year since 1997; and what the nature of the breaches were in each case. [93245]

Mr. Jamieson: No court actions and/or other prosecutions have taken place. From 1 January 1997 until 31 December 2002 a total of seven Enforcement Notices (ENs) have been served on UK harbour authorities and harbour operators. The ENs were served under the provisions of the Aviation and Maritime Security Act 1990 and related to failings to meet the requirements of that Act. Details are as follows:

Year	Number of ENs	Failings
1997	1	Restricted Zone(RZ) access control
1998	0
1999	0
2000	1	RZ access control
2001	4	Pass display (2); lack of suitably trained search staff; RZ access control
2002	1	RZ access control

Public Transport (Safety)

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about new measures to protect the safety of people using public transport, with particular reference to women. [93482]

Mr. Jamieson: We receive representations from a number of different organisations, including some regarding personal safety on public transport. For example, last year we received a representation by the Rail Safety Task Force of Soroptomist International of south east England regarding improving safety in rail travel.

Redhill Aerodrome

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the occasions on which Ministers in his Department have met representatives of Redhill Aerodrome Ventures Ltd. since 7 June 2001. [93787]

Mr. Jamieson: Since 7 June 2001, no meetings have been held between Ministers in my Department and representatives of Redhill Aerodrome Ventures Ltd.

Road Accidents

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment has been made by his Department of the number of (a) accidents associated with heavy commercial vehicles in each year since 1997 and (b) the associated fatalities. [93808]

Mr. Jamieson: The number of accidents involving at least one HGV in each year since 1997, and the associated fatalities from those accidents are shown in the table:

Accidents involving at least one HGV: GB 1997–2001

Accidents/fatalities

	HGV accidents	Fatalities[1]

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) pedestrians and (b) cyclists were (i) killed, (ii) seriously injured and (iii) slightly injured in road accidents in each year since 1997; and how many were under the age of 18 years in each category. [93826]

Mr. Jamieson: The number of pedestrians and cyclists of all ages, and those aged under 18 that were killed or injured in each year since 1997, are shown in the following tables:

Pedestrian and pedal cycle casualty data: GB 1997–2001

Tolls

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his estimate is of the annual cost to his Department of reimbursing VAT to private operators of tolls on the basis being consulted upon at present. [93350]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Current estimates are that the annual reimbursement will range from about £250,000 to £350,000.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what arrangements will be in place on 1 February to ensure that privately operated tolls do not increase by reason of the incidence of a VAT liability. [93351]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 27 January 2003]: My Department is currently consulting with owners of privately operated statutory tolled undertakings on a reimbursement scheme, which will allow qualifying operators to recover VAT included in tolls. The scheme will be in place before any payment under it will need to be made.

The concession agreement at the Severn crossings has been renegotiated to eliminate the need to increase tolls because of the introduction of VAT.

Traffic Accidents (Driver Liability)

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to introduce legislation on driver liability in road traffic accidents; and if he will make a statement. [93733]

Mr. Jamieson: Road traffic law in both Great Britain and Northern Ireland provides for penalties for bad driving behaviour whether or not the driver is involved in an accident.

The culpability of a motorist charged with a road traffic offence, such as dangerous or careless driving, is a matter for a court to decide.

Traffic Safety Cameras

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the terms of reference for the "Cost Recovery System for Traffic Safety Cameras" study; on what dates (a) the study and (b) its associated pilots were completed; and if he will publish the information gathered by the study. [94092]

Mr. Jamieson: A trial was set up to test the new funding mechanism for safety cameras. The key tests were to reduce speeding and casualties, to encourage general public acceptance of the road safety benefits, and to ensure satisfactory working of the funding and partnership arrangements. The trial ran from 1 April 2000 until 31 March 2002 in eight pilot areas. These have been monitored and an independently produced research report of the findings is expected to be published shortly.

Wales-England Rugby Match (Rail Services)

Kevin Brennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has requested a copy of the independent safety report commissioned by Wales and the West Trains on the provision of rail services after the Wales v. England Six Nations rugby match at the Millennium Stadium, Cardiff; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [93255]

Mr. Jamieson: The SRA has undertaken detailed discussions with the train operator about transport arrangements for this match. However, the safety report owned by Wales and Borders Trains is an internal document. Neither my Department nor the Strategic Rail Authority (SRA) has seen it.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Amnesic Shellfish Poisoning

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to manage amnesic shellfish poisoning in scallops; and what recent discussions she has had and what representations she has received on management of amnesic shellfish poisoning in scallops. [89689]

Ms Blears [holding answer 20 January 2003]: I have been asked to reply.

European Union legislation lays down the health conditions for harvesting and placing on the market of live bivalve molluscs and requires monitoring for biotoxins, including amnesic shellfish poisoning (ASP). If statutory monitoring reveals that the maximum permissible ASP toxin level in the whole animal has been exceeded, the production or relaying area concerned must be closed until the situation has returned to normal. The Food Standards Agency, the United Kingdom competent authority responsible for shellfish issues, has received a number of representations on the management of ASP in scallops. They are currently considering the adoption of an optional derogation in EU law that would provide for a tiered approach to the testing of ASP toxins.

Animal Welfare

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many live sheep were exported from Dover to continental Europe on 10 January 2003 on the Alda K; when and where health certification was carried out in respect of the sheep; how many of the sheep were rejected as unfit for the intended journey (a) during inspection for health certification purposes and (b) at Dover docks, and to where those sheep were taken; and what the address was of the final destination given on the route plan for each of the consignments; [92977]

(2) how many live sheep were exported from Dover to continental Europe on (a) 10 January and (b) 14 January on the Omega Livestock; when and where health certification was carried out in respect of the sheep; how many of the sheep were rejected as unfit for the intended journey (i) during inspection for health certification purposes and (ii) at Dover docks, and to where those sheep were taken; and what the address was of the final destination given on the route plan for each of the consignments. [92978]

Mr. Morley: The information requested is as follows:

Sailing date	Total animals certified	Where consignments were certified	Animals rejected at certification	Animals rejected at Dover docks	Destination
10 January (Alda K)	849	England	0	0	Germany
10 January (Omega Express)	2,174	England	15	0	France
14 January (Omega Express)	2,766	England and Wales	13	0	France

The sheep for the consignments listed were certified within 48 hours prior to export. These consignments were fattening animals transported to holdings, except for the Alda K sailing on 10 January 2003 where they were slaughter animals which went to an approved slaughterhouse. The animals which were rejected at certification remained in Great Britain.

These figures relate to the numbers of sheep certified for export and are subject to revision and change.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she intends to reply to the letter to her Department dated 29 November from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Ms Jean Kellock. [92281]

Alun Michael: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Lord Whitty, responded on 27 January.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Totnes concerning Mr. E. Baker of Kingsbridge, South Devon dated 7 December 2002, concerning his IACS claim. [93882]

Alun Michael: I replied on 26 January.

Departmental Budget

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her total departmental budget was for each year of its existence; what the projected budget is for 2002–03; and how much within each year has been allocated to (a) Rural Affairs, (b) Agriculture, (c) Environmental Protection and (d) International Environmental Matters. [89096]

Alun Michael: The budget figures for each year are as follows:

£ million

	2001–02	2002–03
Total Defra	2,959	2,459
Rural affairs	509	516
Agriculture	1,424	828
Environmental Protection	756	841
International Environmental Matters	30	29

The amounts in the table are budgets scored within departmental expenditure limits. The figures for Rural Affairs, Agriculture, Environmental Protection and International Environmental Matters are an estimated split of direct resources, excluding overheads for central services.

Equine Passports

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which organisations she has licensed to issue equine passports; and if she will make a statement. [93362]

Alun Michael: There are presently 56 equine organisations and associations that have been authorised to issue horse passports in Great Britain.

These passport issuing organisations are either:

Equine studbook societies who deal with a particular breed. These have been recognised under Commission Decision 92/353/EC. This legislation lays down the criteria for the approval or recognition of organisations and associations which maintain or establish studbooks for registered equidae.

International equine organisations that manage horses for competition or racing who have been registered under article 4 of the Horse Passports Order 1997.

List of Organisations and Associations that have been authorised in GB to issue Horse Passports (ie equine studbook societies that have been recognised under commission decision 92/353 EC and international organisations that manage horses for competition or racing:

British Appaloosa Society
British Horse Society

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what animal passports other than equine ones are issued that provide information about drugs administered to the animal concerned. [93365]

Alun Michael: Horses are the only animals that currently require a record to be made of medicines administered as required by Commission Decision 2000/68/EC, which requires all horses to be accompanied by a passport.

Farm Census

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to amend the law to allow the Environment Agency access to farm census information and IACs returns. [87182]

Margaret Beckett: Information can already be released to the Environment Agency in accordance with the provisions of the Agricultural Statistics Act 1979 and the Data Protection Act 1998 but subject to the safeguards provided for in that legislation. Officials are in discussion with the Environment Agency about information requirements and how they may be met.

Flood Defences

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what new funding mechanisms have been introduced for flood defences; and how much she estimates they will raise in (a) 2004–05 and (b) 2005–06. [92011]

Mr. Morley: No new funding mechanisms have yet been introduced. The Government are currently considering the options. The Spending Review figures announced last year for 2005–06 include an estimate of what might be raised from a new mechanism, such as a charge on development on the floodplain. This was set at £20 million out of an increase in provision for flood and coastal defence of £150 million for that year. No such amount was assumed for 2004–05.

Flooding

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Environment Agency's report into flooding in the Marlow and Medmenham area will be completed; and whether it will be published in full. [93208]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 January 2003]: I understand that the Environment Agency have already started to compile and analyse data and information relating to the flooding that occurred throughout the Thames catchment during January 2003. As with previous floods there will be an analysis of what happened and the agency will make available to the public the lessons learnt from this information.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans the Environment Agency has to meet residents in the Marlow and Medmenham area during its inquiry into recent flooding in the area. [93209]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 January 2003]: The Environment Agency held a "open surgery" on 20 January from 9.00 am to 9.00 pm at Shepperton. It invited all those residents from Chertsey who had been flooded and advertised the event in local newspapers and over 500 people attended. Staff spoke to individuals about the cause of the flooding and the agency's plans for managing flood risk.

A further surgery was held on 23 January at Egham, to which residents flooded from the River Thames downstream of Windsor were invited, and a surgery has been arranged for 30 January for residents living between Hurley and Maidenhead.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what guidance she has issued to the Environment Agency concerning priorities for capital projects to tackle flooding. [93601]

Mr. Morley: In order to be eligible for DEFRA grant aid a capital flood defence project must satisfy fundamental economic, technical and environmental criteria and achieve an appropriate priority score based (from April 2003) on a combination of three elements—(i) benefits as compared to cost, (ii) the number of people protected as measured by the number of households at risk, their vulnerability and the extent to which adequate advance warning of flooding can be given, and (iii) environmental protection and enhancement.

In addition to guidance on the above priority scoring system, DEFRA publishes detailed guidance on aspects of project appraisal (strategic planning, economic, environmental, approaches to risk). The documents are intended to assist knowledgeable practitioners; they are not comprehensive manuals or textbooks and they do not define Government policy. However, compliance with this guidance is likely to produce projects that are acceptable for central Government support.

The above are published on the DEFRA website and the Department also provides the Environment Agency with a Memorandum setting out the conditions for grant and which has further information on the Government's priorities for flood defence projects.

Funding Commitments

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many funding commitments were launched by her Department and its predecessors in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999, (d) 2000, (e) 2001, (f) 2002 and (g) 2003; which (i) require bidding and (ii) are linked to a set funding formula; and what the total amount available was for each commitment; [89687]

(2) how many funding commitments were ended by her Department and its predecessors in each year since 1997. [89688]

Alun Michael: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Illegal Meat Imports

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the cost has been of her Department's television advertising campaign to discourage illegal meat imports; how many advertisements have been or will be broadcast, and at what times of the day; and if she will make a statement. [90979]

Margaret Beckett: The television campaign uses two public service fillers rather than paid advertisements. These fillers have been sent to broadcasters to be used in donated airtime. The cost of making and marketing the two fillers was £156,176. To 31 December, the Central Office of Information had been notified of 119 transmissions—71 at night (00:00–05:59), 24 in the afternoon (12:00–17:19) and 24 at breakfast time (06:00–09:25). However, many stations issue transmission logs quarterly, so the first full transmissions report is not due until February.

Internal Drainage Boards

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which Government Ministers are members of internal drainage boards. [91581]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 20 January 2003]: Internal drainage boards are independent bodies. This information is not held centrally. We are not aware of any Government Minister who is a member of an IDB.

Meat Hygiene

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on the European Commission's proposal to require the full recovery of meat hygiene inspection charges from abattoirs and to make all abattoirs enforce new measures for the disposal of blood. [89615]

Margaret Beckett: The Commission has not yet made proposals on charges to abattoirs for health inspections but we have made plain our preference for the existing structure and levels of meat hygiene charges. With respect to disposal of blood, officials are working with industry representatives to achieve satisfactory outcomes both in terms of regulatory requirements and the ability of industry to change existing practices at minimum cost and disruption.

Municipal Waste

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the amount of municipal waste generated in the United Kingdom, using the definition of municipal waste in Article 2*(b)* of the Landfill Directive (99/31/EC). [89625]

Margaret Beckett: It is estimated that around 34 million tonnes of municipal waste were generated in the United Kingdom in 2000–01 (using the definition in Article 2*(b)* of the Landfill Directive).

Organophosphates

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will convene a meeting of scientists, manufacturers, her advisers and the All Party Organophosphate Parliamentary Group to assess progress in identifying past problems with organophosphate products and appropriate policies for their future use. [93692]

Mr. Morley: Following the request at the recent meeting of the Parliamentary All Party Group on OPs, I have asked my officials to draw up proposals for a meeting of stakeholders with an interest in the authorisation and use of OPs in the UK. I will consider these proposals when they are available.

River Management

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the lines of accountability are with regard to the implementation of the European Water Framework Directive in the event of a river basin management plan crossing borders between river basins. [93269]

Mr. Morley: It is proposed that the Environment Agency will be under a duty to prepare a draft river basin management plan for each river basin district in consultation with relevant bodies and that Secretary of State should have an explicit role in approving plans, including powers to require modifications, or to reject them.

Maps of the proposed river basin districts are included at appendix 5 of the Government's Second Consultation Paper. Four basins will cross internal borders, two in England-Wales (the Severn and the Dee) and two in England-Scotland[1] (the Solway/Esk and the Tweed). The Directive allows individual river basins to be combined to form a district and it is proposed that England-Wales forms two districts, and it is likely that England-Scotland will combine basins to form one district.

It is for further consideration how DEFRA and the Wales Assembly Government, and how DEFRA and the Scottish Executive will manage cross-border districts. Cross-border issues England-Scotland are treated separately from cross-border issues England-Wales to take account of the different legislation in place.

[1] A small number of tributaries of the North Tyne rise in Scotland before flowing into England. Since only a small area of the basin lies in Scotland, it is proposed that it be combined with a neighbouring basin lying wholly in England, such as the Tees, into a single river basin district.

Water Poverty

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the number of people affected by water poverty in (a) England, (b) the West Midlands and (c) North Staffordshire. [89676]

Mr. Morley: The Government do not have a quantitative definition for the term 'water poverty', and so no assessment has been made.

Table A, which has been placed in the Library, is drawn from the DSS Family Resources Survey. This is the most recent available compiled information showing the relationship between water and sewerage bills and household incomes in England, and covers the years 1994–95 to 1998–99. The survey does not break the results down by region.

The housing statistics division of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister have used these data to compile figures on 'water affordability' as one of the Government's Sustainable Development Indicators. For illustrative purposes, this exercise used 3 per cent. as the affordability threshold for proportion of income spent on water charges. A chart of these figures covers the years 1994–95 to 1997–98.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Job Sharing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General if she will make a statement on the extent of job sharing in her Department. [90875]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 20 January 2003]: Personnel records for the Crown Prosecution Service show that across the Service on 31 December 2002 there were a total of 1439 staff (approximately 20 per cent. of the workforce) working on a part-time basis. The Crown Prosecution Service does not record job share details separately. However, a number of those working part-time are working on a job-share basis.

The Serious Fraud Office offers its staff a range of flexible working practices to assist them in achieving a satisfactory work/life balance. However it does not, at present, have any staff that have opted to work under a job share arrangement nor has it received any job applications from individuals who wish to work in this way.

Five job sharing arrangements were in place in the Treasury Solicitor's Department on 31 December 2002. All jobs in the Treasury Solicitor's Department are advertised on the basis that they are open to applicants who wish to work flexibly, unless this is expressly excluded due to the nature of the work.

My own Department, the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, and HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate currently have no job sharers.

Legal Action

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Solicitor General what action she has taken to bring criminal charges against persons whose names have been communicated to her following the quashing of a conviction. [88512]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 8 January]: On the basis of the information provided to me by the hon. Member, I am unable to identify the matter to which he refers.

Police Officers (Bribery)

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Solicitor General what criteria she uses to decide whether to proceed with a prosecution of a police officer for bribery in cases involving release of information to the press. [93034]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 27 January]: cases involving allegations against police officers are reviewed in accordance with the Code for Crown Prosecutors as are all cases. It is important for the maintenance of public and police confidence that the same standard is applied to all accused, whoever they may be. The Code recognises that a public interest factor in favour of a prosecution includes where the defendant

> "was in a position of authority or trust"

(paragraph 6.4.d). Prosecutors will therefore have regard to the fact that police officers occupy positions of authority and trust in society.

Under the Public Bodies Corrupt Practices Act 1889 both the offer or the acceptance of a bribe amounts to an offence. Corruption strikes at the heart of public confidence in administrative and judicial affairs. In all such cases where there is sufficient evidence to provide a realistic prospect of a conviction, a prosecution will normally take place unless the public interest factors against proceeding with a case clearly outweigh those in favour.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Arts Expenditure (Somerset)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money has been spent on the arts in Somerset in each financial year since 1999–2000. [93130]

Dr. Howells: The following figures supplied by the Arts Council of England relate to the local authority and administrative area of Somerset county and therefore do not include north Somerset, Bath and north-east Somerset.

Grant-in-aid expenditure in Somerset 1999–2002

Year	Expenditure
1999–2000	324,757
2000–01	214,263
2001–02	246,322

Lottery Expenditure in Somerset 1999–2002

Year	Expenditure
1999–2000	875,740
2000–01	784,095
2001–02	590,162

Civil Servants

Mr. La[illegible]o ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media a[illegible]port how many civil servants have been employed by (a) her Department and (b) each of its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if she will make a statement. [92394]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, columns 333–34W.

Free Television Licences

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will take steps to provide free television licences for all pensioners. [93700]

Dr. Howells: No. The Government have introduced free television licences for people aged 75 or over, because older pensioners are more likely to be reliant on television as their window on the world. Older pensioners are also more likely to be on low incomes. We have no plans to extend free television licences to pensioners below the age of 75.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Businesses (Regional Variations)

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of the regional variations in the number of (a) new businesses registering, (b) businesses trading on-line and (c) businesses with internet access in the United Kingdom. [98210]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 January 2003]: The information requested is set out in the tables

We have a number of programmes to improve the record in all regions.

Citizens Advice Scotland

Ann McKechin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the representations her Department made regarding the refusal of the application by Citizens Advice Scotland to the Treasury's Capital Modernisation Fund in 2001 for funding of an electronic case recording system. [91457]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Department recognises the importance of ensuring that the integrity of a UK-wide Citizens Advice Service is maintained and that the Service in Scotland is on a par with the Service in England and Wales. We have therefore allocated additional one-off project funding of £1 million from within DTI's existing budgets to enable CAS to undertake this work.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cases of computer misuse there were in her Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93039]

Ms Hewitt: My Department has recorded the following statistics for the misuse categories as listed (figures in brackets represent where disciplinary action was taken):

	2002	2001	2000	1999	1998
Accessing/handling inappropriate material	3 (3)	8 (4)	32 (0)	3 (0)	2 (0)

The figures do not include incidents occurring within the Department's Executive Agencies.

Debt Taskforce

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) how many times the Task Force on Tackling Over-Indebtedness has met since its establishment; [92714]

(2) how many DTI employees are engaged in work for the Task Force on Tackling Over-Indebtedness; [92730]

(3) what discussions the Task Force on Tackling Over-Indebtedness are involved in. [92715]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 22 January 2003]: The Task Force on Tackling Over-indebtedness has met 10 times.

The Task Force has sent me its second report which I am considering. I will be issuing a response shortly.

No DTI staff are currently engaged in work for the Task Force.

Departmental Expenditiure (Newsprint)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the total expenditure of her Department was on newspapers, magazines and periodicals in 2002. [90525]

Ms Hewitt: My Department's expenditure on newspapers, magazines and periodicals for 2001–02 was £705,729.

This includes expenditure on national daily and Sunday newspapers, regional newspapers, mass circulation magazines and journals, and academic periodicals. It also includes expenditure on annual publications, in particular reference works that would not normally be considered as periodicals. It is not possible to exclude such annual publications from the above figures, except at disproportionate cost.

Development Agencies

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for what purpose Government money will be used to fund offices and staff for the Welsh Development Agency, the Scottish Development Agency, the East of England Development Agency, the North of England Development Agency and the South West of England Development Agency in California. [88586]

Alan Johnson: The Department is responsible for providing funding for overseas representation in California by One North East, South West of England Regional Development Agency and the East of England Development Agency to carry out inward investment activities. The Welsh Development Agency and Scottish Development International activities in California are funded separately by the Devolved Administrations.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will take powers to ensure that development agencies do not use public money to open offices and employ staff overseas without parliamentary or ministerial approval. [88587]

Alan Johnson [holding answer 14 January 2003]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given on 15 January 2003, Official Report, column 649W.

Equitable Life

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports she received on the transfer out of Equitable Life by the PIA's pension scheme in 1998 at the time the transfer took place. [91187]

Ms Hewitt: None.

Export Control Act

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she will announce the start date for the consultation period on secondary legislation for the Export Control Act 2002. [93468]

Nigel Griffiths: We expect to publish a consultation document on the secondary legislation to be made under the Export Control Act 2002 shortly.

Future Integrated Soldier Technology

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects to be consulted about the industrial implication of the contractor selection for the Future Integrated Soldier Technology (FIST) programme; and whether she will take the value of export opportunities for British companies into account in her assessment of the relative merits of the competing contractors for the FIST programme. [93430]

Alan Johnson: I would expect to be formally consulted by the Ministry of Defence ahead of the preferred contractor decision and announcement. DTI officials have been taking a close interest in the Future Integrated Soldier Technology (FIST) programme and continue to be actively engaged with both the Defence Procurement Agency (DPA) and the companies over the industrial implications of the respective bids.

An understanding of the export potential will form a part of the procurement assessment. As is usual for defence programmes, the Defence Export Services Organisation (DESO) takes the lead on these matters.

North Korea

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports she has received on the use by North Korea of the United Kingdom Magnox Reactor design to build its plutonium production reactors. [91968]

Nigel Griffiths: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has received no reports on the design of the DPRK's reactors.

Pensions (Keyboard Withdrawals)

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what arrangements she is making to assist elderly pensioners suffering from macular degeneration to withdraw their pensions in cash using a keyboard and PIN once the new procedures are implemented. [92776]

Mr. Timms: This is a matter which falls within the day to day responsibility of Post Office Ltd. I have therefore asked the Chief Executive to reply direct to the hon. Member.

PV Solar Panels

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, columns 11–12W, on PV Solar Panels, why grants for PV solar panels were awarded only to public buildings in 2002. [93996]

Mr Wilson: The Large Scale Field Trial was open only to public buildings because European Union State Aid Rules prevented us from giving substantial grants to private sector entities for this type of research and development project.

Small Business

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what (a) advice and (b) financial support her Department gives to small businesses which are transferred to new owners. [92986]

Nigel Griffiths: Personal Business Advisers based in the national network of Business Link Operators can provide advice and support for small businesses transferring to new owners, including help with management buy-outs. Small businesses should call 0845 600 9006 to be put in touch with their local operator, or visit www.businesslink.org to find out more.

The SBS website at: http://www.sbs.gov.uk/content/dti/bsuccession/index.htm sets out the main regulations that apply when a business changes hands, and how to comply with them.

In addition, the Business Debtline, a 3-year pilot, provides support and advice to primarily, but not exclusively, sole traders and micro businesses in financial difficulties. The free phone number 0800 197 6026 and a self-help pack containing comprehensive advice is also available.

TREASURY

Accounting Standards

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to give the Financial Services Authority responsibility for investigating the accounts of companies suspected of breaching accounting standards and laws; [92815]

(2) what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of measures in place to deter breaches of accounting standards and laws by British businesses. [92827]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I have been asked to reply.

This is one of the areas currently being looked at by the Co-ordinating Group on Audit and Accounting Issues. They will be presenting their report to my right hon. Friends the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry and the Chancellor of the Exchequer by the end of the month and I expect my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will make a statement.

Child Trust Fund

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out what the timetable is for the introduction of the Child Trust Fund. [93654]

Ruth Kelly: The Government will announce further decisions regarding the implementation of the Child Trust Fund as part of the Budget cycle, in line with normal practice relating to annually managed expenditure.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which types of financial service providers will be permitted to sell the Child Trust Fund; and whether (a) fund managers and (b) life insurance companies will be permitted to do so. [93655]

Ruth Kelly: As announced in the pre-Budget report, the Child Trust Fund will be offered through open market provision. Providers—including fund managers and life insurance companies—will be able to enter the market if they satisfy a set of conditions.

Construction Industry Scheme

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what impact the extension in application of the Construction Industry Scheme to the fitting out of commercial properties has had on (a) landlords, (b) tenants and (c) other non-construction sector enterprises; whether a regulatory impact assessment has been made following the recent changes; and if he will make a statement. [93367]

Dawn Primarolo: There have been no recent changes to the scope of the Construction Industry Scheme. Whether the scheme applies to the fitting out of commercial premises depends on the commercial arrangements between the parties concerned. This has always been the case.

Dormant Accounts

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what assessment he has made of the total amount of assets residing in dormant accounts and intestate estates held by (a) banks, (b) building societies, (c) credit unions and (d) the post office; [92347]

(2) what assessment he has made of (a) the British Bankers Association scheme and (b) the Building Societies Association scheme to assist customers in tracing dormant accounts and intestate estates. [92349]

Ruth Kelly: We welcome both these schemes. As stated in the discussion document "Next Steps on Volunteering and Giving in the UK", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House, we believe that a more comprehensive unclaimed assets scheme for the voluntary and community sector has considerable attractions. We intend to work constructively with the banks, financial institutions and the voluntary and community sector to reach a shared understanding of the assets involved, of how things can be improved and how a comprehensive database might be achieved that would lead to a considerable increase in charities' income.

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to introduce legislation to place a statutory duty on banks, building societies, credit unions and the Post Office to trace owners of dormant accounts; [92348]

(2) what plans he has to introduce legislation to enable the transfer of assets held in dormant accounts and intestate estates held by banks, building societies, credit unions and the Post Office into an independently managed dormant accounts fund, if the rightful owner or heir is not traced. [92350]

Ruth Kelly: None.

HMS Nottingham

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to the answer of 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 403W, on HMS Nottingham, which Department of State is paying for the cost of transportation of HMS Nottingham on a heavy lift ship. [93028]

Mr. Ingram: I have been asked to reply.

The cost of transporting HMS Nottingham back to the United Kingdom on a heavy lift ship will be met by the Ministry of Defence from within existing funds, and by flexing of priorities if necessary.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the level of real spending in the Inland Revenue in each year from 1985–86 to 2002–03, using 2000–01 prices; and if he will make a statement. [91721]

Dawn Primarolo: The real expenditure on the Inland Revenue Department's administration, quoted at 2000–01 prices is as follows:

£ million

	Expenditure
1985–86	[1]—
1986–87	1,647.3
1987–88	1,718.1
1988–89	1,668.6
1989–90	1,748.0
1990–91	1,833.8
1991–92	1,919.7
1992–93	1,914.6
1993–94	2,007.7
1994–95	1,845.9
1995–96	1,871.7
1996–97	1,810.3
1997–98	1,771.7
1998–99	1,810.3
1999–2000	1,929.0
2000–01	2,096.0
2001–02	1,991.0
2002–03	[2]—

[1] Information unobtainable within the timescale.

[2] Full-year expenditure details not yet available.

Notes:

1. 1999–2000—The Inland Revenue took on the Contributions Agency and Family Credit Unit.
2. 1999–2000—The reported expenditure from this year forward has been reported under the resource accounting, that is accruals, basis. Prior to this the figures were reported under a cash basis.

Landfill Tax Credit

David Burnside: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to revise the operation of the landfill tax credit in Northern Ireland. [93270]

John Healey: As announced in the pre-Budget report, the Government will continue a reformed tax credit scheme which will make available approximately a third of the funding that is currently going through the landfill tax credit scheme, around £47 million per year, for spending on local community environment projects. The figure of £47 million will be kept broadly constant in real terms, which will ensure that the current level of support for these types of projects is maintained. The Government are considering how this successor tax credit scheme, which will apply throughout the UK, may be changed to take account of the most serious criticisms of the current scheme made by bodies including the Public Accounts Committee. The Government will set out its plans for reform of the scheme on a Budget timetable.

The remainder of the funding which would otherwise be going through the landfill tax credit scheme, around £100 million in 2003–04, will be allocated to public spending to encourage sustainable waste management.

This spending will be a devolved matter, and it will be for the Northern Ireland Assembly or, during a period when the Assembly is suspended, Northern Ireland Office Ministers to determine how to allocate these funds to sustainable waste management activities in Northern Ireland.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghanistan

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much was spent on aid to Afghanistan in 2002; and what will be spent in 2003. [93143]

Clare Short: The international community provided approximately $1.8 billion to Afghanistan in 2002. DFID's contribution is over £55 million in the 2002–03 financial year so far.

Donor's contributions for 2003 have yet to be finalised, although there are indications that it will be broadly similar to last year.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many cases of computer misuse there were in her Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93045]

Clare Short: I am pleased to advise that we have had no recorded cases of computer misuse in the last five years in my Department.

Ethiopia

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent discussions she has had with the Defence Secretary regarding safeguards on military aid to Ethiopia. [92862]

Clare Short: Our Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia includes a commitment to consideration of how we might help Ethiopia reform its security sector. The first step towards this will be a joint DFID/FCO/MOD scoping mission in early April 2003.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the impact of Ethiopia's debt burden on poverty levels in Ethiopia. [92863]

Clare Short: Ethiopia qualified for interim debt relief under the Heavily Indebted Poor Country (HIPC) Initiative at decision point in November 2001. In the current Ethiopian financial year, this will reduce external debt service payments by 54 per cent. and allow an increase in poverty-targeted expenditure of around 1.3 per cent. of GDP. Ethiopia has now completed its Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper, called "Sustainable Development and Poverty Reduction Programme".

This sets out the policy action framework not only for spending the savings from debt relief, but also for allocating all other aid and Government revenue, so that they have the greatest impact on poverty reduction.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of human rights violations by (a) the Ethiopian Government and (b) the Ethiopian military. [92864]

Clare Short: We take allegations of human rights abuses in Ethiopia seriously, regularly raising concerns both bilaterally and through the EU. The Ethiopian Government set out plans in its Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper to make progress in these areas. Our response is set out in our newly agreed Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of (a) the freedom of the press and (b) the independence of the judiciary in Ethiopia. [92865]

Clare Short: The Ethiopian Government set out plans in its Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper to make progress in these areas. Our response is set out in our newly agreed Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of levels of political and ethnic violence in Ethiopia. [92866]

Clare Short: We have covered these issues in our newly agreed Country Assistance Plan for Ethiopia, which will be available on the DFID website in February 2003.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of Ethiopia's total debt burden will be relieved if Ethiopia completes the HIPC Initiative; and when she expects Ethiopia to complete the HIPC Initiative. [92867]

Clare Short: We expect Ethiopia to reach completion point under the Heavily Indebted Poor Country (HIPC) Initiative in 2004, at which stage, it will receive an irrevocable reduction in its debt stock. Total debt relief is expected to be US$1.9 billion in nominal terms, which is equivalent to 47 per cent. of the net present value of debt service. The British Government are concerned that no country should exit the HIPC process with an unsustainable level of debt. Where necessary, we therefore support the provision of additional debt relief at completion point—so called 'topping up'—for countries such as Ethiopia which, since decision point, have suffered shocks which reduce their export earnings and ability to service their debts.

Iraq

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what contingency plans her Department has made for humanitarian assistance to Iraq in the event of military action; and what funds the Government will make available for such measures. [93149]

Clare Short: My Department is undertaking contingency planning for a range of eventualities in Iraq. The potential costs of additional humanitarian assistance under various scenarios, and how they would be financed, are under active review.

World Trade Rules

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures the Government are taking to make the eradication of poverty the primary aim of world trade rules. [93732]

Clare Short: World Trade Organisation (WTO) rules need to apply to all members. But they must also be achievable by developing countries, with realistic implementation schedules and targets.

New rules require the right balance between standardisation and flexibility. For rules to be strong and binding, they need to have enough flexibility to meet the varying needs of the WTO membership and to recognise that WTO members are at different stages of development.

Without flexibility, new WTO agreements will be stuck at the lowest common denominator. This will lead to richer members making agreements amongst themselves outside the WTO and without consideration for the impacts on developing countries.

The term special and differential treatment is used to describe special provisions for developing countries in existing WTO agreements[1]. Many developing countries complain that in the Uruguay Round the application of special and differential treatment and the treatment of different country circumstances were haphazard and that longer implementation deadlines for developing countries were decided arbitrarily.

There needs to be a better application of flexibility in designing future WTO rules. Appropriate flexibility should be integrated systematically into WTO agreements, rather than added on as an afterthought.

Special and differential treatment reforms will eventually link into the poverty reduction strategies. Thus the integration of trade policy reform is essential if poor people are to benefit from trade liberalisation. In addition to special and differential treatment, the UK has been supporting the Integrated Framework. The Integrated Framework has two aims: to identify trade capacity building and technical assistance needs in least developed countries to which the multilateral agencies and donors can then make a co-ordinated response; and to mainstream trade into least developed countries poverty reduction strategies, so that pro-poor trade policies are included in a consistent manner in a country's overall development strategy. The Integrated Framework is based on the principle of country ownership and partnership. It is now being implemented in 14 least developed countries and eventually will be extended to Low Income countries. Ultimately the Integrated Framework should cease to be necessary as trade becomes successfully integrated into poverty reduction strategies.

[1] These are in the form of (1) provisions aimed at increasing trade opportunities, (2) provisions that call upon WTO members to safeguard the interest of developing countries, (3) flexibility of commitments, (4) transitional time periods, and (5) technical assistance.

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what estimate the United Nations has published in US dollar value of the international sales disadvantage effectively imposed on poor countries by world trade rules. [93731]

Clare Short: The world's poorest countries face tariffs that are on average more than twice as high as those facing developed countries. Recent research estimates that developing countries could gain approximately $150 billion a year in real income from a 50 per cent. reduction in tariff barriers and other forms of protection by both developed and developing countries. Similarly, it has also been estimated that a 40 per cent. reduction in agricultural tariffs and export subsidies could boost global real incomes by around $60 billion a year.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures she is taking to put pressure on Zimbabwe to allow private imports of food to Zimbabwe. [93860]

Clare Short: The UN, with our strong support, have been pressurising Zimbabwe to import sufficient food for the non-destitute for many months. Zimbabwe has a state monopoly on cereal imports, and price controls that prevent effective private-sector participation in the food market. All donors have appealed to Zimbabwe to amend the current restrictions. The UN Special Envoy for the Southern Africa Humanitarian crisis, Mr. James Morris, has raised this issue with Mr. Mugabe six times, most recently obtaining agreement that a scheme first proposed in mid-2002 to facilitate private sector involvement, should be reconsidered for wheat imports for urban needs.

Private sector participation would help make food available for those who do have the money to purchase it. But while the private sector as a whole remains excluded, many organisations have been able to obtain import licences for specific programmes of humanitarian assistance.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Criminal Records Bureau

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many teachers are awaiting clearance from the Criminal Records Bureau, broken down by local education authority. [89312]

Hilary Benn: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Walthamstow (Neil Gerrard) on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 194W.

Average Sentences

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the average sentence for (a) burglary and (b) robbery was in each year since 1972. [90151]

Hilary Benn: The information requested, relating to average custodial sentence length for persons sentenced for burglary and robbery in England and Wales 1984 to 2001, is contained in the table. Data for earlier years are not available.

Statistics for 2002 will be published in the autumn.

Average custodial sentence length imposed at all courts for persons convicted of offences of burglary and robbery and the number sentenced to life imprisonment England and Wales, 1984 to 2001 [1]

[3] From 1984 to 1997 the numbers sentenced to life imprisonment exclude those who were sentenced under Sec 53(2) Children and Young Persons Act 1933.

Community Sentences

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what was the average number of hours of community service required by community sentences given by magistrates in England and Wales to (a) under 17-year-olds, (b) 17 to 21-year-olds and (c) over 21-year-olds in each year since 1995; [92149]

(2) how many community sentences were given by magistrates in England and Wales to (a) under 17-years-olds, (b) 17 to 21-year-olds and (c) over 21-year-olds in each year since 1995. [92148]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is contained in the table.

Number of persons sentenced at magistrates courts to a community sentence, community punishment order or community punishment and rehabilitation order, and the average number of hours ordered to be served, England and Wales 1995 to 2001[1]

Crime

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will define total crime for the purposes of the allocation of drug and crime reduction funding for 2003–04 to police basic command units. [93353]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth [holding answer 27 January 2003]: The national recorded crime statistics for burglary, robbery and theft of and from vehicles, were used for determining the 30 Basic Command Units (BCUs) with the highest levels of acquisitive crime. Although recorded crime statistics do not differentiate between drug and non-drug related crime, these types of crimes are the ones mostly closely associated with drug use.

Crime Reduction

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his written answer of 16 December 2002, Official Report, column 624W, when he plans to place the findings of the exercise on crime and disorder reduction partnerships and their implications for nuisance and noise associated with fireworks in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [91856]

Mr. Denham: As I indicated to my hon. Friend on 16 December 2002, Official Report, column 624W, the monitoring exercise he refers to was set up to monitor incidents relating to the improper use of fireworks between 23 October and 15 January. We are currently gathering and analysing the responses received. Once this process has been completed a copy of our findings will be placed in the Library.

Criminal Cases Review Commission

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions have been overturned by the Court of Appeal following a referral by the Criminal Cases Review Commission since March 1997. [92309]

Hilary Benn: The Court of Appeal has quashed 60 convictions obtained in England and Wales following references by the Criminal Cases Review Commission.

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases, where the conviction has been overturned by the Court of Appeal following a referral by the Criminal Cases Review Commission, had previously been investigated by his Department prior to March 1997. [92310]

Hilary Benn: Departmental records indicate that 36 cases, where the Court of Appeal has quashed a conviction obtained in England and Wales following references by the Criminal Cases Review Commission, had previously been the subject of applications to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary for a referral. I am unable to say how many of these 36 cases were investigated prior to their transfer to the Commission, as this information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases the Criminal Cases Review Commission has referred to the Court of Appeal since March 1997. [92311]

Hilary Benn: The Criminal Cases Review Commission has referred 173 cases to the Court of Appeal. (This figure includes referrals of convictions or sentences or both, but excludes referrals to the Court of Appeal in Northern Ireland or to Crown Courts.)

John Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases have been referred to the Criminal Cases Review Commission since March 1997. [92312]

Hilary Benn: There have been 5,520 applications from England, Wales and Northern Ireland to the Criminal Cases Review Commission. This figure includes requests for case reviews of both summary and indictable convictions and of sentence only. At least three quarters of the applications received prove to be ineligible for a case review (usually because of a failure to exhaust the normal appeals process).

Drink-driving

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many custodial sentences were given for drink-driving offences in the last three years, broken down by police authority; [91567]

(2) how many drink-driving convictions in England and Wales there have been in the last three years, broken down by police authority. [91569]

Hilary Benn: Information taken from the Home Office Court Proceedings Database on convictions and custodial sentences for drink-driving offences by police force area 1998 to 2000 is shown in the table. Data for 2001 will be available in February.

[1] Immediate custody includes sentences of Secure Training Order, Detention and Training Order Young Offenders Institution, and Unsuspended sentence of imprisonment.

[2] Staffordshire police force were only able to submit sample data for persons proceeded against and convicted in the magistrates' courts for the year 2000. Although sufficient to estimate higher orders of data, these data are not robust enough at a detailed level and have been excluded from the table.

Drug Dependency (Prisoners)

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to improve the quality and coverage of prison-based drug treatment programmes. [92114]

Hilary Benn: A framework is already in place to address the wide-ranging needs of drug-misusing prisoners and includes:

detoxification in all local and remand prisons;

Counselling, Assessment, Referral, Advice and Throughcare (CARATs) in all prisons;

60 intensive treatment programmes;

voluntary drug testing available in all prisons.

Delivery is supported by a range of quality standards:

minimum standards for clinical services for substance misusers and for CARATs; independent accreditation of treatment programmes by the Correctional Services Accreditation Panel (formerly the Joint Accreditation Panel)—with the aim of having all programmes accredited by March 2004; separate auditing is also conducted by the Standards Audit Unit, in accordance with PSO 0200—Performance Standards Manual.

Additionally, the Service is working closely with the National Treatment Agency to ensure its models of care, treatment standards and standards for drug workers are, where appropriate, being applied to prison-based work.

The Government's 2002 Spending Review made provision for significant, additional funding for action on drugs misuse. In particular, investment in aftercare and throughcare will help ensure the gains made whilst prisoners are in custody are not lost on their release. Provision has also been made to boost treatment in prisons.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of prisoners in the United Kingdom who would benefit from a programme of treatment for drugs dependency. [92118]

Hilary Benn: Records of the number of prisoners who would benefit from a programme of treatment are not kept centrally. Data from the Office for National Statistics show that around 80 per cent. of prisoners had used drugs at some point before coming into prison, with 54 per cent. reporting drug dependency in the year prior to custody.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the routes by which drugs enter prisons; and what proportion enter through external visits. [92121]

Hilary Benn: By definition drug smuggling is a covert activity which is extremely difficult to quantify and will vary between prisons. The main identified routes by which attempts are made to smuggle drugs into prisons include:

social visits;

mail;

perimeter breach; and reception

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many places on drug treatment programmes are available to prisoners in (a) England and (b) Kent. [92101]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service has in place a comprehensive framework to address the needs of drug-misusing prisoners.

Delivery targets are given in the table.

Intervention	All prisons' targets (by March 2004)	Kent targets (2002–03)
CARATs[1]	25,000	1,000

[1] Counselling assessment referral advice through care.

[2] Therapeutic communities.

[3] Voluntary drug testing.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to ensure that arrestees who test positive for drugs are directed into treatment programmes. [92112]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: In the areas in England and Wales where the provisions for drug testing persons in police detention are currently being implemented, it is part of the drug testing procedure that those who test positive for a specified Class A drug are given specific opportunity to see an arrest referral worker, with a view to assessment of their drug misuse and referral to appropriate treatment.

Measures being introduced as part of the Government's new comprehensive programme of criminal justice interventions to get drug misusers into treatment include the enhancement of existing arrest referral schemes and the expansion and extension of the drug testing arrangements under which the police can test persons, after charge, for specified Class A drugs. We are also taking forward in the Criminal Justice Bill the proposal to pilot a presumption against bail for those who refuse to be assessed as to their dependency on, or propensity to misuse, specified Class A drugs, or who then refuse to undergo relevant follow-up action recommended.

The programme will be backed up by improvements in treatment capacity and local delivery.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners in Kent tested positive for drugs in each of the past five years. [92113]

Hilary Benn: The proportion of prisoners who tested positive under random mandatory drug testing (MDT) in Kent prisons is given in the table.

	Percentage positive
1997–98	13.6
1998–99	11.9
1999–2000	9.8
2000–01	8.8
2001–02	9.4

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he proposes to address the availability of drugs in prisons. [92120]

Hilary Benn: A range of measures is in place to reduce the availability of drugs in prisons. Elements include:

passive and active drug dogs;

a range of fixed and low-level furniture in visits areas;

closed circuit television in visits areas;

measures to deal with visitors who smuggle drugs into prisons;

mandatory drug testing; and agreed searching policies.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners in the past year underwent treatment for drugs dependency in (a) England and (b) Kent. [92119]

Hilary Benn: The numbers of prisoners engaging in some form of drugs treatment during 2001–02 are given in the table.

Intervention	All prisons (England and Wales)	Kent prisons

Gun Crime

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were convicted of offences involving airguns during 2001–02; what proportion of those convictions were for criminal damage; how many of those convicted of criminal damage were aged under 17 years; and what the ages were of all those convicted of offences more serious than criminal damage involving airguns; [90654]

(2) what proportion of those convicted of firearms offences during 2001–02 (a) had no previous criminal convictions, (b) had served sentences in custody and (c) were in each age decile from age 10 upwards. [90655]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, 240 persons aged 10 and under 17 years were found guilty of offences in England and Wales during 2001 under the various Firearms Acts 1968 to 1997 (11 per cent. of all persons found guilty of firearms offences). The equivalent figures for those persons aged 17 and under 21 was 455 (21 per cent.); and 1,467 persons aged 21 and over (68 per cent.).

Information for 2002 is due for publication in the late autumn of 2003.

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of illegal gun possession crime were recorded in (a) Lancashire, (b) the north-west of England, (c) England, (d) Wales and (e) the UK in (i) 2002 and (ii) each of the preceding five years. [90749]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Numbers of illegal firearm possession offences are not collected separately. Offences of illegal possession of firearms are included in the recorded crime classifications of 'Possession of Weapons' and 'Firearms Acts Offences' (Home Office offence classifications 8B and 81 respectively), but other offences are also included under these classifications, for example, possession of knives and illegal trading in firearms. These offence classifications were used from 1 April 1998, and the figures for England and Wales since that date are given in the table. A breakdown of the offences included under these classifications is included on the Home Office website at: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/countrules.html

Financial year	Possession of weapons	Firearms acts offences
1998–99	23,635	3,325
1999–2000	23,792	3,143
2000–01	24,552	3,531
2001–02	28,740	3,205

Some police forces adopted the principles of the National Crime Recording Standard in advance of its national implementation on 1 April 2002, which will have the effect of increasing the number of crimes counted.

Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

HMP Garth and HMP Wymott

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to introduce 24-hour health care at HMP Wymott; [92027]

(2) what plans he has to build a prison hospital on the site of (a) HMP Garth and (b) HMP Wymott. [92023]

Hilary Benn: There are no plans to introduce full 24-hour health care at Wymott prison as there is already a 13-place in-patient facility with 24-hour nursing cover in the health care centre at Garth prison, which serves as a resource for other Prison Service establishments in the area, including Wymott prison.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the decision was taken to place two prisoners in single cells at HMP Wymott. [92020]

Hilary Benn: The decision to ask training establishments to locate two prisoners in selected single cells was taken centrally, as a result of the overwhelming population pressures faced by the prisons estate. The practice commenced at Wymott on 26 June 2002. Each single cell utilised in this way has been risk assessed for the purpose, and all prisoners are also individually risk assessed to determine their suitability for location with another prisoner.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to build (a) extensions to and (b) a new prison at (i) HMP Garth and (ii) HMP Wymott. [92022]

Hilary Benn: On 27 March 2002, the Prison Service was granted an extension in time of a further five years to the planning clearances already granted for additional single houseblocks for 120 prisoners at both Garth and Wymott prisons.

Planning clearance has been applied for to increase the size of the proposed houseblock at Wymott to 180 places. The outcome of the application is expected on 21 January 2003. On 24 July 2002, planning clearance was granted for an 80 place modular temporary unit (MTU) at Wymott, which will be additional to the 180-place houseblock. Work is under way to construct the 80 place MTU and, subject to a successful planning application, work on the 180-place houseblock will begin in the near future.

There are no immediate plans to build the houseblock at Garth although the position will be regularly reviewed and there are currently no plans to build a complete new prison at either site.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of bed watches taking place at HMP Wymott; and what the average number was in other prisons at the most recent available date. [92024]

Hilary Benn: Since July 2002, there have been 1,000 bedwatches for 60 prisoners at Wymott, averaging around 40 per week. No figures are centrally collected on the frequency of bedwatches and information on the average number in other prisons is therefore not available.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were taken to hospital from HMP Wymott on average in each of the last five years. [92025]

Hilary Benn: During the last five years, an average of 470 prisoners have been taken to hospital each year from Wymott prison.

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners died in HMP Wymott in each of the last five years. [92026]

Hilary Benn: A total of 14 prisoners have died at HMP Wymott in the last five years: two in 1998, three in 1999, five in 2000, one in 2001 and three in 2002.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he is taking to ensure that the courts deal effectively with persistent juvenile offenders. [92019]

Hilary Benn: We have delivered the Youth Justice Pledge by halving the time taken from arrest to sentence for persistent young offenders, funded Youth Justice Board Intensive Supervision and Surveillance programmes for the most prolific offenders and introduced the detention and training order for persistent and more serious young offenders.

We have also strengthened the secure remand powers and introduced bail tagging for 12 to 16-year-olds nationally, and 17-year-olds in the 10 street crime priority areas, who repeatedly offend.

We have already reduced young offender reconvictions by 14.6 per cent., as measured by those dealt with in July 2000 just after national implementation of the main youth justice reforms.

Police Authority Funding

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the standard police grant sought by each police authority in England and Wales was in each year since 1996–97; and what the final settlement was for each authority. [91104]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 16 January 2003]: Police grant is allocated by the police funding formula and not by police authority bids. The funding formula is largely based on an analysis of policing activity. Distribution between Police Authorities takes into account socio-demographic factors such as population.

I have placed in the Library details of general policing grants since 1996–97. Figures for 2003–04 are provisional. I expect to announce details of the final settlement for next year on 5 February.

Prison Staff Changes

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how quickly a risk assessment has to be carried out in prisons when changes in staffing levels take place. [92021]

Hilary Benn: Prison Governors are required to carry out risk assessments where a change in staffing level brings an increased level of risk to staff, prisoners and others.

The risk assessment should be carried out on those jobs, which are affected by a change in working practice, and should be completed before the change in staffing levels is implemented, except where the operational demands of the Service prevent this.

Replica Guns

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his policy on possession of a replica gun in a public place. [93211]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: An imitation firearm can create the same fear as a real one. It is not acceptable that people going about their business should be put in fear in this way. We therefore propose to introduce a new offence of having an imitation firearm in a public place without reasonable excuse.

This will mean that anyone seen in public with an imitation firearm can be challenged and if they do not have a reasonable explanation for having the gun, they can be arrested before any further offences can be committed.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

BG Group

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library copies of the reports which were compiled by the secondee from BG Group to the British Embassy in Indonesia in 2001 on the strengthening of official organisations in that country. [89461]

Mr. Rammell: I have today asked for this report to be placed in the Library of the House.

Brazil

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will seek an early meeting with the Government of President Lula of Brazil to discuss debt and environmental issues. [93116]

Mr. Rammell: During my visit to Brazil from 14–18 December I discussed various issues, including the economy and environment, with Ministers-designate of President Lula's future Government. We hope to build on these discussions through a series of senior bilateral exchanges early this year. We have invited President Lula to make an early visit to the UK.

Cuba

Mr. Connarty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Government has had with the Government of the USA on its policies on trade between UK companies and Cuba. [91680]

Mr. Rammell: Our Embassy in Washington and Ministers and officials in the FCO and the Department of Trade and Industry frequently discuss a range of trade issues with their US counterparts. These include from time to time, trade with Cuba in the context of the US Helms-Burton legislation. The UK and the EU oppose this legislation because of its extraterritorial effect.

Diplomatic Staff

Mr. Alan Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the complement was of diplomatic staff in each of the Arabic-speaking capitals in the Middle East in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [92934]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The table shows the number of UK-based staff in our Middle East posts from 1990. The figures include all those staff whose salaries are paid by the FCO and other Government Departments.

Energy Supplies (Security)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he intends to take to bolster the security of energy supplies. [92176]

Mr. Rammell: Energy security is a key element of energy policy, security of energy supplies is one of the issues being looked at in the forthcoming Energy White Paper.

Government Payments

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what payments have been made to (a) Turkey, (b) Syria and (c) Jordan by the Government in each of the last three years; for what purpose; and if he will make a statement. [87412]

Mr. Straw: Government funding for projects in the above countries for the last three years totals:

(a) Turkey	6,972,416
(b) Syria	429,800
(c) Jordan	21,078,129

We have made no direct financial payments to these Governments, rather we have provided services in the form of training, expertise and equipment. These figures are approximate and may not be exhaustive. A breakdown of expenditure is set out as follows:

Breakdown of Expenditure

(a) Turkey

Funds: Purpose—to help Turkey meet the Copenhagen Political Criteria and to help Turkey address issues of importance to the UK. These include:

EU Action Plan: past projects include funding the Ministry of the Interior's and Ministry of Education's participation in the British Council Seminar in the UK on 'Communicating Human Rights'.

Human Rights Project Fund (HRPF): past projects include human rights training for the Jandarma in custody, detention and public order policing.

Global Conflict Prevention Fund (GCPF): past projects include an anti-smuggling/customs course.

Defence Assistance Fund (DAF): past projects include English language training for Turkish officers at the BMEC English Language School in Beaconsfield. The DAF may be used to defray the cost, in full or in part, of bilateral activities such as training activities which provide a direct defence benefit. The use of the fund is determined by the country priorities set out in the Defence Assistance Plan.

Drugs and Crime Fund (DCF): past projects include customs training.

(Other small funds include the Environmental programme budget and project fund)

Bilateral defence relations with Syria have improved. Over the past two years, the MOD has established a programme of assistance with the Syrians worth about £30,000 annually. This money is spent on funding Syrian candidates on courses such as English Language Training.

(c) Jordan

DfID's support to Jordan is set out in the table. This consists of debt relief, aid trade provision and technical assistance. The FCO funds small projects under the Global Conflict Prevention Fund. We also fund Chevening Scholarship, sponsored visits programmes and human rights projects.

The MOD has an extensive bilateral programme of assistance with Jordan costing in the region of £400,000 annually. These funds are spent on providing course places to the Jordanian Armed Forces and in-country training. Their largest project to date with the Jordanians was the gifting of Challenger I Tanks, a project that began in August 1999 and is ongoing. This was a gift from the UK Government to the Jordanian Government, not a direct payment.

Heritage Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; if he will list such assets; and if he will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92375]

Mr. Rammell: The FCO holds very few heritage assets. We do however own many antiques and other valuable items that are used as working, operational, assets. The only such items that we have sold since 1997 have been: one antique carpet, one tea table, three armchairs, one sofa, one lectern, one bookcase, one dining table. The total sales proceeds after commission was £21,424.

Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms Convention

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to ratify protocol 13 of the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms; and if he will make a statement. [93151]

Mr. Rammell: The UK Government plan to ratify protocol 13 of the European Convention on the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms by June this year. The Lord Chancellor's Department handles the ratification process. The Protocol will come into force when 10 states have ratified it, at present there are only 5 ratifications.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the Government's policy is in respect of the 10 point agreement on cooperation on inspections agreed between Dr Blix on behalf of UNMOVIC and the Iraqi Government on 20 January. [94049]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The 10 points in the joint statement made during Dr. Blix's visit to Baghdad last week do not constitute an agreement. They are simply a statement of practical arrangements. They do not add to or alter Iraq's obligations under UN Security Council Resolution 1441.

The Government have repeatedly stated that it is essential that Iraq co-operate fully and unconditionally with the inspectors as they are required to do under UNSCR 1441.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92438]

Mr. Rammell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Pakistan

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the role of Pakistan in the proliferation of nuclear weapons. [93429]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Pakistan's continued development and testing of nuclear weapons and the means for their delivery is a matter of concern to the entire international community.

Pakistan's nuclear weapons programme is a breach of the requirements of UN Security Council Resolution 1172. We regularly call upon Pakistan to abide by all the requirements of the Resolution, including cessation of the development of nuclear weapons, and accession—as a non-nuclear weapons state—to both the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons and the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty.

We are aware of, and concerned by, reports that Pakistan has nuclear related dealings with other countries.

Performance Report

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department's autumn performance report for 2002 will be published. [93152]

Mr. Rammell: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr Flight) on 21 January Official Report column 299W

Radioactive Contamination

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports his Department has received on radioactive contamination of floodwaters in Kyrgystan and Uzbekistan and the risks of such contamination within Afghanistan. [93095]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We received reports about flooding and landslides in the Maili Su area of Kyrgyzstan in May 2002. There was some concern at the time that Soviet era uranium dumps and deposits could be disturbed, leading to contamination of Kyrgyz rivers. Though this did not happen, there remains some risk that radioactive waste could be disturbed by future landslides and earthquakes. If waste was to enter the Maili Su river, Uzbekistan and Tajikistan, through which the river also flows, would be affected. We are not aware of reports suggesting that Afghanistan would be affected, but will continue to monitor the situation.

UN Resolution 1441

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Government have had with the US Administration on US compliance with Paragraph 10 of UN Resolution 1441. [93322]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly discuss with the US Administration all aspects of Iraq policy, including support for UNMOVIC/IAEA operations. Both the UK and the US are fully committed to supporting UN weapons inspections in Iraq.

Weapons of Mass Destruction

Mr. Tam Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the parameters by which the Government defines whether a weapon falls into the category of weapons of mass destruction. [93321]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: There is no universally accepted definition of the phrase "weapons of mass destruction", but it is generally held to refer to nuclear, chemical and biological weapons.

Zimbabwe

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to secure international agreement for (a) a sporting boycott, (b) power sanctions and (c) wider economic sanctions against Zimbabwe; and what the value of imports from Zimbabwe to the United Kingdom was in the last 12 months. [91269]

Mr. Rammell: The EU has put in place targeted sanctions including an arms embargo, a travel ban and assets freeze, specifically targeted at 79 members of the Mugabe regime. We have also made clear our views that the British cricket team should not play in Zimbabwe at present. However we do not believe that a general sporting boycott, power sanctions, or wider economic sanctions would be right. Such measures would only serve to harm the Zimbabwean people, who are already suffering enough under Mugabe's leadership. The latest yearly figure for imports from Zimbabwe to the UK is for 2001, when imports amounted to £91 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Donaghadee Treatment Works

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made on the development of the North Down Waste Water Treatment Works at Donaghadee; and whether the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Basildon (Angela Smith), has met the Donaghadee Planning Action Group in relation to this matter. [92302]

Angela Smith: The decision to locate the North Down Wastewater Treatment Works on the site adjacent to the Donaghadee Carpet Factory was taken in February 2002 by Peter Robinson MP MLA, the then Minister for Regional Development, following a detailed site search and appraisal process, and consideration and evaluation of all relevant factors.

An application for Crown Development for the Works was made by Water Service on 14 May 2002. The application was accompanied by an Environmental Statement. Planning Service has consulted specialist advisers within Government and in the public sector on the application and the Environmental Statement. A number of responses are awaited. When these are received, Planning Service will assess the responses from consultees to ensure that they are satisfied with the content of the Environmental Statement. If further information is required, an addendum to the Environmental Statement will be necessary.

The application and the Environmental Statement were advertised for public comment in accordance with the normal procedures. A substantial number of objections have been received, including the Donaghadee Planning Action Group. On completion of the consultation process associated with the planning application and the Environmental Statement, Planning Service will have to consider the further processing of the application, including the need for a public inquiry.

In dealing with planning cases I have decided not to get involved in procedural and operational matters, and so have turned down meeting requests where applications are at these stages. However, I have met with members of the Donaghadee Sewerage Action Group to discuss issues relating to the selection process.

In parallel with the planning issues, the Valuation and Lands Agency has been asked to commence initial land acquisition procedures for the site. The cost of the entire scheme has recently been assessed and is now estimated to be £42 million. The Works has been identified as one of seven major wastewater treatment projects that may be suitable for inclusion in a Public Private Partnership (PPP) programme of work. This programme is currently the subject of a detailed appraisal study that will take several months to complete.

Larne to Whitehead Railway Line

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what funding the railway line between Larne and Whitehead will receive from the Regional Transport Strategy 2002–12; and what funding will be available for upgrading this stretch of line in the future. [82682]

Angela Smith: The Regional Transportation Strategy (RTS) for Northern Ireland 2002–2012 identifies a range of strategic transportation investment priorities including funding of just over £500 million in railways over the next 10 years. It does not specify amounts to be invested in individual railway lines. Commitments to proceed with any major capital scheme will be subject to the normal Budgetary process, economic appraisal and the consideration of any statutory procedures. Furthermore, decisions on the retention of rail services north of Whitehead; and north and north-west of Ballymena, will also be subject to successful results from the introduction of new trains and improved infrastructure on the rest of the network early in the implementation of the Strategy.

Motorcycle Road Races

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in providing further funds for circuit safety work at the North West 200 circuit and the Ulster Grand Prix Motorcycle circuits; and what discussions have taken place to identify (a) a schedule and (b) the cost of safety works at North West 200 and Ulster Grand Prix circuits. [92939]

Angela Smith: There has been ongoing discussions regarding the need for safety works at the North West 200 and Ulster Grand Prix circuits. Schedules detailing the extent and the cost of the work required were submitted to the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure on the 15 January and these are presently under consideration.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made with the proposal to permit motorcycle road racing clubs responsible for the North West 200 and the Ulster Grand Prix to access the Health and Safety funds created for sporting stadia in order to finance essential safety work at their respective circuits. [92940]

Angela Smith: The Sports Council for Northern Ireland will be drawing up proposals for a new programme which will take account of health and safety needs at sporting venues in the province. The new scheme will be subject to consultation prior to its introduction in 2003–04. The total cost is circa £90,000.

Museum of Sea and Sky

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are required to take forward the MAGNI proposal for a museum of sea and sky at Titanic Quarter. [92935]

Angela Smith: MAGNI has set out clear stages for taking forward its proposed heritage development at Titanic Quarter. In order, these are: the establishment of a project team; the appointment of consultants; the development of an outline lottery bid; the raising of support among other bodies; and the development of a full lottery bid. MAGNI are about to embark on the last two of these stages, and these will be taken forward simultaneously.

Obviously the future progression of the project will be dependent on the necessary financial resources being available.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made by MAGNI in providing a museum of sea and sky at Titanic Quarter. [92945]

Angela Smith: MAGNI has prepared a plan setting out how the organisation proposes to take forward a heritage development at Titanic Quarter. It will major on the themes of sea and sky, but it will also cover the wider social history of the city of Belfast and the people of Northern Ireland.

To date MAGNI has appointed consultants to assist in the preparation of an outline bid for lottery funding. This outline bid is due to be submitted shortly, and it should be followed up by a more substantial document in due course. My officials will continue to work closely with MAGNI in taking this project forward.

Soccer Strategy

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in implementing the soccer strategy, with particular reference to obtaining agreement between the IFA and IFL on the section relating to governance. [92885]

Angela Smith: Encouraging progress has been towards the implementation of the recommendations contained in the Advisory Panel report "Creating a Soccer Strategy for Northern Ireland". It is understood that the Irish Football Association (IFA) agreed, at a meeting on 20 January, to merge with the Irish Football League to form a unified governing body for the sport as recommended by the Advisory Panel.

The Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure is currently examining the Irish Football Association's development plan which sets out its proposals for the future governance of soccer in Northern Ireland, and for other aspects of the game.

Lady Hermon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the sum of £8 million set aside by the Northern Ireland Executive in its budget proposals to finance the soccer strategy proposals is available to the Department of Culture, Arts and Leisure for this purpose. [92886]

Angela Smith: Yes, but the allocation of funding to soccer is dependent upon the preparation of a development plan from the Irish Football Association that is acceptable to DCAL.

Ulster Hospital

Mrs. Iris Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) surgical and (b) medical procedures were postponed at the Ulster Hospital in the last 12 months. [92672]

Mr. Browne: Information on numbers of (a) surgical and (b) medical procedures postponed or cancelled at the Ulster Community and Hospitals Trust, during the calendar year 2002 is detailed in the table:

	Cancellations/postponements
(a) Surgical
General Surgery	1,237
Paediatric Surgery	30
T&O	40
Maxillo-facial	73
Plastic Surgery	347

PRIME MINISTER

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Prime Minister how many cases of computer misuse there were in his office in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93038]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office for today at column 722W.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what advice he has taken on the legal basis for an invasion of Iraq. [93902]

The Prime Minister: It has been the longstanding policy of successive Governments not to disclose internal policy advice, including legal advice, under Part 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. As I have repeatedly made clear, no decision has been made to take military action and military action is not inevitable.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement on the line of command for the use of UK nuclear weapons. [93110]

The Prime Minister: The use of the United Kingdom's nuclear weapons may be ordered only by the Prime Minister.

Spanish Visit

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Prime Minister whether the cost of his visit to Spain on 5 September 2002 for the wedding of the daughter of the Prime Minister of Spain was met by the taxpayer. [94104]

The Prime Minister: Yes, as has already been made clear I was invited in my position as a Head of Government.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Housing Allowance

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) how he intends to consult stakeholders in housing allowance in pathfinder project areas; and if he will make a statement; [93315]

(2) if he will publish the results of consultations carried out with stakeholders in housing allowance pathfinder project areas; [93316]

(3) at what points during the housing allowance pathfinder projects stakeholders will be consulted. [93317]

Malcolm Wicks: We will be working closely with pathfinder authorities to introduce the standard local housing allowance scheme and will ensure that local stakeholders including landlords, letting agents, and statutory and voluntary sector advisers, are consulted and made fully aware of the changes.

It will be an important part of our evaluation strategy to consider the views of all local stakeholders as well as those of tenants affected by the scheme. Details of how this will be done have not yet been decided but we recognise the importance of consulting the full range of stakeholders at regular stages during the pilot. As usual, the results of the evaluation will be published.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Government will respond to the Better Regulation Task Force on the recommendations in their report entitled 'Housing Benefit: a case study of lone parents' published in September 2001. [91972]

Malcolm Wicks: On 12 December 2001, we responded positively and in detail to the Better Regulation Task Force report "Housing Benefit: A Case Study of Lone Parents". A copy of our response is in the Library.

On 17 October 2002, we announced a wide-ranging package of reforms for housing benefit (HB). The overall strategy for reforming HB is to improve administration, promote choice and responsibility, enhance work incentives and reduce levels of fraud and error in the system.

Married Women's Half-Test

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps were taken to publicise the abolition of the married women's half-test under the Social Security Act 1975. [91305]

Mr. McCartney [holding answer 16 January 2003]: Affected women were identified by a trawl of the NIRS database and invited to claim. In addition, there was a publicity campaign aimed at finding those women who did not receive an invitation to claim for whatever reason.

Pension Credit

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions whether pensioners' earnings will be eligible for the pension credit; and if he will make a statement. [93737]

Mr. McCartney: Currently around half a million pensioners aged 65 or over work. The earnings of pensioners aged 65 or over will be rewardable in the savings credit. The existing earnings disregards of £5, £10 and £20 that apply in the Minimum Income Guarantee will also apply in Pension Credit. The remunerative work rule that excludes from Minimum Income Guarantee pensioners who work 16 hours a week or more (24 hours for couples) will be abolished for Pension Credit.

For example, a pensioner receiving retirement pension of £77.45 and earning £35 per week would get nothing under the present MIG scheme. However, under Pension Credit, he would be £12.65 better off a week, or almost £658 per year.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Career Development Loans

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many career development loans have been allocated since 1998; how many applications have been refused since 1998; what the total sum issued since 1998 has been; how much remains outstanding; how much has been recovered via debt agencies and court orders; how much has been defaulted; and if he will make a statement. [88837]

Margaret Hodge: Career Development Loans (CDLs) are deferred repayment commercial bank loans designed to help individuals, who may not otherwise be able to afford or have access to funds to pay for vocational education and learning. The DfES operates the programme in partnership with three high street banks and pays the interest on the loan for the period of training covered by the CDL. For the period 1 January 1998 to 31 December 2002, 79,641 loans have been taken out with a value of £316 million. As at 31 December 2002, £94 million remained outstanding for payment of interest by the Department and this value will continue to reduce over time. The amount that has been defaulted is £24 million and £2.6 million has been recovered so far. This reflects a net default rate of 7 per cent. compared to the 15 per cent. maximum operating limit agreed with the banks to cover the higher level of risk they take in making these particular loans. The exact number of applications refused by the banks is not known. The refusal rate varies between the banks, but the overall rate is around 25 per cent. of applications received.

Child Care

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether premiums will be available on education maintenance allowances to help single parents to access child care. [91840]

Margaret Hodge: The national Education Maintenance Allowance will be designed to cover the day-to-day expenses associated with participating in further education, such as the cost of books and equipment, and to help towards the cost of transport to and from a learning centre. Additional funding, via the Learner Support Fund, will be available for students facing particular needs or costs that threaten their access to, or completion of, further education courses. This will include help with the costs of child care.

Under the Learner Support Fund, up to £4,000 per annum is available according to the costs of the child care and the young parent's financial circumstances. The maximum amount available will increase to £5,000 per annum from September 2003 to provide for the higher costs prevailing in some areas.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93044]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The numbers of computer misuse incidents within the Department for Education and Skills is as follows.

Year	Number of cases	Type of Misuse	Action
1998	10	Serious inappropriate internet access	Disciplinary Action
	2	Serious Email abuse	Disciplinary Action
1999	45	Serious inappropriate internet action	Disciplinary Action

The Department for Education and Skills allows personal use of the Internet and email outside normal hours. Staff are warned that internet accesses may be monitored and misuse may lead to disciplinary action. Staff are reminded of the policy each time they log on to the Department network and must accept the policy before log in can be completed.

Excellence in Cities

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many schools have been de-designated from the excellence in cities programme since its inception; and how many schools remain in the programme. [93198]

Mr. Miliband: There is no de-designation process, although the number of schools varies as new schools are established and others are closed or amalgamated. Our latest figures show that there are 2,370 schools in excellence in cities of which 1,000 are secondary schools.

Higher Education (Family Incomes)

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many UK students have qualified for (a) full exemption, (b) part exemption and (c) no exemption from tuition fees in (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) Northern Ireland in each academic year from 1998 onwards; [91636]

(2) what reports he has received about the number of students who have qualified for (a) full exemption, (b) part exemption and (c) no exemption from tuition fees in Scotland in each academic year from 1998 until 2001. [91640]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 20 January 2003]: In England and Wales students on undergraduate courses and their families are expected to make a contribution towards the cost of their tuition only if they can afford to do so.

The number of students in academic years 1998–99, 1999–2000 and 2000–01 (latest year for which data are available) who have been assessed to make a full, partial or nil contribution towards the cost of their tuition are:

All students[1]

The devolved Administrations for Scotland and Northern Ireland are responsible for the administration of tuition fees in their countries.

Learning and Skills Council

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what evidence he has collated of software problems in the Learning and Skills Council's funding arrangements for colleges; and what action the Department and the council are taking to eliminate such problems. [91183]

Margaret Hodge: I am aware of the difficulties encountered by some colleges in accessing the Learning and Skills Council's learner information suite which have resulted in some colleges being unable to forecast accurately their expected income. I have expressed my concerns to John Harwood, the council's chief executive. The LSC are committed to providing a high quality service to colleges and we expect the council's systems to be corrected and fully functional at the end of this month.

Learning Difficulties (School Sport)

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) what assessment he has made of primary movement exercise programmes; [93587]

(2) what the Government's policy is on the use of primary movement exercise programmes to alleviate learning difficulties. [93592]

Mr. Miliband: Physical Education (PE) remains a compulsory subject within the National Curriculum at all Key Stages. At Key Stages 1 and 2 its emphasis is on learning and developing basic movement skills and actions. The Ofsted Primary Subject Report on Physical Education—published in July 2002—indicated that at primary level

> "pupils' achievement is at least satisfactory in all but one school in 20 in both Key Stages 1 and 2".

A joint Department for Education and Skills and Department for Culture, Media and Sport public service agreement target, announced on 15 July 2002, seeks to enhance the take up of sporting opportunities by 5 to 16-year-olds by increasing the percentage of schoolchildren who spend a minimum of two hours each week on high quality PE and school sport within and beyond the curriculum to 75 per cent. by 2006. Spearheading action will be the significant expansion of the specialist sports college and school sport co-ordinator partnership programmes.

The strategy has an inclusive ethos and is designed to be flexible enough to allow children with learning difficulties—whether in a mainstream school or other—to be taught throu[illegible] variety of methods which could include a primary movement exercise programme if a school decided that was the most suitable option.

London Institute

Mr. Beard: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much public money has been given to the London Institute; and how the use of this money has been accounted for in each year since the foundation of the Institute. [92299]

Margaret Hodge: The following table shows the total income and the amount received from funding council grants for the London Institute each year since 1994–95.

£million

London Institute	Total income	Funding Council grant income[1]
1994–95	57,728	38,020
1995–96	60,619	38,159
1996–97	64,954	37,439
1997–98	69,446	38,389
1998–99	71,968	42,041
1999–2000	78,075	44,073
2000–01	83,474	45,593

[1] The funding council grant includes funding from the Higher Education Funding Council for England, and from the funding bodies for further education in England.

There is a financial memorandum between each institution and each of the funding councils from which they receive public funding. This sets out the responsibilities of each party including financial management and the arrangements for audit and monitoring.

Post-16 Education

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills by what percentage the pilot schemes suggest education maintenance allowances will improve progression rates into post sixteen education in deprived areas. [91837]

Margaret Hodge: The EMA pilot scheme has been subject to a rigorous and thorough evaluation study. The latest report was published on 3 July 2002.

The evaluation of the pilot scheme includes 10 of the original EMA pilot LEAs which are among the most deprived in England. Evidence from the evaluation indicates that within the group of young people eligible for EMA, participation in education in Y12 has increased by 5.9 percentage points. For the cohort of young people in these LEAs as a whole, this is equivalent to a participation gain of 3.7 percentage points.

In Year 13, due to an EMA induced improvement in retention, the gain in participation increases further to just over 7 percentage points among eligible young people which is equivalent to just over 4 percentage points for the cohort as a whole.

Vera Baird: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the Government's policy is on diversity of supply in post-16 education. [91853]

Margaret Hodge: We are committed to ensuring that high quality post-16 education and training is available to meet the full range of learner, employer and community needs. In some areas this will require greater diversity in the supply of provision.

Following the publication of our strategy for reforming further education and training—'Success for All' in November 2002, we have asked each provider to set out their unique educational mission focusing on what they do best. Our strategy also identifies the need, where appropriate, for more discrete provision to meet the distinctive needs of 16 to 19-year-olds.

Alongside this, we have asked the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) to undertake strategic area reviews to ensure the best mix of provision is supplied in each part of the country. These reviews will be undertaken locally in partnership with further education colleges and local education authorities and in consultation with a wide range of employer, learner, community and provider interests in each area.

The combination of unique provider missions and strategic area reviews will lead to greater diversity in post-16 education and training, to ensure improved choice, opportunity and success for all.

Schools (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many teachers were employed in schools in (a) Shropshire and (b) Shrewsbury and Atcham in each year since 1997. [93019]

Mr. Miliband: The tables provide the full-time equivalent (FTE) number of teachers as at January of each year. Shropshire was affected by local government re-organisation in April 1998.

(a) Teachers in Shropshire

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
All regular teachers FTE[1]
Former Shropshire	3,330	3,350	N/a	N/A	N/A	N/A

Telford and Wrekin	N/a	N/a	1,360	1,340	1,410	1,420

[1] The information for Shropshire is taken from the Annual Survey of Teachers in Service, an LEA level survey. The figures cover all regular teachers employed in the maintained schools sector (nursery, primary, secondary, special and PRUs) by the local authority, including centrally employed teachers. Teachers on paid absence are included, together with any replacements on contracts of one month or more. Includes teachers with and without qualified teacher status.

Note:

N/a = not applicable

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

(b) Teachers in Shrewsbury and Atcham

Teachers in schools FTE[1]
Shrewsbury and Atcham	630	630	630	640	650	660

[1] The information for Shrewsbury and Atcham constituency is from the Annual Schools' Census and includes the normal complement of teachers in maintained nursery, primary, secondary, special schools and PRUs. Includes teachers with and without qualified teacher status and foreign language assistants.

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list building improvement projects and their value in each school in Shrewsbury and Atcham in each year since 2001. [93082]

Mr. Miliband: We do not hold information in the form requested. Most capital funding available for building improvements in schools is allocated to local education authorities and schools by needs-related formulae. It is for local education authorities and schools to decide how their capital allocations are invested and prioritised between projects, in line with locally agreed asset management plans.

Special Educational Needs

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what training Ofsted inspectors have received in respect of duties imposed on schools by the Special Educational Needs and Disability Act 2001. [92995]

Mr. Miliband: The training undertaken by school inspectors is a matter for Ofsted. HM Chief Inspector David Bell will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of his letter will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Specialist Status Schools

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills of the schools that have lost specialist status since 1996, how many were (a) arts, (b) business and enterprise, (c) engineering, (d) languages, (e) maths and computing, (f) science, (g) sports and (h) technology. [93197]

Mr. Miliband: There have been 33 specialist schools which have lost their specialist status since 1996. Of these schools, 32 were technology colleges and one was a language college.

Student Funding

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills whether bankruptcy discharges liability to repay student loans; and if he will make a statement. [91182]

Margaret Hodge: Bankruptcy discharges liability to repay student loans where the loan was taken out before the commencement of bankruptcy.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many UK students have qualified for the income-dependent element of student loans in (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Northern Ireland in each academic year since 1998; [91637]

(2) what reports he has received on the number of students in Scotland who have qualified for (a) the full amount, (b) a proportion and (c) no part of the income-dependent element of student loans in each academic year since 1998. [91823]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 20 January 2003]: For the first year of the new student support arrangements, academic year 1998–99, eligible new entrants domiciled in England and Wales received support for living costs through both grants and loans. Grants, which were assessed against family income, on average formed about a quarter of the support available. All students were entitled to a non income-assessed loan which comprised the remaining three quarters of support available.

New entrants to higher education from 1999–2000, together with those who started in 1998–99, receive support for living costs through loans which are partly income assessed.

The number of students in academic years 1999–2000 and 2000–01 (latest year for which data is available) who are eligible for the full income-assessed element of the loan and those who receive some of the income-assessed element of the loan are:

All students[1,2,3]

Thousand

Academic year	Students eligible for the full income-assessed element of the loan	Students eligible for part of the income-assessed element of the loan
1999–2000
England	295.1	48.9
Wales	21.4	3.9
2000–01[4,5]
England	348.3	80.0
Wales[4]	[4]—	[4]—

[1] The amount of student loan available is assessed by local education authorities in England and Wales for students who are normally domiciled in their area and studying in the UK.

[2] Includes students in receipt of loans for extra weeks of study.

[3] Excludes students in receipt of the reduced rate of loan as these are not subject to income-assessment.

[4] In academic year 2000–01 data are not available separately for Wales due to a low response rate to the survey. Data are provisional.

[5] The apparent rise in student numbers over the two years is accounted for by the introduction of income-assessed student loans in 1999–2000 for those starting their courses that year or academic year 1998–99—so two cohorts were included in the first year but three in 2000–01.

The devolved Administrations for Scotland and Northern Ireland are responsible for their own administration of student loans.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what reports he has received about the number of students in Scotland who have qualified for (a) the full amount, (b) a proportion and (c) no part of the young students' bursary in each academic year since its introduction. [91639]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 20 January 2003]: My right hon. Friend does not hold information on Scottish issues. This is a matter for the Scottish Parliament.

Paul Farrelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many UK students in (a) England, (b) Wales, (c) Northern Ireland and (d) Scotland qualified for (i) the full amount, (ii) a proportion and (iii) no part of student maintenance grants in each academic year from 1990 to 1998. [91753]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 20 January 2003]: The support arrangements under the mandatory awards scheme for eligible undergraduate students domiciled in England and Wales on courses which began before 1 September 1998 consisted of payment, usually in full, of their tuition fees, a grant towards their maintenance, depending on income, and a non-income assessed loan. New students in academic year 1998–99, were expected to contribute up to £1,000 a year towards the cost of their tuition depending on family income. In 1998–99, income-assessed grants on average only formed about a quarter of the support available and all students were entitled to a non income-assessed loan which comprised the remaining three quarters of support available and which will be repayable on an income contingent basis.

In addition to the basic maintenance grant disabled students, students with dependants and lone parent students could also apply for various supplementary grants and allowances, the majority of which were income-assessed.

The number of students in academic years 1990–91 to 1998–99 who have been assessed for a full, partial or nil contribution to their maintenance are shown in the table.

The devolved Administrations for Northern Ireland and Scotland are responsible for the administration of their own student support.

[1] The table shows awards made by local education authorities in England and Wales to students normally domiciled in their area. The table excludes placement year sandwich students who do not normally receive maintenance support in their placement year.

[2] Up to and including academic year 1998–99 eligible students in England and Wales received support through income-assessed grants and a non income-assessed student loan. For new students in 1998–99, the proportion of grant and loan was approximately 25 per cent. and 75 per cent.

[3] Separate data for academic year 1991–92 are not available; combined England and Wales totals show 212.1 thousand students with full maintenance grants, 199.1 thousand students with partial maintenance grants and, 135.2 thousand students with a nil maintenance grant. These figures do not include data in respect of the London Residuary Body estimated to be 8,600 mandatory awards; an accurate breakdown of this figure is not available.

[4] Data in 1998–99 include an estimated 15,000 students support scheme students in England and Wales who, because they did not expect to receive a contribution to their support from public funds, did not make an application to their local authority.

Technical Craft Skills

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make it his policy to ensure that technical craft skills for trades are available to young people in south-east Essex. [92781]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Government and the Learning and Skills Council (LSC) are wholly committed to Modern Apprenticeships (MA) as a quality work-based learning route to craft, supervisory and technician skills for young people in England. We have adopted a challenging Public Service Agreement (PSA) target for MA entrants by 2004—28 per cent. of young people to begin an MA by the age of 22. MA is one of the wide range of specialist pathways that will be available to young people under a transformed 14–19 phase of learning.

The Chancellor, the Secretary of State for Education and Skills and the Chairman of the Learning and Skills Council have announced a new Modern Apprenticeship Task Force which will take a key role in promoting MA to employers and thereby contributing to increased take-up—in south-east Essex and elsewhere.

All parties involved in the initiative are working together to increase the take-up of MA. The LSC in England works through its 47 local offices (one of which covers Essex) and with key partners to identify and meet local skills needs by promoting and funding the delivery of work-based learning programmes, including MA and college-based provision. Connexions Partnerships are delivering improved advice and guidance to young people on the opportunities available in their communities. New and developing Sector Skills Councils also play a key role by supporting promotion to employers in their sectors.

In addition, the Government will be publishing a national skills strategy in June, setting out how we will further boost numbers of young people acquiring technical and craft skills across the economy.

Training

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much the Learning and Skills Council spent on training allowances for young people in 2001–02. [90917]

Margaret Hodge: This is a matter for the Learning and Skills Council. John Harwood, the council's chief executive will write to the hon. Member with the information requested and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Libraries.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Housing (Coventry)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many homes were owned by the council in Coventry in each of the last five years. [93140]

Mr. McNulty: Local authorities report their number of council homes as at 1 April on their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP) returns. Based on Coventry City Council's recent returns the reported numbers of council homes were:

As at 1 April	Number
1998	20,359
1999	20,175
2000	19,886

The Council ceased to have any council housing in September 2000, following the transfer of the council stock under the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's Large Scale Voluntary Transfer Programme (LSVT) to new Registered Social Landlords—Whitefriars North and Whitefriars South, within the Whitefriars Housing Group.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the level of housing need has been in Coventry in each of the last five years. [93141]

Mr. McNulty: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 7 January 2003, Official Report, column 115W. Local authorities in England report the numbers of households on their housing register (excluding tenants awaiting transfers) as at 1 April in their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP) returns. Based on Coventry City Council's recent returns the reported numbers in the last five years are:

As at 1 April	Number
1998	7,767
1999	8,915
2000	8,458
2001	6,295

Council Housing

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many council dwellings were sold in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [91142]

Mr. McNulty: Information on total numbers of sales and transfers of local authority and New Town dwellings in England since 1992–93 is in the table.

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many council dwellings were built in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available. [91145]

Mr. McNulty: The numbers of local authority dwellings built in England in each of the last 10 years is in the following table. The numbers have declined as social housing has increasingly been delivered by Registered Social Landlords.

Year	Number of local authority dwellings built
1992–93	2,579
1993–94	1,451
1994–95	853

Crossrail

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will announce his decision on the revision of Crossrail safeguarding directions to prevent inappropriate development; and if he will make a statement. [93142]

Mr. Jamieson: I have been asked to reply.

Cross London Rail Links Limited have been asked to put to Ministers in February advice on route options and a worked-up business case for Crossrail. Current safeguarding directions will be reviewed as and when a route may be determined.

East Riding of Yorkshire Council

David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will announce the level of funding to the East Riding of Yorkshire Council for nursery school places for the next financial year. [93847]

Mr. Raynsford: Funding for nursery school places will be within local government formula grant from 2003–04. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will announce our final proposals for the 2003–04 local government finance settlement on Monday 3 February; the House will have the chance to debate these on Wednesday 5 February. It will, of course, be for the authority to decide what allocation to make to specific services.

Green Belt Land

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will introduce measures to prevent the speculative purchase of agricultural land in designated green belt, its sub-division into building plots and sale on the basis of an anticipated relaxation of planning controls. [92832]

Mr. McNulty: The Government reaffirmed their commitment to the protection and enhancement of the Green Belt in my righ. hon. Friend, the Deputy Prime Minister's statement on Sustainable Communities, Housing and Planning in the House of Commons on 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 438 Since 1997 over 30,000 hectares have been added to the Green Belt, or earmarked for addition.

However, it is not generally the role of the planning system to place control on land ownership.

Housing (Rural Areas)

Andrew George: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the average turnaround time was for unused housing stock in (a) England and (b) local authorities, defined as rural, by region, in each year since 1978. [90833]

Mr. McNulty: Local authorities in England have been asked to provide estimates of the average time taken to re-let their housing stock on their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP) returns since 1994. Because of variations in the way local authorities maintain lettings records and compile these estimates, the figures quoted, and any comparisons between authorities, should be treated with caution. Comparable information in respect of re-lettings by registered social landlords is only available from 1996–97.

Housing Waiting Lists

Martin Linton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many people were on housing waiting lists in each London borough at the latest date for which figures are available. [92132]

Mr. McNulty: Local authorities in England report the numbers of households on their housing register (excluding tenants awaiting a transfer) as at 1 April in their annual Housing Investment Programme returns. The latest reported information, for 2002, is as follows:

Households on the housing register of London boroughs as at 1 April 2002

London Borough	Number
Barking and Dagenham	2,668
Barnet	7,030
Bexley	3,487
Brent	14,746
Bromley	3,592
Camden	8,147
City of London	623
Croydon	6,890
Ealing	8,289
Enfield	7,264

Local Government Finance

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, what the average percentage rise in the government grant to police authorities is for the forthcoming financial year; and what the percentage increase was for the Essex police force. [91397]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 20 January 2003]: I have been asked to reply.

The average percentage increase in general policing grants to police authorities in England and Wales for 2003–04 is 4.3 per cent.

Essex police authority will receive a 3 per cent. increase in general grants. The authority will also receive £0.5 million from the Rural Policing Fund and £5.79 million from the Crime Fighting Fund, taking the overall increase to 3.5 per cent. Essex will also receive £2.33 million for the Airwave communication system.

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make allowance for inaccuracies in the 2001 census count when considering the grant allocation for 2004–05; and if he will make a statement. [92495]

Mr. Raynsford: It is the policy of the Deputy Prime Minister to use consistent data for all authorities in the calculation of formula grant. For population estimates, this means the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be using the Registrar General's mid-year population estimates, as derived from the 2001 census and published by the Office for National Statistics. The Office for National Statistics (ONS) are confident that the approach taken for the 2001 census provides the most accurate estimates of the population both nationally and for each of the 376 local authorities in England and Wales. ONS are not anticipating making changes to their figures, but if this should occur the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will consider what impact these may have on the Local Government Finance Settlement. The floors provided for under the Local Government Settlement ensure that no authority receives an increase in grant less than inflation in 2003–04 irrespective of reductions in the estimated resident population of that authority in the 2001 census.

Local Government Finance (Westminster)

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make it his policy to use alternative data sources to the 2001 census to calculate Westminster City Council's (a) grant settlement for 2003–04 and (b) future grant settlements; and if he will make a statement. [92494]

Mr. Raynsford: It is the policy of the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister to use consistent data for all authorities in the calculation of formula grant; consequently the same data source will be used for Westminster as for all authorities. For population estimates, this means the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will be using the Registrar General's mid-year population estimates (as published by the Office for National Statistics). For the 2003–04 Local Government Finance Settlement these will be the 2001 estimates that are based on the 2001 census. For future years the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister intends to use the latest available mid-year estimates.

Occupational Stress

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the (a) prevalence and (b) causes of occupational stress among local government officers. [93691]

Mr. Leslie: Decisions on specific health issues like occupational stress are a matter for individual local authority employers and detailed information about causes and prevalence is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, as part of the Review of Ill-Health Retirement in the Public Sector, there continues to be close collaboration with the Employers' Organisation for Local Government and the Association of Local Authority Medical Advisers in the preparation of a Management of Ill-Health Retirement handbook published in September 2002. This includes a chapter on the causes of stress, recognising the symptoms and the implications for local authority managers and those working in the occupational health sector.

Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister which development documents a unitary authority will have to complete as a result of the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill. [93602]

Mr. McNulty: Under the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill, a unitary authority will have to prepare those local development documents that are specified in its local development scheme. These must include the authority's statement of community involvement and documents prescribed under clause 16*(1)(a)* of the Bill. It is intended that these prescribed documents should be a core strategy containing the core spatial planning policies for the authority's area and site specific policies, including a proposals map.

Property Prices

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library a list of lower quartile prices of properties sold in each local authority area in each quarter of 2002. [94045]

Mr. McNulty: A table showing lower quartile property prices in each local authority area will be available in the Library from Wednesday 29 January. Figures will be provided for all four quarters of 2001 and for the first three quarters of 2002.

The figures are derived from the Land Registry dataset covering all residential property transactions—but excluding properties sold for less than £1,000 or more than £20 million.

Note that the figures for Q3 2002 are provisional only. Revised and final figures for Q3 2002 will be made available by end-February, which is when provisional figures for Q4 2002 will also be available.

Regional Planning

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what guidance the Government will issue for regional housebuilding targets during the process of establishing Regional Strategic Procedure. [93603]

Mr. McNulty: This Government do not set regional housebuilding targets. Annual rates of housing provision are kept under regular review and are established through regional planning guidance and the spatial strategy it should set out. Guidance on this is set out in Planning Policy Guidance Note 11 on 'Regional Planning' and Planning Policy Guidance Note 3 on 'Housing'. These arrangements will continue when regional spatial strategies replace regional planning guidance as provided for in the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill.

Right to Buy (Christchurch)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many additional social housing units he estimates will be available to let in each of the next five years in Christchurch if the right to buy maximum discounts scheme is introduced. [94044]

Mr. McNulty: The effect of lower maximum Right to Buy discounts on the supply of affordable housing in any area will depend upon a number of factors. It is likely to be limited initially, but to grow over time, reducing the upward pressure of Right to Buy sales and subsequent resales on local rents and housing prices.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister (1) whether the Right to Buy scheme reduction in maximum discounts will apply to social housing within Christchurch borough owned by New Forest district council; [94047]

(2) whether the Right to Buy scheme reduction in maximum discounts applies to local housing in Christchurch in respect of which housing authorities outside Christchurch have the nomination right. [94046]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is minded to reduce the maximum Right to Buy discount available to tenants to £16,000 in Christchurch and 41 other areas which are under the greatest housing market pressure, as evidenced by a high local incidence of homelessness and high house prices. The reduction will apply to all social housing available under the Right to Buy scheme in those areas. We have written to the local housing authorities giving them the opportunity to provide reasons why the change should not be made in their area. We will consider carefully all representations received.

Right to Buy (Reduced Discount Scheme)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister why the number of lets to new council tenants and nominations by landlords to registered social landlords less the number of homes let to homeless households is reduced by 20 per cent. for the purpose of calculating available lets under the reduced discount scheme for right to buy. [94040]

Mr. McNulty: In the initial assessment of 'available lets', a reduction of 20 per cent. was made to allow for dwellings unsuitable for the homeless (such as sheltered housing) and for other inescapable demand (such as urgent medical priority cases). This adjustment was made consistently in respect of all local authorities, so it did not affect their final ranking on the basis of the objective indicator of demand pressure.

Social Housing

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many dwellings were constructed by registered social housing landlords, excluding local authorities, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many are planned to be built in the next financial year. [91143]

Mr. McNulty: The numbers of new dwellings constructed by Registered Social Landlords in each of the last 10 years are shown in the following table. Information from local authority housing strategies shows, for 2003–04, a projected 31,000 total of new dwellings constructed and existing stock acquired by Registered Social Landlords.

Year	Number of new dwellings constructed by Registered Social Landlords

Mr. Laws: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what his estimate is of the number of social houses (a) completed and (b) started in each reporting period in each year from 1982–83 to 2002–03, broken down by (i) English region and (ii) English local authority; and if he will make a statement. [93134]

Mr. McNulty: The total numbers of houses started and completed by registered social landlords and local authorities in each region are shown in the table. The years shown are those which are readily available. I will write further to provide information for each local authority.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many cases of computer misuse there were in her Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93043]

Ms Rosie Winterton: There have been 43 cases of computer misuse in the Department over the last five years. These cases are broken down as follows.

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
Category	1	0	0	1	0
Personal use	0	1	1	2	8
Unofficial Business Use[1]	1	2	0	0	2
Other	3	4	4	8	5
Total	5	7	5	11	15

[1] This covers receipt of unsolicited business e-mails, either directly from the business site, or forwarded from internal users

In each case disciplinary action has been taken where appropriate in line with Departmental disciplinary procedures, which accord with the central framework set out in paragraph 4.5 of the Civil Service Management Code.

Legal Services Commission

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what checks are undertaken by the Legal Services Commission on the competence of solicitors who claim to specialise in (a) divorce, (b) probate, (c) asylum, (d) family law, (e) property and (f) medical negligence. [93090]

Ms Rosie Winterton: Generally probate cases will not be publicly funded but cases in the other categories may well be.

Since 1 April 2001, all publicly funded legal service suppliers, whether solicitor firms or not for profit agencies, have had to hold a quality mark before being awarded a Legal Services Commission (LSC) contract. All solicitor suppliers for specialist legal services must hold the Specialist Quality Mark (SQM). The SQM focuses, in respect of individual competence, on supervision, training, and file review processes, and requires supervisor solicitors to be accredited to category specific qualifying panels as evidence of competence. The LSC conducts regular quality mark audits to ensure suppliers meet the required standard. The LSC also conducts cost compliance audits to check that public funds claimed by a supplier are being used appropriately.

These audits enable the LSC to take appropriate measures to deal with poor quality work, including cost reductions and, in extreme cases, removal of the contract.

Public Record Office (Documents Release)

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if her Department will arrange for an early release of documents held by the Public Record Office, originated by the then Department of the Environment and the Department of Trade and Industry, relating to the Lowermoor Water Poisoning Incident of July 1988. [90032]

Mr. Morley: I have been asked to reply.

A report of the incident was produced in August 1988 and put into the public domain and two reports into the health of the people in the area were published in 1989 and 1991. Copies of these last two reports are in the Library of the House. Other health studies into the incident have been published in scientific literature. The report of the sub group of the Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment, which is considering the continuing health concerns expressed by those affected by the incident, will be published by the Department of Health later this year. We are looking at our files to see if they contain any further environmental information on the incident that can be released and put on the Department's website.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department, how many statutory instruments have been issued by her Department in each calendar year since 1979. [89845]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The figures in the following table show the number of Statutory Instruments, Orders in Council and Northern Ireland Statutory Rules issued by the Lord Chancellor's Department from 1998 to 2002.

Figures for previous years are unavailable.

	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002

Order in Council	2	4	2	10	14

HEALTH

Acute Hospital Services

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has conducted into the reasons for different categories of acute hospital staff choosing to leave their professions. [91476]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has commissioned over many years and continues to fund a series of cohort studies of doctors' careers by the United Kingdom medical careers research group at the University of Oxford.

This research covers all doctors, not just those employed in acute hospitals. The objectives are:

to determine the career choices of UK doctors at regular intervals after qualification and to study the factors that influence them;

to study career progression at regular intervals, to compare it with earlier career choices and to determine factors that have influenced any change;

to study and estimate the movement of doctors to work outside the national health service, to work in medicine outside the UK, or to leave medicine, and to identify factors associated with them;

to ascertain the views of doctors about their work, training, career, working environment, and morale, and to compare these between specialties, grades, etc.;

to use study findings to model and forecast future workforce supply;

to consider the findings, to make recommendations about their interpretation and policy relevance, and to inform medical workforce planners and decision-makers about factors that have an important influence on medical careers and medical work.

These studies, which are questionnaire surveys of all UK medical graduates, have been published most recently in the British Medical Journal on 28 September 2002.

The Department also funds the nursing research unit at King's College London to do similar work on nurses' careers.

Aids and Adaptations

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he intends to publish his consultation document on the provision of aids and adaptations; and whether the document will include an assessment of the adequacy of staffing and financial resources in the provision of adaptations for elderly and disabled people. [92606]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister, jointly with the Department of Health, will very shortly be publishing guidance on delivering an effective housing adaptations service. This guidance deals primarily with how such a service should be organised by the relevant housing and social service departments of local authorities and is based on detailed field research about existing best practice. In relation to the adequacy of resources available for this programme the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will shortly publish a long-term programme of action to deliver sustainable communities in all regions. This will set out the allocation of spending review resources on housing and planning including the funding available for Disabled Facilities Grants over the next three years.

Ambulance Equipment (Chemical Incidents)

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) NHS acute trusts and (b) NHS ambulance trusts received a letter dated 22 October from the chief scientist because they had yet to order mobile decontamination units and personal protective equipment for chemical incidents. [84036]

Mr. Hutton: The Department of Health chief scientist wrote to the national health service on 22 October to remind all NHS trust chief executives of current policy on this issue.

Biological Warfare

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisation will be responsible for the (a) assessment of and (b) response to the health dimension of the threats of biological warfare. [86030]

Mr. Hutton: Assessment of the threats of biological warfare is undertaken in the context of the overall monitoring and assessment of potential terrorist threats to the United Kingdom done by the security and intelligence agencies, the police, scientific and other specialist advisors including the scientific resources of DSTL Porton Down. The Home Office is the lead Department for terrorist threats or incidents.

The Department of Health is the lead Department for dealing with infectious diseases in England. It is assisted in this role by the Public Health Laboratory Service. Assessment of the health dimensions and the operational responses needed to deal with the threat of biological warfare is undertaken by the Department of Health in concert with other Government Departments and agencies involved in the wider threat assessments.

Body Piercing

Ms Munn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has considered on the risks of body piercing to people with congenital heart disease. [92519]

Ms Blears: We are not aware of any research into the risks of body piercing for individuals with congenital heart disease, although there have been a small number of published case reports from abroad of endocarditis in individuals with congenital heart disease following skin piercing.

There has been a small study in the United States, which investigated ear piercing and tattooing in patients with congenital heart disease[1]. In this study, no patients experienced serious infections following ear-piercing or tattooing, although about a quarter of patients experienced minor local skin infections following ear piercing.

Buckinghamshire Hospitals NHS Trust

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to ensure a smooth handover from the boards and management of the Stoke Mandeville Hospital NHS Trust and the South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust to the new Buckinghamshire Hospitals NHS Trust from 1 April; [92806]

(2) when he will announce the names of (a) the Chief Executive designate and (b) the Directors-designate of the Buckinghamshire Hospitals NHS Trust. [92807]

Ms Blears [holding answers 23 January 2003]: A comprehensive project plan for the development of the new Buckinghamshire Hospitals National Health Service Trust and for the transfer of the functions and responsibilities of the Stoke Mandeville Hospital NHS Trust and South Buckinghamshire NHS Trust has been in place for some time.

The plan covers, among many other things, the appointment of the chair and chief executive, the transfer arrangements for staff and legal aspects of property and finance.

Interviews will take place shortly for the post of chief executive and an announcement will be made as soon as possible. The appointment of executive directors will follow this.

Cancelled Operations

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients whose operation was cancelled on the day of surgery did not receive a new binding date for an operation within 28 days in each quarter of the last year; and what arrangements were put in place to provide these patients with treatment at a time and hospital of their choosing. [85302]

Mr. Hutton: The NHS Plan cancelled operations guarantee came into force on 1 April 2002. Under the NHS Plan, if a patient's operation is cancelled by the hospital on the day of surgery for non-clinical reasons, the hospital will have to offer another binding date within a maximum of the next 28 days or fund the patient's treatment at the time and hospital of the patient's choice.

Data on the number of operations cancelled on the day of surgery and on the number of patients who were still waiting for treatment after 28 days of their original cancelled operation date were collected from Quarter 1, 2002–03. The latest available for Quarter 2, 2002–03 have been placed in the Library and are available at national health service trust level on a quarterly basis at http://www.doh.gov.uk/hospitalactivity/data requests/cancelled operations.htm

NHS trusts are performance managed on their performance against the NHS Plan guarantee by strategic health authorities. In doing this StHA will ensure that they have mechanisms in place which will provide them with the necessary evidence that patients whose operations have been cancelled on the day of surgery for non-clinical reasons, subsequently receive treatment at the time and hospital of their choosing, in line with the guarantee.

Child Protection

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on profiling of individuals in assessing the basis of unsubstantiated allegations in relation to child protection. [92290]

Jacqui Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health has no policy on the profiling of individuals in assessing the basis of unsubstantiated allegations of child abuse.

Not all allegations of child abuse are substantiated. However, it is essential that all reports of child welfare concerns, whether made by professionals or the general public, are taken seriously and responded to promptly. The response should take into account any concerns that may previously have been received and focus on assessing the needs of the referred child.

Children's Services (Greater Manchester)

Mr. Graham Stringer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress he has made in establishing a supervisory board for children's services within Greater Manchester for primary, secondary and tertiary paediatric services. [[illegible]4571]

Mr. Andrew Smith [holding answer 2 December 2002]: I am aware that senior representatives of the strategic health authority and the Central Manchester and Manchester Children's University Hospitals NHS Trust recently met local hon. Members to inform them of progress.

I understand that the Greater Manchester strategic health authority recently circulated proposals to establish a children's network supervisory board. Comments have been requested by the end of January.

Cleft Lip and Palate Services

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he plans to reply to the letters of the Chairman of East Dorset Community Health Council of 27 September and 29 October, regarding cleft lip and palate services. [85474]

Ms Blears: This concerns an appeal to the Secretary of State by East Dorset Community Health Council regarding recommendations for the reconfiguration of the cleft lip and palate service. I will be writing to Mr. McCarthy as the Chair of the CHC, shortly.

Commission for Patient and Public Involvement in Health

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will define the term "traditionally marginalised groups" used in his Department's press release of 31 December 2002, New Era in Patient and Public Involvement in NHS. [92595]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not hold a definitive list of marginalised groups as it is for local health communities to determine which are the relevant groups in their area who do not generally have an opportunity to be involved in decisions about matters affecting their health.

Paragraph 13.2 of the NHS Plan talks about

> "tackling disadvantage in all its forms—poverty, lack of educational attainment, unemployment, discrimination and social exclusion" and recognises that inequity in access to services is not restricted to social class and geography and that people with disabilities and minority ethnic communities have specific needs.

Community Care

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the proposed fee increases from the Department of Health to be administered by local authorities for the provision of community care. [92872]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not set or recommend the rates at which councils contract with residential care and nursing homes. The detail of contracting arrangements between councils and independent sector providers of care is a matter for local decision.

The Government are providing records levels of funding for social services. Resources have increased nationally by 20 per cent. in real terms between 1996–97 and 2002–03, an average real terms increase of 3 per cent. per annum.

In addition, as announced on 17 April, we are increasing the resources for personal social services by an annual average of 6 per cent. in real terms from 2003–04 to 2005–06. Local councils will be able to use the extra resources to stabilise the care home market and provide more care home places.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what definitions he uses of (a) continuing care and (b) nursing care in a person's own home; and if he will make a statement. [92989]

Jacqui Smith: Guidance to the national health service and councils on eligibility for continuing care is contained in HSC 2001/015: LAC (2001) 18, published in June 2001.

The guidance makes it clear that fully funded NHS continuing health care can be provided in a person's own home, if the individual meets the criteria and it is possible to provide the care they need in their own home. In addition, the NHS routinely provides or arranges care from registered nurses and other staff in people's own homes.

Community Health Councils

Mr. John Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of community health councils. [93963]

Mr. Lammy: An announcement on the future of community health councils will be made shortly.

Delayed Discharge

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the accuracy of the delayed discharge figures; and what audit mechanisms are in place to ensure the figures are accurately collected and collated. [92992]

Jacqui Smith: The NHS Plan set out the Government's commitment to reduce substantially the number of people waiting to be discharged from hospital when they are fit to do so. Good progress has been made so far, with over 1,500 fewer people waiting to be discharged on any one day between September 2001 and September 2002. The Department is concerned to ensure that all data are as accurate as possible. Since April 2002, primary care trusts are responsible for submitting quarterly data to the Department. The Department can, and does, query data via the relevant strategic health authority on a regular basis.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many delayed discharge patients there were in hospital in (a) the latest month for which figures are available and (b) May 2002, broken down by local authority area in England. [89694]

Jacqui Smith [holding answers 14 January 2002]: The information requested is not available in the form requested. Delayed discharge data for England from September 2001 to September 2002 are shown in the table. These data are not available by council areas. Delayed discharges are a joint health and social services indicator and data are submitted to the Department on the basis of national health service organisations, the data having been agreed with their social services partners.

Since April 2002, this has been broken down by primary care trust areas and prior to that; by health authority. The detailed breakdowns by health authority and primary care trust have been placed in the Library.

England: Numbers of delayed discharges of patients of all ages by primary care trust[1]

	Delayed discharges
September 2002	5,385
June 2002	5,489
March 2002	5,473
December 2001	6,419
September 2001	7,065

[1] March 2002, December 2001 and September 2001 figures were collected by health authorities

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the recent levels of delayed discharges in (a) North Yorkshire and (b) England. [93015]

Jacqui Smith: There has been a continued reduction in delayed discharges in England, the latest figures for September 2002 show 5,385 delays compared to 7,065 in September 2001. Delayed discharges are a joint health and social services indicator and data are submitted to the Department on the basis of national health service organisations, the data having been agreed with their social services partners. Since April 2002, this has been broken down by primary care trust (PCT). The detailed breakdowns by PCT for June 2002 and September 2002 have been placed in the Library.

Dentists (Fareham)

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the dental practices that accept NHS patients in Fareham. [93201]

Ms Blears [holding answer 27 January 2003]: There are five dental practices with addresses in Fareham who have national health service patients on their books. They are listed as follows:

(i) 16 Park lane
Fareham
PO16 7JX

(ii) 4 Grove Road
Fareham
PO16 0NX

(iii) 8 Kings Road
Fareham
PO16 0NX

(iv) 98 Highlands Road
Fareham
PO15 6JF

(v) 12 South Street
Titchfield
Fareham
PO14 4DJ

Performance Report

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when his Department's autumn performance report for 2002 will be published. [93153]

Mr. Lammy: In December 2002, the Department published the Chief Executive's Report to the National Health Service, setting out progress during 2001–02 and for the first six months of the year.

This report sets out clearly how the increased resources within the NHS are being used to improve performance by providing more care for patients, improving quality and providing investment for the future.

Doctor: Patient Ratios

John Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures he is taking to improve doctor-patient ratios within Havering Primary Care Trust; and if he will make a statement. [85078]

Mr. Hutton: We are committed to expanding the primary care workforce both through national and local initiatives. The London Workforce Development Confederation has introduced a number of specific programmes to expand the general practitioner workforce in London by 225 GPs. These include:

> The London Deanery's successful expansion of the number of training places in GP practices for GP registrars. This year there are an additional 51 training places for GPs in London. Primary care trusts will be able to build on this success by setting up new and more flexible contracts for newly qualified GPs.
> More flexible career opportunities, particularly those designed to retain GPs close to retirement age, are also being put into place by London PCTs including a Flexible Career Scheme which will commence shortly, designed to attract GPs back into practice for part-time working.

Havering PCT is supporting nine applications for personal medical service status which includes seven salaried GP posts. The PCT is also working to make Havering a more attractive proposition for GPs to retain and further recruit doctors in the area. Some of the areas being progressed are the development of specialist GPs and a means of retaining registrars after they qualify. Developing the primary care infrastructure is also a key element of the PCT's strategy and its involvement in the local improvement finance trust process should further enhance its ability to retain GPs by making improved facilities available to them.

Free Eye Tests (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many free eye tests to pensioners there were in each year since 1997 in (a) Shropshire and (b) Shrewsbury and Atcham. [93020]

Mr. Lammy: The table shows the number of national health service sight tests paid for in Shropshire health authority (HA) for 1997–98 to 2001–02. Figures for the number of sight tests by constituency and age are not collected centrally, the nearest eligibility category for pensioners is those aged 60 and over.

Eligibility to NHS sight tests was extended to those aged 60 and over from 1 April 1999. There was an increase of 24,660 sight tests between 1998–99 and 1999–2000. It is fair to assume that the vast majority of this increase was due to newly eligible people aged 60 or over obtaining NHS sight tests.

General Ophthalmic Services: Number of sight tests paid for in Shropshire HA for the years 1997–98 to 2001–02

Year	Total number of sight tests	Total number of sight tests for aged 60 and over
1997–98	61,460	—
1998–99	64,350	—
1999–2000	89,010	33,460
2000–01	91,160	38,230
2001–02	94,880	24,210

Frictional Discharge

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 5 December 2002, Official Report, column 965W, on frictional discharge, what percentage and how many people classify as minimal numbers of delayed transfers in England. [92165]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 21 January 2003]: As Government investment and the Community Care (Delayed Discharges, etc) Bill takes full effect, nobody should need to remain in hospital unnecessarily when they are fit to be discharged.

GP Recruitment

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the recruitment of general practitioners has changed in (a) Shropshire and (b) the UK, in the last five years. [84493]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 December 2002]: Information relating to general practitioner recruitment in the Shropshire health authority area over the last five years is shown in the table. We do not collect this information on a UK basis.

Department of Health General and Personal Medical Services Statistics

Mr. Owen Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainee GPs failed to complete their training in each year since 1977. [84494]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 December 2002]: Summative assessment of general practice registrars was introduced throughout the United Kingdom in 1996. A review of the five year period to 30 September 2001 shows that 7,643 candidates undertook the test with 7,370 being successful, and 273, 3.6 per cent, unsuccessful: A breakdown of this is set out in the following table. However, this does not include those doctors undertaking GP training who may have dropped out prior to being summatively assessed for which no figures are held.

	Total GPRs	Failed to complete	Percentage
September 1996-August 1997	1,218	36	3.00
September 1997-August 1998	1,469	53	3.60
September 1998- August 1999	1,607	64	4.00
September 1999-August 2000	1,688	67	4.00
September 2000-August 2001	1,661	53	3.20
	7,643	273	3.6

A recent investigation showed that out of the 273 unsuccessful GP registrars 183 have now successfully completed the summative assessment process 67 per cent. after a further period of training.

eight are still in training 3 per cent.

82 did not complete their training, however these doctors may return to GP registrar training at a later date 30 per cent.

There are no centrally held figures in respect of doctors completing or not completing GP training prior to 1996.

Health Protection Agency

Mrs. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions his Department has held with representatives from the Public Health Laboratory Service in relation to the creation of a Health Protection Agency. [84250]

Ms Blears: The Public Health Laboratory Service board and management have been closely involved at each stage of the process and are represented on the steering group, the project group and all of the working groups associated with creating the Health Protection Agency and transferring to the national health service those laboratories that are to be transferred in preparation for its creation.

In addition, the staff representative organisations have been involved in regular trade union liaison group meetings which were established at the outset to oversee the implementation of the HPA. I met with staff side representatives on 13 January 2003 to review progress.

Health Workers

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the freedom to work provisions in the Treaty of Rome apply to all health workers. [93634]

Mr. Hutton: The Treaty confers the right of freedom of movement for workers, without specifying the kind of work done.

Healthcare Acquired Infection

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what work Strategic Health Authorities are undertaking to assess healthcare acquired infection data from local trusts; and if he will make a statement. [91466]

Ms Blears: The Commission for Health Improvement has recently announced two performance indicators for acute and specialist trusts for 2003, which relate to healthcare associated infections.

One performance indicator concerns infection control procedures and the other is an improvement score for methicillin resistant Staphylococcus aureus bacteraemia. Both indicators are based on healthcare associated infection data provided by acute national health service hospital trusts. Strategic health authorities will be using these indicators to manage the performance of their trusts in the future.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring his Department has undertaken on the availability of sufficient hand basins for effective infection control procedures in NHS hospitals. [91126]

Ms Blears: The design of new facilities is monitored by NHS Estates via the business case approvals process to ensure that proposals conform to design guidance issued by NHS Estates. This includes recommendations on the number of wash-hand basins for specific situations.

Trust chief executives are responsible for ensuring that there are effective arrangements in place for infection control. Monitoring of facilities for infection control, including provision of wash-hand basins within existing buildings, is undertaken by their infection control team.

Hospital Shift Patterns

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the impact of shift patterns of working in acute hospitals on (a) continuity of patient care and (b) overall quality of patient care. [92108]

Mr. Hutton: The majority of health professionals have always worked on shift patterns. The main exception has been the provision of resident out of hours medical cover, which has been largely provided by doctors in training. The most common arrangement is for these doctors to work a 'resident on call' where the doctor is resident on hospital premises for the full 24 hour period but only deemed to be working when actually called.

With the extension of the European Working Time Directive (EWTD) to doctors in training from August 2004, current resident on call working patterns are unlikely to represent the best use of available resources. Doctors providing out of hours cover will generally have to either move on to some form of shift pattern or provide cover through non-resident on call working.

The Department recognises the need to introduce these changes to working patterns in a way that maintains or improves the continuity and quality of patient care. To this end guidance on the implementation of EWTD for Doctors in Training has been issued (HSC 2003–001) and the Department is funding a programme of pilot projects to test a range of solutions. These pilots will be rigorously evaluated to ensure that standards of patient care have been maintained or improved. The key to continuity of care is the implementation of effective shift hand-over arrangements and good record keeping and this will also be evaluated in the pilot programme.

Hyperactivity

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what training is provided within the health and social services system on attention deficit hyperactivity for workers with personal contact with sufferers. [93163]

Jacqui Smith: In recent years, the Department has supported a number of initiatives taken by professional bodies and other agencies to raise awareness of attention deficit disorder (ADD) and attention deficit hyperactivity disorder (ADHD) and to facilitate accurate diagnosis and appropriate treatment. These include an evidence-based briefing for clinicians on the use of stimulant medication (1999) and fact-sheets for parents, teachers and young people on attention deficit problems and hyperactivity, both produced by the Royal College of Psychiatrists.

We have also collaborated with the Department for Education and Skills in issuing guidance for teachers on promoting children's mental health, including attention deficit/hyperactivity, within early years and school settings, in 2001. The Department has also grant-aided the ADHD UK Alliance, an organisation which helps to co-ordinate voluntary sector activity and development work in this field.

In general the content of professional training is a matter for the relevant professional bodies. However the Department's requirements for social work training from September 2003 will include elements covering child development and mental health and communication skills with children.

Irwell Mill, Bacup

Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost is of the proposed development by the Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale primary care trust on the site of Irwell Mill, Rochdale Road, Bacup; who will be responsible for the demolition and at what cost; and what payments in connection with the purchase of this site will be made to Stylegleam Ltd. [91935]

Jacqui Smith: The Burnley, Pendle and Rossendale primary care trust will be the owners of Irwell Mill in the very near future. The site was purchased at an auction, at an overall purchase price of £36,500. £14,500 was paid to the part owners, who are not Stylegleam Ltd., but may be associated with them. The purchases have been agreed by the district valuer.

Most of the mill will be demolished, with the Burnley borough council acting as the agents. The Regional Development Agency is funding the demolition work as part of its contribution to the regeneration of the town. A grant of £292,880 has been made available for this purpose.

From September 2003, the site will be transferred into a new public/private company. The primary care trust will have to repay any betterment value to the Regional Development Agency. This is likely to be in the region of £60,000. Any payments to the Regional Development Agency will be paid out of enabling monies, which have been made available to the East Lancashire local investment finance trust project. Thus, the cost of the acquisition and demolition to the primary care trust will be nil.

Once the site has been transferred into the public/private company, the latter will construct a new health centre on the site, estimated at £4.087 million including equipment, to provide health care facilities to national standards.

Kava-kava

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what health risks have led to the decision to ban Kava-kava; and how many incidences of health-related problems arising from such risks there have been in each of the past 10 years; [91484]

(2) how many deaths in the past 10 years in the UK have been attributed to consumption of Kava-kava; [91482]

(3) how many medical products containing Kava-kava are licensed; [91481]

(4) how the Medicines Control Agency determines what is an acceptable level of risk for the voluntary consumption of a medical product; [91470]

(5) what recent discussions he has had with other countries about safety issues related to Kava-kava; and how many have also banned products containing Kava-kava. [91483]

Ms Blears: In the United Kingdom, there are three licensed products containing the herbal ingredient Kava-kava (Piper methysticum). The majority of medicinal products containing Kava-kava sold in the UK are unlicensed and are exempt from licensing under section 12 of the Medicines Act 1968.

Evidence has emerged that consumption of medicinal products containing Kava-kava may be associated with liver toxicity in rare cases. To date, 70 cases of liver damage, suspected to be associated with the consumption of Kava-kava, have been reported worldwide. The case reports originate from Switzerland, Germany, Australia, Canada, France, the United States and four from the UK.

The severity of the liver damage suffered varies widely. Suspected adverse reactions include abnormal liver enzyme activity, jaundice, hepatitis and liver failure. In seven cases the patients suffered irreversible liver failure and received liver transplants. Four patients have died, including two of the patients who received liver transplants. None of the UK cases were associated with a fatal outcome.

The following table provides a breakdown of the number of cases of suspected liver damage associated with Kava-kava submitted to regulatory authorities in the last 10 years.

Year reaction reported	Number of cases of hepatotoxicity
1992	1
1993	1
1994	2
1995	0
1996	0
1997	1
1998	4
1999	4
2000	10
2001	22

In addition the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) received 13 case reports of hepatotoxicity associated with Kava-kava in 2002 from regulatory authorities world wide, where the date of the adverse reaction or received date were not specified.

A report of a suspected adverse reaction does not necessarily mean that it was caused by the herbal medicine. The number of reports received cannot be used as a basis for determining the incidence of a reaction as neither the total number of reactions occurring, nor the number of patients using the herbal medicine is known. Herbal medicines are often supplied without prescription and are taken without advice from doctors or pharmacists. It is generally recognised that the reporting rate for medicines supplied over the counter is lower than that of suspected adverse reactions associated with prescription medicines. Therefore, data obtained on suspected adverse reactions associated with herbal medicines through the Yellow Card Scheme cannot be directly compared to reporting for licensed pharmaceutical medicines.

The acceptable level of risk for a medicine will depend on the seriousness of the disease it is being used to treat and its efficacy in treating that disease as well as the availability of alternatives. A risk of an adverse effect that would be acceptable for a life saving treatment such as an anti-cancer medicine would not necessarily be acceptable in a treatment for a non-serious or self-limiting condition.

Each safety issue is considered on a case by case basis. In the case of Kava-kava the limited evidence of efficacy, the unpredictable and serious nature of the adverse reactions, the difficulty in regularly monitoring liver function without medical supervision and the lack of regulatory powers to require label warnings for unlicensed medicines were taken in to account.

The safety of Kava-kava has been discussed with European member states via the pharmacovigilance working party of the Committee for Proprietary Medicinal Products. The MCA has in addition communicated with the regulatory authorities of the USA, Australia and Canada. Other European member states have revoked or suspended the licences and Australia and Canada have initiated recalls of all products containing Kava-kava.

King Edward VII Hospital, Midhurst

Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) volume and (b) type of NHS work was undertaken by King Edward VII Hospital, Midhurst, in 2002–03; and if he will make a statement on its future. [92039]

Ms Blears: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Ministers and departmental officials have received a number of representations regarding the situation at the hospital. Discussions with the liquidator are currently ongoing. In view of that, it would not be appropriate for Ministers to comment further, although these discussions will of course focus on the continuing provision of appropriate care for national health service patients.

Maintenance Work

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost was of outstanding maintenance work necessary to achieve estate code condition B in the NHS in 2001–02, broken down into (a) fire safety and (b) health and safety costs in (i) England and (ii) each NHS region. [92790]

Mr. Lammy: The cost of outstanding repair and maintenance work necessary to achieve estate code condition B standards in England is commonly termed backlog maintenance costs and are generally broken down into fire safety, health and safety and physical condition elements.

For the year 2001–02 these costs, broken down by the former eight regions and current four Department of Health and Social Care (DHSC) regions are shown in the tables.

By former region 2001–02

£000

Region	Cost to achieve Physical Condition B	Cost to achieve Statutory Health and Safety Compliance Standard B	Cost to achieve Fire Safety Compliance Standard B	Total backlog
Eastern	269,018	17,779	21,607	308,404
London	687,774	97,676	62,937	848,387
North West	311,394	38,105	23,130	372,629

Meat (Safety)

Tony Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the Food Standards Agency will issue advice on the safety of eating meat from animals which have been vaccinated against foot and mouth. [92881]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 January 2003]: I am advised by the Food Standards Agency that the agency issued advice in April 2001 that eating meat, milk or other produce from animals that have been treated with authorised foot and mouth disease vaccines would not have any implications for food safety.

Medical Staff

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what right he will have to veto European proposals to introduce the 16 week provision relating to medical staff in the United Kingdom. [93633]

Mr. Hutton: The proposed provision forms part of a draft directive, which is the subject of continuing negotiation. In publishing it, the European Commission stated that its adoption would be by qualified majority insofar as its implementation did not require changes in the law of any member state governing the professions regarding training and conditions of access by natural persons. If that presumption failed, adoption would require unanimity.

Mental Health Treatment

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance has been issued to primary care trusts for the prescription of Aricept, Exelon and Reminyl for patients with mental health problems. [92527]

Jacqui Smith: In January 2001 the National Institute for Clinical Excellence issued guidance to the national health service on the use of Aricept (donepezil), Exelon (rivastigmine) and Reminyl (galantamine) for the treatment of mild to moderate Alzheimer's disease.

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many primary care trusts prescribe (a) Aricept, (b) Exelon and (c) Reminyl. [92528]

Jacqui Smith: Information about the number of primary care trusts in England where these drugs are prescribed is shown in the table.

Mental Health Wards

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds were available in secure mental health wards in each of the last five years. [93305]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is shown in the tables. The long-term secure bed numbers are included in these figures, but not separately identified in routine data collection.

Ministerial Engagements

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many engagements were undertaken outside London (a) by him or his predecessor and (b) by Ministers in his Department in January (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002. [87354]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 16 December 2002]: In January 2000 my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, undertook no visits outside London and made one visit in January 2001 and one visit in January 2002.

Members of the ministerial team made a total of 11 visits in January 2000, 16 visits in January 2001 and six visits in 2002 to venues outside London.

NHS Dentistry (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many patients were registered with an NHS dentist in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire in each year since 1997; [93022]

(2) what the average waiting time for an appointment was for the dental access centre in Shrewsbury in each month since its inception; [93024]

(3) how many patients were waiting for treatment at the dental access centre in Shrewsbury in each month since it opened. [93025]

Mr. Lammy: The table shows the number of registrations in Shropshire health authority at 30 September in each of the years 1997 to 2002.

Registrations lapse if patients do not return to their dentists within 15 months. Registrations will exclude patients who have not been to their general dental service (CDS) dentist within the past 15 months and patients who receive dental treatment from other national health service dental services.

During the period 1997 to 2002, the registration numbers are affected by the change in the registration periods for adults and children. Also, the figures do not include patients attending the dental access centres which opened during the period and whose patients are not registered.

Patients wishing to register with a GDS dentist can obtain details of dentists accepting new patients by contacting NHS Direct.

Monthly waiting list information for the Shrewsbury dental access centre is not collected.

General Dental Service: Number of registrations in Shropshire Health Authority area at 30 September 1997 to 2002

At 30 September	Number of patients registered[1]
1997	217,700
1998	191,000
1999	187,000
2000	186,000
2001	179,800
2002	182,300

[1] The registration number for September 1997 is not comparable with the later figures because of the change in the registration periods.

NHS Posts (Salaries)

Mr. Fallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will which NHS posts in Kent are paid a salary in excess of £100,000. [92085]

Ms Blears [holding answer 23 January 2003]: For reasons of data protection I am unable to provide a list, but there were 34 employees, excluding board members, in national health service trusts in Kent who received remuneration in excess of £100,000 in 2001–02. The remuneration includes gross salaries and wages, allowances for expenses and monetary value of benefits in kind.

The Government are committed to fair pay for all NHS staff. It recognises that the NHS needs good managers. Consequently guidance on managerial pay increases has been issued to the NHS in each of the past five years. This has taken into account increases in pay for other NHS staff as well as other relevant factors such as recruitment and retention. Local NHS employers have been advised to interpret the guidance appropriately and be able to justify decisions.

NHS Staff Assaults

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many sick days were taken by NHS staff last year as a result of being assaulted by patients. [92601]

Mr. Hutton: Information on levels of sickness absence resulting from work-related injuries or violence at work is not collected centrally, but may be held at a local level by individual national health service employers.

NHS Trusts (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the budget overspend was in each year since 1997 in each Shropshire NHS trust. [93021]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is shown in the table.

Underspends/overspends for Shropshire trusts: 1997–98 to 2001–02

A minus figure represents an overspend

NHS Trusts (Surrey)

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what allocation of strategic capital Surrey NHS trusts have received in the current financial year. [91467]

Ms Blears: Total strategic capital earmarked for Surrey trusts in 2002–03 was £8.8 million.

Of this, Ashford & St. Peters National Health Service Trust received £2.5 million, Surrey Oaklands NHS Trust £2 million and Surrey and Sussex Healthcare £4.3 million.

Nicotine Replacement Therapies

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his estimate is of the likely (a) fatal and (b) non-fatal side effects of Zyban if used for six months. [92605]

Ms Blears: Zyban (bupropion hydrochloride) was licensed in June 2000 as an aid to smoking cessation in combination with motivational support in nicotine-dependent patients. The maximum treatment course authorised in the United Kingdom is seven to nine weeks. Zyban should not be used for six months and therefore it is not possible to give an estimate of the likely fatal and non-fatal side effects of Zyban if used for this period of time.

Zyban is an effective aid to smoking cessation, and like all effective medicines is not without side effects. Since its launch in the United Kingdom, full guidance on prescribing and use, including possible side effects, have been present in the summary of product characteristics for health professionals and patient information leaflet for patients.

The side effects that are recognised to occur more commonly, ie, could happen to more than one in 100 people, in association with Zyban are non-serious including insomnia, urticaria, rash, headache, dizziness and nausea. Serious side effects do occur in association with Zyban, albeit rarely. These include seizures (fits or convulsions) which occur with an incidence of approximately 0.1 per cent., (one in 1,000) and hypertension and severe hypersensitivity reactions (which may occur in between one in 1,000 and one in 10,000 people taking Zyban). Of these, seizures and severe hypersensitivity reactions are potentially life threatening.

Nurses (Recruitment)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 25 November 2002, Official Report, column 136W, regarding ethical foreign nurse recruitment, how he plans to inform (a) NHS organisations, (b) overseas Governments, (c) overseas nurses and (d) other interested parties, of agencies that have been reported by the Workforce Development, Confederation for failure to adhere to the code of practice. [84772]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 December 2002]: Where reported breaches of the code of practice are substantiated the agency will be removed from the list of agencies who are compliant with the code of practice that the Department of Health publicises.

Nursing and Residential Homes (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places there were in (a) nursing and (b) residential homes for pensioners in each year since 1997 in (i) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (ii) Shropshire. [93085]

Jacqui Smith: Information on the number of places in nursing and residential homes in Shrewsbury and Atcham is not available.

Information on the number of places for adults aged 65 and over in Shropshire at 31 March each year from 1997 to 2001 is shown in the table. Data for 2002 are not yet available.

Note:

Nursing care places includes beds in private hospitals and clinics.

Nutrition

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much he is planning to spend on the promotion of nutritional issues in the next 12 months and how much he spent in each of the last five years. [88181]

Ms Blears: The Department of Health's spending plans for 2003–04 for programmes that aim to improve nutrition, including provision and promotion, have not yet been finalised. The Department plans to have spent £130 million in 2002–03, and spent £106 million in 2001–02, £108 million in 2000–01, £114 million in 1999–2000, and £118 million in 1998–99. This comprises the Welfare Foods programme, which is the largest single element; contributions to the Five-a-day programme and the National School Fruit Scheme, the main costs of both of which are at present met by the New Opportunities Fund; the Food in Schools programme; grants to charities promoting nutrition; and support for infant feeding. In addition, initiatives to promote nutrition have been funded by health action zones, sure start, healthy living centres, and through general funding allocations to the national health service.

Osteoporosis (Hull and East Riding)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of fracture patients aged over 50 received an osteoporosis risk assessment in (a) Hull and the East Riding and (b) England and Wales, in the last two quarters for which figures are available. [92909]

Jacqui Smith: Information about identifying those at risk of osteoporosis was included in the Department's "Strategy to prevent fractures caused by osteoporosis", which was issued to all health authorities in 1998. This was based on the Royal College of Physicians' clinical guidelines for strategies to prevent and treat osteoporosis.

Osteoporosis, a condition characterised by a reduction in bone mass and density increases the risk of fracture when an older person falls. The development and implementation of integrated falls services, incorporating the identification of osteoporosis are covered in the national service framework for older people. This, when set in the context of the national priorities guidance establishes it as a high priority for local action and delivery. It provides the basis for a service model that will deliver the improvements in prevention, care, treatment and rehabilitation of those at risk of injury from falls.

Information on the percentage of fracture patients over 50 years of age who have received an osteoporosis risk assessment is not available centrally.

Palliative Care

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many vacancies there are for palliative care consultants in (a) Lancashire, (b) the North West of England and (c) England. [93268]

Jacqui Smith: The figures for palliative care consultant vacancies are shown in the table.

	Three month vacancy rate (percentage)	Three month vacancy (number)	Staff in post (whole time equivalent)	Staff in post (headcount)
England	5.2	7	118	152
North West region	7.7	1	12	16
Former North East Lancashire Health Authority	[1]—	0	[2]—	[2]—
Former North West Lancashire Health Authority	[3]—	0	0	0
Former South Lancashire Health Authority	[3]—	0	0	0

[1] Figures where sum of staff in post vacancies is less than 10.

[2] Number is greater then 0 and less than five to prevent breaches of the data protection act.

[3] Figures where sum of staff in post and vacancies is zero.

Key notes:
1. Three month vacancy information is as at 31 March 2002.
2. Three month vacancies are vacancies which trusts are actively trying to fill, which had lasted for three months or more (whole time equivalents).
3. Three month vacancy rates are three month vacancies expressed as a percentage of three month vacancies plus staff in post.
4. Three month vacancy rates are calculated using staff in post Consultant Census, March 2002.
5. Staff in post data are from Mini Consultant Census, March 2002.
6. Staff in post data exclude staff employed by health authorities, as vacancy information was only collected from Trusts, PCTs and Special Health Authorities.
7. Medical and dental figures exclude staff in training.
8. Vacancy and staff in post numbers are rounded to the nearest whole number.
9. Percentages are rounded to one decimal place.

Other notes:
10. Due to rounding, totals may not equal the sum of component part.
11. Due to the rounding, calculating the vacancy rates using the above data may not equal the actual vacancy rates.
12. HA figures are based on Trusts, and do not necessarily reflect the geographical.

PCTs

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account is taken of the age profile of the population in fixing financial allocations to PCTs. [93115]

Mr. Hutton: We allocate funding to primary care trusts on the basis of the relative needs of their populations. A weighted capitation formula is used to determine each primary care trust's target share of available resources, which then inform allocations.

The age profile of the population is taken into account through age weightings within the formula. The age weightings reflect the variations in the need for healthcare arising from the age structure of the local population.

Performance Ratings

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to review the criteria for the annual performance rating for hospitals. [82992]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 December 2002]: The criteria for the 2002–03 performance ratings will be reviewed by the Commission for Health Improvement (CHI) which will be responsible for future publications of national health service performance ratings. CHI will recommend suitable sets of indicators to criteria agreed by Ministers, in line with priorities and targets that have been set by Government for the health service.

Prescription Charges

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the likely cost impact on prescribing conventional medicines following the changes to the range of traditional herbal medicines available in the UK. [91586]

Ms Blears: We anticipate that, if agreed, the proposed Directive on Traditional Herbal Medicinal Products would lead to a substantial expansion in the availability of herbal remedies made to assured standards of safety and quality and accompanied by systematic information about safe use of the product. This would extend the options available for members of the public wishing to take responsibility for their own health and in particular would help the public to make an informed choice of a remedy appropriate to their needs.

We also agree with the views expressed by many in the herbal sector that the proposed directive could lead to increased public confidence in traditional herbal remedies, which could lead to a beneficial effect on the market.

Given an extension of products made to assured standards, we would expect a reduction in the risk of members of the public requiring medical treatment, including prescribed orthodox medicines, as a direct result of taking poorly labelled unlicensed herbal remedies inappropriate to their needs or containing dangerous or illegal ingredients.

Overall, there are likely to be many factors affecting the usage of traditional herbal remedies and there will also continue to be many other factors affecting expenditure on prescribed orthodox medicines.

Primary Care

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what account was taken of inherited deficit in fixing future financial allocations for primary care trusts. [93408]

Mr. Hutton: We allocate resources to primary care trusts on the basis of the relative needs of their populations. A weighted capitation formula is used to determine each primary care trust's target share of available resources.

Public Services (Isle of Wight)

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his statement of 14 January, Official Report, column 662, on public services on the Isle of Wight, if he will make a further statement on issues related to the King Edward VII Hospital that the honourable Member for Tottenham was discussing when the House adjourned. [92295]

Ms Blears [holding answer 21 January 2003]: My hon. Friend's speech would have concluded with the words:

"There remains no lack of commitment on behalf of the National Health Service, who will continue to work with all parties to ensure the continuity of care for NHS patients. The NHS remains prepared to continue with its current commitment to the hospital, which is in excess of £3.4 million per annum."

Runaway Children (Counselling)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will issue guidelines on standards of counselling for children who run away from home. [93112]

Jacqui Smith: The recent Department of Health guidance, "Children Missing from Care and from Home—a guide to good practice" (November 2002), provides recommendations that a young person or child who goes missing from home may be a child in need and, where appropriate, should have access to an initial assessment provided by the local authority.

This assessment must conform to the requirements of the framework for the assessment of children in need and their families. It should evaluate the risks if a young person were to go missing again and whether or not they and their families might be appropriately offered local support services—such as mediation or counselling.

Social Services, Battersea

Martin Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many adults resident in Battersea pay for non-residential social services; and how many will no longer have to pay after April 2003. [92131]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally.

The Department issued statutory guidance to local councils for home care charges in November 2001. This guidance does not seek to change councils' power to charge or not, but seeks to ensure that, where councils do charge, this will be based on fairer well designed charging policies. An important principle of the guidance is that people whose incomes fall below basic levels of income support plus a 25 per cent. buffer will not be charged for their home care services.

Specialised Services Commissioning

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the progress primary care trusts in England are making with preparations for the commissioning of specialised services, with particular reference to those for (a) genito-urinary medicine and (b) haemophilia. [87725]

Ms Blears: Since April 2002 primary care trusts have been responsible for securing health services for their local populations, including the commissioning of specialised services. Regional specialised commissioning groups, whose former health authority members have now been replaced by PCT members, are continuing to exist during 2002–03, to ensure stability and continuity, as are existing consortia arrangements including previously agreed financial commitments and programmes of service reviews.

Responses to the ministerial review on specialised services are now being considered and guidance will be issued shortly on commissioning arrangements for 2003–04 onwards. Haemophilia and HIV treatment and care services will be covered by these arrangements. Genito-urinary medicine (GUM) services are not covered by regional specialist commissioning groups as they are not specialised services. However we have recently issued a Sexual Health and HIV Commissioning Toolkit to support those commissioning and providing sexual health and HIV services including GUM.

Stroke Care

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish a definition of what constitutes a specialist stroke unit; which acute hospitals (a) have such a unit and (b) are without such a unit; and which hospitals have plans approved and fully funded to open such a unit before the end of 2004. [91822]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 January 2003]: The term "specialist stroke unit" is used to describe hospital based acute care and rehabilitation services designed specifically for people who have had a stroke. A range of elements are associated with such units, in particular a complex multidisciplinary process of assessment, early management and ongoing rehabilitation. We do not routinely collect information about acute hospitals with and without such units.

The Sentinel Audit, carried out by the clinical effectiveness and evaluation unit of the Royal College of Physicians and led by the intercollegiate working party for stroke does collect this information but it is anonymous and cannot be used to identify particular hospitals.

The priorities and planning framework for 2003–6 requires all hospitals who care for people who have had a stroke to have specialist stroke services, which include specialist hospital based services, by April 2004. From monitoring against the April 2002 milestones for the national service framework, we know that well over 80 per cent, of such hospitals plan to have a specialist stroke service in place by April 2004.

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans his Department has to improve (a) diagnosis, (b) treatment and (c) post-discharge support for stroke victims suffering from depression; [93372]

(2) what plans are in place to enable health service staff to receive training enabling them to screen stroke victims for depression. [93373]

Jacqui Smith: In March 2001 the Department published the national service framework (NSF) for older people. This includes a standard on stroke. It sets out a comprehensive strategy to ensure fair, high quality integrated health and social care and reduce variations in services.

The priorities and planning framework for 2003–06 requires all hospitals who care for people who have had a stroke to have specialist stroke services, which include specialist hospital based services, by April 2004. From monitoring against the April 2002 milestones for the NSF, we know that well over 80 per cent. of such hospitals plan to have a specialist stroke service in place by April 2004.

By April this year every hospital which cares for older people with stroke will have established clinical audit systems to ensure delivery of the Royal College of Physician's clinical guidelines for stroke. These guidelines include the assessing and treatment of depression.

Statutory Instruments

Mrs. Calton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Statutory Instruments subject to negative procedure made by his Department (a) came into force and (b) were considered by a delegated legislation committee in each of the last three sessions. [88031]

Mr. Lammy: The information requested is shown in the table.

Number of Statutory Instruments that came into force for each session		Number of Statutory Instruments that were considered by a designated legislation committee
1999–2000	224	1999–2000	3
2000–01	274	2000–01	1
2001–02	503	2001–02	5

Surgical Equipment

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total amount of surgical equipment disposed of each year; and what steps are being taken to recycle this equipment. [91465]

Ms Blears: The Department does not hold central figures on the amount of surgical equipment disposed of each year.

Each national health service trust decides how to dispose of its surgical equipment. The NHS takes into account health and safety issues, such as risk of cross-infection when recycling or reselling surgical equipment. These issues include the possibility of the transfer of infections such as vCJD, HIV, hepatitis and the need for ensuring that staff using the equipment are properly trained.

The risks associated with the re-selling of surgical instruments could well outweigh any potential cost savings.

The Medical Devices Agency has issued guidelines entitled "DB9801 Supplement 2 Guidance on the sale, transfer of ownership and disposal of used medical devices". The key points addressed in the guidance are:

Transfer of ownership (sale or donation).

Decommissioning.

Disposal as waste.

Transitional Care Beds

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many transitional care beds have been created in each of the last three years in (a) each trust and (b) England; [92991]

(2) if he will set out his definition of transitional care beds. [92990]

Jacqui Smith: In previous years, a number of health and social care partnerships have used additional winter funding to create extra capacity in so-called transitional care. Essentially, this is short-term, temporary or "step down" care where people are cared for before they move on to the setting where they will receive any long-term care they need. The Department does not collect data on the number of transitional care beds.

Waiting Times

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the latest available waiting times are to receive a first consultant appointment following referral by a GP in each Trust area. [88163]

Mr. Hutton: Information on the number of outpatients waiting, following a general practitioner written referral who have yet to be seen at national health service trusts in England as at 30 September 2002, has been placed in the Library.

DEFENCE

Paper Supplies

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who are the suppliers of (a) paper and (b) paper products used by his Department. [91827]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence uses a wide range of paper and paper products. Our current principal suppliers are:

Astron Document Services Ltd
Astron Group Ltd
Banner Business Supplies Ltd
WHBradyCoLtd
Canon (UK) Ltd
Duni Ltd
Hutamaki (UK) Ltd
Kimberley Clark Ltd
NRG Group Ltd
Oce Ltd
Pitney Bowes Management Services Ltd
Plastico Ltd
Norprint Labelling Systems Ltd
SCA Packaging Ltd
Supplies Team Ltd
United Tools Distributors Ltd
Vemacare Ltd

Afghanistan (Armed Forces)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the strength is of British armed forces in Afghanistan. [93146]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom contributes around 300 United Kingdom Service personnel to the International Security Assistance Force in Kabul.

Aircraft Crash (Mehamn)

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the opening by the Norwegian Government of a new inquiry into allegations that an RAF Harrier was involved in the crash of a civilian Twin Otter aircraft near Mehamn in Norway in 1982. [93836]

Dr. Moonie: Earlier inquiries in 1982 and 1987 into this civil air accident were both satisfied that no fighter aircraft were in the vicinity at the time of the accident. We will offer every assistance to the new inquiry set up by the Norwegian Government if requested to do so. No terms of reference for the inquiry have yet been announced.

Animal Welfare

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments, broken down by (a) recorded category and (b) species, were carried out at Porton Down in each year since 1997. [93290]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Dstl Porton Down submits annual returns to the Home Office detailing the number of procedures undertaken which involve the use of animals as defined in the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

For the years 1997 to 2001 the returns broken down by the recorded category of primary purpose, as defined by the Home Office are detailed in the table:

	Year
Primary purpose	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Fundamental biological research	6,052	6,702	7,265	7,193	7,074
Applied studies—human medicine	4,763	4,199	4,147	4,641	5,674
Protection of man, animals or environment by toxicological or other safety or environmental evaluation[1]	0	0	9	0	108
Education	2	3	7	3	0
Training	2	0	0	2	0
Direct diagnosis	137	187	73	146	99
Total	10,956	11,091	11,501	11,985	12,955

[1] Excluding medical or veterinary products or appliances

In the years 1997 to 2001 the annual returns to the Home Office, broken down by species are detailed below:

Species	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Guinea pig	1,109	1,039	636	636	727
Ferret	0	30	0	0	0
Hamster	396	222	144	24	0
Mouse	8,569	7,477	10,144	10,856	11,944
Pig	85	96	84	106	23

Primate	30	128	60	34	68
Total	10,956	11,091	11,501	11,985	12,955

The figures for 2002 are expected to be available in late February.

Annual Report

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much producing his Department's latest Annual Report cost; how many copies were printed; how many copies of it were sold at its cover price; to whom copies of the report have been provided free of charge; and how many copies were provided free of charge. [90879]

Dr. Moonie: Production of the Ministry of Defence's annual Performance Report 2001–02 (Cm 5661) drew on performance management information collected within the Department for a variety of purposes. Its production involved a large number of people across the Department, and it is not therefore possible to calculate the cost without incurring disproportionate expense.

Decisions on print runs are a commercial matter for The Stationery Office Limited (TSO), who handle publication of the Report and who meet the costs of printing and publication.

The Ministry of Defence bought 650 copies and an electronic version from TSO at a cost of £8,536.25. All of the MOD's copies are distributed free of charge, the majority within the Department, but about 175 to other Government Departments, other nations, Parliament or the Press. ISO inform me that, as at 21 January 2003, they had sold a further 234 copies. The Report is also available on the MOD website (www.mod.uk).

Armed Forces (Deployments)

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the 10 largest current deployments of British armed forces broken down by country. [93148]

Mr. Ingram: The 10 largest deployments of the British armed forces on operations or involved in military tasks outside the United Kingdom are currently in (largest first) Cyprus, Kosovo, Bosnia, Falkland Islands, Kuwait, Afghanistan, Saudi Arabia, Oman, Gibraltar and Turkey. There are also sizeable numbers of British Army personnel permanently based in Germany and deployed on operations in Northern Ireland.

Asset Tracking

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what improvements have been made to (a) his Department's asset tracking capabilities since April 2002 and (b) its ability to measure the re-supply targets for orders placed by units. [92667]

Mr. Ingram: Since April 2002, the Department has taken a number of steps to improve both the ability to track consignments and to measure the performance of our re-supply systems including the procurement of an interim system which will improve our consignment tracking capability and ability to measure the achievement of delivery targets, and facilitate better operations with coalition partners. In the longer term we are developing a programme which will consolidate the information from individual systems through the Department and further improve consignment tracking within the supply chain.

Combat 95 Clothing

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of the armed forces indicated when last questioned that they were satisfied with their Combat 95 clothing; what percentage of respondents this represents; and if he will make a statement. [85013]

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers indicated when last questioned that they were (a) satisfied and (b) unsatisfied with Combat 95 clothing; what percentage of respondents this represents; what comments were made about the clothing; and if he will make a statement. [92145]

Dr. Moonie: The numbers of Army personnel indicating in their answers to the Continuous Attitude Survey (CAS) published in August 2002 that they were either satisfied or dissatisfied with their Combat 95 clothing was as follows:

	Satisfied		Neutral		Dissatisfied
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Officers	252	70	57	15	53	15
Soldiers	674	46	267	18	531	36

The CAS contained no question asking for specific comments about Combat 95 clothing.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93050]

Dr. Moonie: In the last five years, the following instances of computer misuse were recorded across Defence:

	Unauthorised access to computer material		Unauthorised access with intent to commit or facilitate commission of further offences		Unauthorised modification of computer material
	Incidents	Disciplined	Incidents	Disciplined	Incidents	Disciplined
1999	4	2	5	0	3	0
2000	6	1	1	1	3	1
2001	10	0	0	0	2	1
2002	5	0	1	0	1	0

The totals for disciplinary action are only those recorded at the time of the incident; there may have been subsequent action, but such numbers are not readily available under current reporting arrangements, and such additional information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. A new system of reporting is being introduced with effect from 1 April 2003. This will enable detailed data to be retrieved more readily in future years.

Departmental Houses

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's houses were sold last year in the United Kingdom. [93308]

Dr. Moonie: During the period January to December 2002, sales were completed for a total of 477 residential properties.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the running costs of (a) the Department and (b) each of its sponsored agencies were in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90715]

Dr. Moonie: The running costs of the Ministry of Defence as a whole were £14,770 million in 1997–98. This figure is the net expenditure included in the Appropriation Account for that year, excluding systems procurement expenditure in the Procurement Executive (now the Defence Procurement Agency). It is cash based and includes expenditure on military and civilian personnel costs, movements, stores and spares, research and works services.

In accordance with the Government Resource Accounting Act 2000, the Department's financial performance is now reported to Parliament in the Consolidated Departmental Resource Accounts.

The net operating cost of the MOD as a whole, as reported in the 2001–02 Departmental Resource Account, was £32,239 million. This figure is on a resource basis and includes military and civilian personnel costs, property management and equipment support costs, stock consumption, depreciation, impairment on fixed assets and cost of capital charges.

Information on agencies' expenditure is contained in the Annual Report and Accounts of each agency, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many full-time equivalent staff are employed in (a) the Department and (b) each of the agencies it sponsors; and what the figures were for 1997. [90677]

Dr. Moonie: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him on 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 697W, by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office.

Desert Equipment

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Desert Equipment has been issued; and to which elements of British armed forces. [91046]

Mr. Hoon: We have been taking a range of preparatory measures to ensure that our Armed Forces have all the equipment they need to do any tasks required of them.

I am withholding information on equipment numbers and the units to which they are being issued in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Exercise Saif Sareea

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the (a) cost of recovery and (b) amount written off as a result of the return, inspection and recovery of tents issued to Oman during Exercise Saif Sareea II. [92666]

Mr. Ingram: The cost of recovering the tentage from Exercise Saif Sareea II was £512,000. Tent writes-off amounted to £103,000. The refurbishment of tentage cost some £1.9 million. Had we decided to leave the tentage in theatre and replace it, the cost would have been around £9.5 million. The decision to return and refurbish represented good value for money.

Fleet Air Arm

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) target and (b) actual recruitment figures have been for Fleet Air Arm (i) pilots and (ii) other personnel in each of the past five years. [92963]

Dr. Moonie: The target and actual recruitment figures for the Fleet Air Arm broken down by pilot and other personnel is each of the past five years is as follows:

	1998–99		1999–2000		2000–01		2001–02		2002–03
	Target	Actual	Target	Actual	Target	Actual	Target	Actual	Target	Actual

NA(SE)—Naval Airman (Survival Equipment)
NA(Met)—Naval Airman (Meteorological)

Notes:

1. Figures for 1997–98 not available at level of detail.
2. 1998–99 Fleet Air Arm officer Sub-branch figures estimated—total officer figure correct.
3. Artificers have not been included as they are not streamed until further into their training.

Ground Proximity Warning Systems

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many RAF aircraft have been fitted with ground proximity warning systems, (a) in total and (b) by aircraft type; and if he plans that the successor to Hawk trainers will be fitted with GPWS. [92507]

Mr. Ingram: The following table shows the number of RAF aircraft that were fitted with Ground Proximity Warning Systems as at 20 January:

Aircraft type	Number of aircraft fitted ground protection warning system
BAe 146 Mk 2	2
C-17	4
Harrier GR7	28
Hercules C130J	25
Hercules C130K	1
Jaguar GR3/3a	45
Jaguar T4	12
Tornado F3	24
Tornado GR4	130
Tristar	9
Total	268

The Advanced Jet Trainer for the Military Flying Training System, to which I assume the hon Member is referring, is intended to be fitted with a Ground Protection Warning System.

Health and Safety

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department and its agencies have met the commitment arising from Action Point 13 of the June 2000 strategy statement on Revitalising Health and Safety, to summarise health and safety performance and plans in annual reports from the year 2000–01 onwards. [89514]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has since 1999–2000 published an annual report by the Chief Environment and Safety Officer Ministry of Defence (CESO(MOD)) indicating the progress made on health and safety issues, including performance and forthcoming initiatives in the Department. This includes all agencies in the Ministry of Defence, as CESO(MOD) has a remit from my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to monitor their activities. The report is reviewed by the Defence Environment and Safety Board (DESB), which I chair, and when accepted by the DESB, it is published on the world wide web for public information.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which senior officials within his Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised. [89515]

Dr. Moonie: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence is the responsible person for health and safety in the Ministry of Defence. This is identified in the Ministry of Defence Policy Statement (July 2000) for the Management of Safety and Environmental Protection. Within the policy, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State appoints the Second Permanent Under-Secretary as the Senior Manager for the Defence Council to be responsible for MOD policy, standards, and where appropriate, regulations. As Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, I am appointed to act as Green Minister and Chair the Defence Environment and Safety Board. This role provides direction, sets objectives and monitors the Department's performance on environment and safety matters

The tasks required to discharge the Secretary of State's responsibilities are delegated to members of the Defence Council and to Chief Executives of Defence Trading Fund Agencies. They are required to produce their own Organisation and Arrangements Statement for health and safety, linked to the Secretary of State policy. The separate statements identify a Management Board member from their organisation who has a health and safety role. The Heads of the organisation will have ultimate accountability for health and safety in their organisation. The names of the persons with specific health and safety duties are identified in each of the Organisational Statements produced. These persons are identified by post rather than an individual's name.

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information he has collated on the application to his Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the Revitalising Health and Safety strategy statement; and if he will make a statement. [89516]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence accepted the checklist circulated by Sir Richard Mottram under Action Point 12 of the initiative of Revitalising Health and Safety. The checklist was assessed against the Ministry of Defence safety management system, and as a result, policy changes were made and the objectives contained in the checklist were integrated into the MOD's Safety Environment and Fire Audit Methodology. The MOD had already adopted the Health and Safety Executive guidance, Successful Heath and Safety Management (HSG 65), into its safety management system and the impact of the checklist was minimal.

The checklist was circulated to each of the Service and Trading Fund Agency safety focus, to review their own arrangements.

Health Care

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers when last questioned indicated that they were (a) unsatisfied and (b) satisfied with (i) military health care, (ii) waiting lists, (iii) remedial treatment and (iv) health care for their family; what percentage of respondents this represents; and if he will make a statement. [92146]

Dr. Moonie: Continuous Attitude Surveys (CAS) do not ask how satisfied or dissatisfied soldiers are with Military Healthcare per se. Instead, more specific questions are asked eg relating to waiting lists, remedial treatment and healthcare for the family. Responses given in the CAS published in August 2002 were as follows.

	Satisfied		Neutral		Dissatisfied
	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage	Number	Percentage
Waiting lists
Officers	152	43	79	23	119	34
Soldiers	720	50	419	29	297	21
Remedial treatment
Officers	162	47	71	21	112	32
Soldiers	703	50	433	31	273	19
Healthcare for family
Officers	49	19	86	34	118	47
Soldiers	315	30	430	42	290	28

Housing Stock

David Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much investment was made by his Department in housing stock in 2002 in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) other countries, broken down by country. [93309]

Dr. Moonie: The investment made in housing stock has been interpreted to mean expenditure on service family accommodation upgrades and new build, falling within the capital departmental expenditure limit (DEL), which for financial year 2001–02 outturn was as follows:

Country	Outturn for FY 2001–02 (£ million)
United Kingdom	27.162
Germany	0.481
Gibraltar	1.497
Cyprus	10.771

The figure for the UK excludes some £54 million, which falls within the resource DEL, which was spent by the Defence Housing Executive on its upgrade programme. Details of expenditure in financial year 2002–03 are not currently available.

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many empty homes his Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if he will establish an empty homes strategy within his Department; and if he will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92916]

Dr. Moonie: On 1 April 1998 the Defence Housing Executive (DHE) had 13,235 vacant properties. By 1 April 2002 the numbers of voids had reduced to 8,852. A breakdown, by DHE region, follows:

	1998	2002
Eastern	2,920	1,762
Western	1,421	1,176
South East Central	1,492	1,312
South East North	2,094	743
South East South	1,605	1,369
South West	2,480	1,785
Scotland	1,223	705
Total	13,235	8,852

To provide timely accommodation for service personnel and to allow for the high mobility of service life, DHE's long-term strategy is to operate with a management margin of no more than 10 per cent. of vacant properties. The welfare of military personnel and their families is paramount: requiring families to move mid-tour to facilitate property disposals is unpopular and could ultimately affect morale and retention. Maintaining a reasonable management margin allows DHE to keep these moves to a minimum. Unlike the situation with many other housing providers, turnover of occupants is generally high, and it would be inappropriate to keep void rates very low by using waiting lists and temporary accommodation such as bed and breakfast.

One of the key targets set for DHE is to reduce the management margin progressively towards 10 per cent. by November 2005. A policy of continuous review of all quarters has secured the disposal of nearly 11,000 properties in the last three years. In accordance with wider Government policy, properties that are temporarily surplus but held for known future deployments are offered to registered social landlords, local authorities, and more recently to key workers from the fire, police, prison, NHS, and education services.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact of the UK's ratification of the Statute of the International Criminal Court on UK forces' scope for action in the event of any military intervention in Iraq. [92891]

Mr. Ingram: The offences contained in the Statute of the International Criminal Court (ICC) reflect international law provisions that were already applicable to the conduct of United Kingdom forces in any theatre of engagement. The ICC Statute does not therefore impose new conditions.

The consequences for our forces of UK ratification of the ICC Statute were carefully examined in preparation for the ICC Act 2001. Under the Statute, investigation and, if necessary prosecution of any allegations of war crimes, crimes against humanity or genocide by a UK national would be carried out by the UK. The Court would intervene only if it determined that a state was unwilling or unable to pursue a particular case, but it is inconceivable that the UK would ever be unable or unwilling to investigate or take appropriate action.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, what assessment he has made of the number of Iraqi civilian casualties that could arise from a war against Iraq. [91967]

Mr. Ingram: No decision on military action in Iraq has been taken. In any military action it is our policy, consistent with international law, to avoid civilian casualties and damage to infrastructure wherever possible, and to minimise them where they cannot be avoided.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with (a) France and (b) Germany on (i) co-operation in military action against Iraq and (ii) a European Union military force against Iraq. [92926]

Mr. Hoon: There has been no decision to take military action against Iraq. I have not discussed with my French or German colleagues bilateral co-operation, or any European Security and Defence Policy operation, in that context. Military action in Iraq is neither imminent nor inevitable.

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether British troops have been given orders in relation to protection of oil fields in Iraq. [93105]

Mr. Hoon: No decision has been taken to commit British forces to military action against Iraq. It would not be appropriate to comment on any tasks that might be undertaken by our forces in the event of military operations.

MOD Police

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Ministry of Defence police officers will be surplus to requirement at (a) Salisbury Plain Army Training Estate, (b) Boscombe Down and (c) DSTL Porton Down when Landmarc Support Services commence their strategic partnership; and if he will make a statement. [93483]

Dr. Moonie: Ministry of Defence police (MDP) numbers are kept under constant review. However, there will be no reduction of MDP personnel in the Salisbury Plain area when Landmarc Support Services undertake the contract to provide assistance with the upkeep of the Army Training Estate.

Naval Helicopters

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on (a) the current and (b) the future projected roles of the Royal Navy's (i) Merlin, (ii) Sea King and (iii) Lynx helicopters. [92898]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Navy's Merlin Mark 1 helicopters provide an advanced anti-submarine search and attack capability, as well as wider utility in surface surveillance, Search and Rescue (SAR) and support roles. Merlin achieved its Initial Operating Capability deployed in HMS Ark Royal in June 2002, and has completed a successful embarkation in the Type 23 Frigate, HMS Lancaster. It will provide a crucial component of both open ocean and littoral operations for the foreseeable future.

The Sea King has provided the backbone of the Royal Navy's anti-submarine capability over the last three decades, but is being progressively withdrawn from service as Merlin becomes operational. The Sea King Airborne Early Warning Mark 2 has been upgraded to Mark 7 to provide enhanced airborne surveillance and control for air defence into the next decade. The Sea King Mark 4, supplemented by the conversion of some Mark 6 aircraft, will continue to provide a support helicopter capability, primarily for three Commando Brigade Royal Marines, until the turn of the decade. The Sea King Mark 5 will provide a SAR capability well into the next decade.

Lynx Mark 3 and Mark 8 aircraft provide surveillance and attack capability from assigned frigates and destroyers. This includes surface surveillance and targeting, anti-surface and anti-submarine weapon delivery, and battle damage assessment, as well as key elements of frigates' and destroyers' SAR, humanitarian support and constabulary capabilities. The Surface Combatant Maritime Rotorcraft (SCMR) will be phased into service during the second half of the decade to succeed and enhance the capability currently provided by the Lynx Mark 3 and Mark 8 helicopters.

Oil and Pipelines Agency

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place the latest report of the Oil and Pipelines Agency in the Library. [93715]

Dr. Moonie: The latest report of the Oil and Pipelines Agency was placed in the Library on 19 November 2002.

Pay Settlement

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the four year pay settlement reached with MOD employees. [93469]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has negotiated a four year pay settlement which includes significant reform in line with the Modernising Government agenda, introducing automatic pay progression and focusing performance related pay on bonuses. Similar agreements were negotiated with both industrial and non-industrial staff.

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92463]

Dr. Moonie: The number of press releases issued by the Ministry of Defence's central Press Office has been recorded by calendar year only for years 1995–96. Figures for the dates in question are:

Year	Number
1995	149
1996	176
1997[1]	160
1998	238
1999	282
2000	224
2001	159
2002	151

[1] Data only available from 1 May onwards

The number of press releases issued in each quarter from 1997 to 2002 is in the following table:

	Quarter 1	Quarter 2	Quarter 3	Quarter 4	Total
1997	n/a	25	44	91	160
1998	72	67	56	43	238
1999	75	67	56	84	282
2000	44	48	69	63	224
2001	53	29	38	39	159
2002	40	31	39	41	151

Note:

Figures by quarter for years before May 1997 are no longer available.

In addition to the figures, the single services, the regional defence press offices and defence agencies issue their own press releases. They also re-issue some central press releases for local distribution. Accurate figures on these, which take account of any "duplicate releases", could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what major (a) variations and (b) delays there have been to the Private Finance Initiative contract for the (i) Central Scotland Family Quarters, (ii) NRTA Fire Training, (iii) Army Foundation College, (iv) RAF Mail, (v) RAF Cosford/Shawbay Family Quarters, (vi) RAF Lossiemouth Family Quarters, (vii) Attack Helicopter Training and (viii) Light Aircraft Flying (LAFT) (Bulldog) since they were signed; what their cost has been; whether the partners in the PFI were required to meet these costs; and if he will make a statement. [90168]

Mr. Ingram: Of the specified PFI contracts, only two of the projects have experienced significant changes as follows:

Army Foundation College

The capping of contaminated mounds on site has led to programme delays and increased construction costs. The Ministry of Defence granted a four-month extension to the contractor, the cost of which is not yet known as it is subject to on-going detailed negotiations. As the site owner, MOD will fund the costs. There were no delays to service provision, which has been provided throughout the construction phase.

Attack Helicopter Training

Information relating to the software integration delays and costs for the Full Mission Simulator training service can be found in the report by the Comptroller and Auditor General, "Building an Air Manoeuvre Capability: The Introduction of the Apache Helicopter", published on 31 October 2002 [HC1246, Session 2001–2002].

Reservists

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reservists served in (a) the Gulf War, (b) Kosovo and (c) Afghanistan; and what percentage of those fit for active duty this represented at the time. [92137]

Dr. Moonie: As of 22 January, 588 reservists have served in support of operations in Afghanistan. This figure excludes a small number of RAF reservists who served in Afghanistan between 1 July 2002 and 22 January 2003 for which figures are currently unavailable. It is not possible to state what percentage of those reservists fit for active duty this represented as the state of health for members of the reserve forces changes from day to day. A reservist's fitness for active duty only becomes apparent either when they report for service or if they make an application for revocation, exemption or deferral of call-out based on their health.

In the time available it has not been possible to collate information regarding the number of reservists who served in Kosovo or during the 1990–91 Gulf conflict as this is not held centrally.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) reservists and (b) medical reservists have responded to call-up notices; and if he will make a statement. [92665]

Dr. Moonie: As at 21 January 180 reservists called-out to support Operation TELIC had reported for mobilisation of which 98 were accepted for service. None of these individuals were medical reservists.

Mr. Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what legal protection to return to their existing jobs is afforded to reservists called up by the armed forces; and if he will make a statement. [93320]

Dr. Moonie: Reservists who are called out into permanent service benefit from employment protection under the Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act 1985.Under Section 1 of that Act an employer must take into his or her employment, at the same conditions of service as they were previously serving, former employees who make a written application at the end of a period of called-out service. If this is not reasonable and practical, the Reservist must be reinstated on the most favourable terms of service available.

Should an employer fail to reinstate a Reservist in accordance with the provisions of that Act, the Reservist may apply to a Reinstatement Committee to hear his case. The Reinstatement Committee can order the employer to reinstate the Reservist, or to pay compensation to him/her, or both. Failure to comply with an order of a Reinstatement Committee is a criminal offence, and an employer may be fined on summary conviction. Appeals by either the employer or the Reservist against the determination of the Reinstatement Committee may be made to an Umpire appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Royal Marines

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) target and (b) actual recruitment figures have been for the Royal Marines in each of the past five years. [92964]

Dr. Moonie: The target and actual recruitment figures for the Royal Marines in each of the past five years is as follows:

	1998–99		1999–2000		2000–01		2001–02		2002–03

Royal Naval Reserve

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the (a) target and (b) actual figures have been for recruitment into (a) the Royal Naval Reserve and (b) the Royal Marines Reserve in each of the past five years. [92965]

Dr. Moonie: The target and actual figures for recruitment into the Royal Naval Reserve are recorded by financial year. The figures for the most recent five financial years are as follows:

	Target	Actual
1998–99	650	445
1999–2000	650	604
2000–01	650	562
2001–02	650	676
2002–03	480	[1]410

[1] As at 31 December 2002

The target and actual figures for recruitment into the Royal Marines Reserve are recorded by calendar year. The RMR figures for each of the last five years are as follows:

	Target	Actual
1998–99	300	285
1999–2000	300	328
2000–01	300	260
2001–02	300	288
2002–03	300	225

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the role and structure of the Royal Naval Reserve; [92969]

(2) what assessment his Department has made of the changed roles of (a) the RNR and (b) the RMR since 11 September 2001. [92966]

Dr. Moonie: The Royal Naval Reserve (RNR) exists to provide a corps of readily available, highly trained personnel to enable the Royal Navy to meet its operational commitments in times of stretch, crisis, tension and war—including peacekeeping and humanitarian operations and disaster relief.

The RNR is based upon 13 general-purpose Reserve Training Centres located throughout the United Kingdom. The majority of RNR Branches and Specialisations provide unique skill sets, which are not generally required in peacetime, but are used to augment the Fleet in times of crisis. The operational structure of the RNR has recently been updated to ensure that these requirements can be met. The structure comprises six branches, some of which cover a number of specialisations.

Following the events of 11 September, my hon Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced that the Ministry of Defence would look again at its defence posture to ensure that we have the right concepts, the right forces and the right capabilities to meet the additional challenges we face from international terrorism and asymmetric threat. He described this work as a New Chapter to the Strategic Defence Review published in 1998. This was presented to Parliament by my hon Friend the Secretary of State for Defence by Command of Her Majesty in July 2002.

Following this review, there are no changes to the role of the Royal Naval Reserve. Neither have there been changes to the role of the RMR, which remains to reinforce the Royal Marines and other services as and when required with individuals and sub-units worldwide.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) professional and (b) voluntary personnel are in the Royal Naval Reserve. [92970]

Dr. Moonie: All members of the Royal Naval Reserve are volunteers. There were 3,222 volunteers as at 31 December 2002. There are 103 serving—i.e. regular armed forces—personnel and 13 Retired Officers employed in managing the RNR and training the volunteers.

Royal Navy

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy resources are allocated to meet commitments in (a) the Balkans, (b) Cyprus and (c) Sierra Leone. [92893]

Mr. Ingram: There are currently fifty Royal Navy personnel in the Balkans. Two patrol craft, one rigid raiding craft and fifty RN or Royal Marine personnel are currently allocated to British Forces Cyprus. In Sierra Leone, three RN personnel are assigned to UNAMSIL and two RN personnel to the International Military Assistance and Training Team.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy resources are allocated to combating (a) piracy and (b) drug-trafficking; and in which theatres. [92896]

Mr. Ingram: No Royal Navy assets are specifically allocated to combating piracy. International Maritime Law does however, place an obligation on any seafarer to assist others in distress if they are in a position to do so. RN ships would offer such assistance if appropriate. In areas where there is a known risk of piracy, RN warships would take this into consideration and adjust their own level of readiness accordingly.Again, there are no RN assets dedicated specifically to counter narcotics activities. Military Forces are, however, made available upon request, when operational commitments and resources allow, to support the counter drugs activities of the law enforcement agencies. In recent years, such assistance has been provided in the Caribbean, United Kingdom waters, Atlantic and the Arabian Sea.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy resources are allocated to training former Eastern Bloc countries' armed forces. [92897]

Dr. Moonie: The United Kingdom has pursued for several years an active programme of defence assistance to countries of the former Eastern Bloc, as an integral part of our policy to build stability and security in the region. For geographical and historical reasons, defence assistance is focused principally on land forces but, where practical, the Royal Navy contributes to the overall programme. In particular, students from the former Eastern Bloc attend Royal Naval Initial Officer Training and Tactical and Staff Training at the Naval module of intermediate staff training courses in the United Kingdom. In addition, the Royal Navy also undertakes joint mine warfare training in the Baltic with Allies and the Baltic states; and is supporting the operational sea training of the Polish frigate Pulaski to bring her into NATO's Standing Naval Force Atlantic for 2004. There is also a well established programme of naval co-operation with Russia which includes some limited elements of training.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the specialist (a) anti-aircraft, (b) anti-ship and (c) anti-submarine capabilities of each class of (i) frigate and (ii) destroyer (A) being built and (B) already deployed by the Royal Navy. [92900]

Mr. Ingram: The in-service Type 22 (Broadsword Class) and Type 23 (Duke Class) Frigates have been designed primarily for the Anti-submarine Warfare (ASW) role. To fulfil this, they have torpedo tubes fitted and Lynx or Merlin ASW helicopters embarked. Their anti-aircraft capability is provided by Sea Wolf missiles, and their anti-surface ship capability by Sea Skua missiles carried on Lynx helicopters, close-range guns and long-range Harpoon anti-surface missiles.

The primary role of the in-service Type 42 Destroyer is to provide air defence for task group operations. For this, it is equipped with Sea Dart anti-aircraft missiles, which also have a secondary anti-surface ship capability. As with the Frigates, Type 42 Destroyers also have torpedo tubes and Lynx ASW aircraft for anti-submarine warfare, with anti-surface capability provided by Sea Skua missiles on Lynx aircraft.

Equipped with the Principal Anti-Air Missile System (PAAMS), the prime role of the future Type 45 Destroyers will be anti-air Warfare. The Sea Skua missile, fitted to the Lynx helicopter, together with the ship's medium range gunnery system, will provide the anti-surface ship capability. Anti-submarine warfare capability will primarily be provided by the Lynx helicopter, equipped with Stingray anti-submarine torpedoes. The systems delivering these capabilities will be considered for progressive updates during the in-service life of the Type 45, which is designed with significant space and weight margins to meet emerging requirements.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) Royal Naval and (b) Royal Marines shore establishments which have been (i) taken out of and (ii) brought into service since May 1997. [92960]

Mr. Ingram: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on multi-national training programmes with allied forces for (a) the Royal Navy and (b) the Royal Marines. [92971]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Navy and Royal Marines, and the other services, take part in a wide range of multinational and bilateral training exercises to prepare for operations and enhance interoperability with NATO and coalition partners. In addition, United Kingdom operational sea training and joint maritime courses (JMCs) are carried out with participants from a wide range of European navies, USA, Australia, Canada and New Zealand, with the aim of preparing units to operate together.

The Royal Navy and Royal Marines maintain personnel exchange programmes with allies. In addition to core exercise activity, exercises are carried out with other nations in support of defence diplomacy initiatives, including Partnership for Peace countries. The Royal Navy and Royal Marines are also committed to the United Kingdom Netherlands Amphibious Force (UKNLAF), which has proved a model for amphibious co-operation for other nations in Europe. This standing force celebrates its 30th anniversary in 2003 and the capability has been maintained through regular shared training opportunities.

Examples of major Royal Navy and Royal Marines' multinational and bilateral exercises in 2002 included an integrated air defence exercise with Australia, New Zealand, Singapore and Malaysia (five powers defence arrangements), exercise Destined Glory with other NATO members and exercise Blackhorse with the USA. Major elements of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines also participated in exercise Saif Sareea in late 2001, alongside the Omani armed forces.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what Royal Navy resources are allocated to duties in respect of Northern Ireland. [92972]

Mr. Ingram: The Royal Navy (RN) has a squadron of three Hunt Class patrol craft based in Faslane, which support naval operations in Northern Ireland. One patrol craft, with 35 personnel onboard, is routinely deployed to patrol Northern Ireland territorial waters every day of the year. This ship is supported by a team of eight Royal Marines (RM) with four rigid inflatable boats to conduct the boarding of vessels entering or leaving NI ports. There are also 20 RN/RM personnel based in the Province who provide operational support to the patrol vessel.

In addition, the Royal Navy have an Armed Forces Career Office in Palace Barracks, Holywood, consisting of one RN officer and four senior ratings. There is a staff of two officers and eight senior/junior ratings on HMS Caroline (reserve training ship). The Joint Helicopter Force (Northern Ireland) has one RN officer on its staff, and there is one officer in the post of Assistant Naval Regional Officer (Northern Ireland) also based at HMS Caroline.

A Sea King Helicopter Detachment (consisting of three helicopters and up to 40 personnel) deploys to the Province as operational requirements demand.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) male and (b) female personnel there have been in (i) the Royal Navy and (ii) the Royal Marines in each year since 1997, broken down into (A) officers and (B) other ranks. [92973]

Dr. Moonie: Royal Navy and Royal Marine strengths by gender 1997–2002 are shown in the table:

	January 1997	January 1998	January 1999	January 2000	January 2001	January 2002	December 2002

Note:

All figures are rounded to the nearest 10, and include untrained strengths.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) Afro-Caribbean and (b) Asian ethnic minority personnel there have been in (i) the Royal Navy and (ii) the Royal Marines in each year since 1997, broken down into (A) officers and (B) other ranks. [92974]

Dr. Moonie: The number of Asian and Black Caribbean personnel serving in the Royal Navy and the Royal Marines are shown in the tables:

Royal Navy[1]

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on educational opportunities for (a) officers and (b) other ranks in (i) the Royal Navy and (ii) the Royal Marines. [92975]

Dr. Moonie: Both the Royal Navy and Royal Marines offer a wide variety of educational opportunities for personnel as part of training, personal development or lifelong learning.

There are a number of educational opportunities that are available to all, regardless of rank. These consist of a university short course programme, a variety of short courses available to personnel at no cost to the individual, an HM Forces scheme administered under the University of Cambridge Local Education Syndicate which provides world-wide access to IGCSE/GCE programmes and a forces distance learning scheme.

For officers there is the opportunity to achieve accreditation for many Royal Navy and Royal Marines courses, examples include, supply officers, legal training for barristers and flying start degree scheme, for non graduate aircrew, plus sponsored post graduate study for selected officers and language training.

Other ranks of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines undertake national vocational qualifications, and accreditation for many training courses with national bodies such as higher national diplomas. Training for Royal Marine musicians has also achieved accreditation to BA Music. In addition, a high percentage of Royal Navy personnel are corporately sponsored through foundation for modern apprenticeship programmes, including NVQs, key skills and technical certificates.

Rough Terrain Fleet

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many fully trained (a) operators and (b) maintenance engineers with operational experience of container handling rough terrain there are in his Department; and how many are fit for active service. [92663]

Mr. Ingram: The Ministry of Defence has sufficient trained and fit operators and engineers to run the Container Handling Rough Terrain fleet.

Sea Cadet Corps

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the role and structure of the Sea Cadet Corps. [92967]

Dr. Moonie: The Sea Cadet movement is a national youth charity based on the customs and traditions of the Royal Navy. It provides young people from 10 to 18-years-old with life skills of teamwork, self-respect and social responsibility. It has a training programme ranging from seamanship and maritime skills to music, cookery and computing, and aims to provide teenagers with a serious, but fun, alternative to the youth leisure industry at the heart of the local community.

The Sea Cadet Corps has approximately 400 units. Each unit is a registered charity in its own right run by a management committee and supported by the Sea Cadet Association (SCA) which has branches around the country. The SCA is a fundraising charity which, along with the Ministry of Defence, provides essential resources for the corps. The MOD provides financial support for the running of the SCA HQ and a national training organisation.

Each Sea Cadet Unit becomes a member of the corps by act of affiliation with the SCA. It then becomes eligible for the umbrella support provided by MOD and the SCA, including management through six area offices.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) professional and (b) voluntary personnel there are in the Sea Cadet Corps. [92968]

Mr. Ingram: The professional personnel associated with the Sea Cadet Corps are the Royal Navy and Civil Service personnel employed nationally in support of the Corps, and employees of the Sea Cadet Association (SCA) which is the fund raising charity to which each Sea Cadet Unit is affiliated. There are 21 RN and Civil Service personnel and 204 full and part-time employees of the SCA.

The voluntary personnel associated with the Corps are the uniformed and civilian instructors that provide the training at the individual Sea Cadet Units. There are 3,247 uniformed instructors and 1,562 civilian instructors.

Sennybridge Range

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers from what regiments have been (a) killed and (b) injured at the Sennybridge Range in each year since 1990; what safety recommendations were made by the Special Investigation Branch and the Health and Safety Executive on each occasion; and what steps he has taken to ensure these were acted upon. [92783]

Dr. Moonie: The number of soldiers killed at the Sennybridge Range since 1990 and their regiments is as follows:

Regiment	Year	Number of deaths
Royal Regiment of Wales	1991	1
Cheshire Regiment	1992	1
Royal Green Jackets	1993	1
Queen's Gurkha Engineers	1995	1
Grenadier Guards	1998	1

A number of agencies may be involved in the investigation of range incidents resulting in death or injury including the Royal Military Police Special Investigation Branch (RMP SIB) and Land Accident Investigation Team (LAIT), who are responsible for liaising with the Health and Safety Executive (HSE) as required. Further work is required to identify the number of injuries and any resulting safety recommendations, and I will write to my hon. Friend on these points and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Although the RMP SIB would normally attend the scene of a range incident resulting in death or serious injury, they would only carry out an investigation if a criminal offence or negligence is suspected and, in the case of a death, if responsibility for the investigation was ceded by the civilian police. It is not, however, within the remit of RMP SIB to make recommendations about matters of range safety.

Service Chaplains

Sandra Gidley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the cost of the chaplaincy was in each of the three services in the last 12 months, broken down by (a) uniformed and (b) civilian chaplains. [92676]

Dr. Moonie: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Suez Medal

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the sub-committee chaired by General Lord Guthrie of Craigiebank to report regarding the issue of a Suez Canal Zone medal; and if he will make a statement. [93632]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 404W to the hon. Member for Mid-Dorset and North Poole (Mrs. Brooke).

Warships

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his (a) current and (b) expected warship orders are for the Royal Navy by 2015; and what their scheduled completion dates are. [92894]

Mr. Ingram: The United Kingdom has the largest programme of new warship building for decades.

Current warship orders are for:

Type 45

We have ordered six Type 45 Anti-Air Warfare Destroyers within a planned class size of up to 12. The ships are due to enter service between late 2007 and the middle of the next decade.

Landing Ships Dock (Auxiliary)

Four Landing Ship Dock (Auxiliaries) are under construction. The first vessel is expected in service in 2004, with the last entering service in late 2005.

Landing Platform Dock Replacement (LPDR)

Two LPDRs are on order. The first is planned to enter service by July of this year. The programme for the second is still under discussion with the contractor, but the current expectation is that she will enter service by the end of next year.

Hydrographic and Oceanographic Survey Vessels

The first Echo Class Survey Vessel is expected to be in service in May 2003. The second vessel is expected to be in service in December 2003.

Auxiliary Oilers

The two Auxiliary Oilers were accepted off contract in October 2002 and are due to enter service this spring.

Astute

A first buy of Astute submarines is currently on contract. The in service date is not now expected to be before late 2006, subject to confirmation by the contractor.

Offshore Patrol Vessels

MOD has contracted with Vosper Thornycroft to provide three Offshore Patrol Vessels. VT will own and support the vessels and lease them to MOD. They are due to become progressively available to the RN between February and December this year.

Detailed ordering plans for the period up to 2015 remain subject to review in the normal way. However, future planned orders include:

Future Aircraft Carrier

Two vessels are planned, with in service dates of 2012 and 2015. It is expected that a contract award will be made in spring 2004.

Astute

On current plans, we intend to place orders for further Astute Submarines which we expect to enter service from the next decade onwards.

Primary Casualty Receiving Ship

A contract is expected to be placed around the middle of the present decade and the vessel is expected to enter service in the latter part of the decade.

Future Surface Combatant (FSC)

Our present planning assumption is that the first of class will be in service around the middle of the next decade.

Military Afloat Reach and Sustainability (MARS)

We plan to introduce a MARS capability around the turn of the decade. The characteristics of the relevant platform*(s)* have yet to be determined.

A formal announcement of the placing of these orders will be made at the appropriate time.

CABINET OFFICE

Entertainment

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what his estimate is of the total spending of his Department on entertainment in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92365]

Mr. Alexander: Details of my Department's spend on entertainment in each year from 1997–98 to 2001–02 can be found below.

£000s

	Entertainment expenditure
1997–98	192
1998–99	170
1999–00	276
2000–01	277
2001–02	254

Information prior to 1997–98 is not held on the Department's accounting system and is therefore available only at disproportionate cost.

The estimated spend on entertainment in 2002–03 is £216,000.

External Consultancies

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92226]

Mr. Alexander: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given in another place to the noble Baroness Wilcox by Lord Macdonald on 27 November 2002, Official Report; column WA42.

Expenditure by the Cabinet Office on external consultants is estimated to be £9,493,000 for 2002–03. The figures for the Central Office of Information (COI), the Government Car and Despatch Agency (GCDA) and the only non-departmental public body sponsored by the Cabinet Office with such spend are as follows:

	COI	GCDA	Committee on standards in public life
1997–98	66,395	n/a	0
1998–99	30,972	n/a	0
1999–2000	17,468	33,997	0
2000–01	48,980	21,715	0
2001–02	52,170	53,385	35,056
2002–03[1]	18,886	58,000	7,400

[1] Estimated

The figures for earlier years, and those for GCDA for 1997–98 and 1998–99, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Government Policy (Online Access)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to extend the opportunities for members of the public to contribute to the development of government policy by online scrutiny and discussion of proposed initiatives. [93387]

Mr. Alexander: The Government have recently consulted on e-democracy which included issues concerning online scrutiny. A report on the consultation, entitled "In the Service of Democracy: Your Response", along with individual responses, has been posted on the Government's e-democracy website, www.edemocracy.gov.uk.

The majority of the responses are supportive of the Government's efforts to develop an e-democracy policy although many important and serious issues were raised that will require detailed analysis and consideration.

We are very grateful to all those who took time to consider the issues raised in the consultation document and we will, of course, keep the House informed as policy is developed on e-democracy.

Heritage Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; if he will list such assets; and if he will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92366]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has not sold any heritage assets and antique assets since May 1997.

Public Suggestions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to improve the analysis by Government Departments of suggestions from the general public. [93389]

Mr. Alexander: The Government are committed to making use of more diverse methods of involving the public and to engaging a broader range of people. The "Code of Practice on Written Consultation" provides guidance to Departments on written consultations with the public. To help policy-makers improve policy design through undertaking public involvement initiatives, the Cabinet Office has also published "Viewfinder: A Policy Maker's Guide to Public Involvement". Viewfinder is available on the Policy Hub Website www.policyhub.gov.uk. Viewfinder includes examples of good practice, features a wide range of involvement techniques (including e-consultation) and describes how effectively to plan public involvement activities, including analysis and evaluation. It informs policy-makers how to ensure that involvement includes different groups and individuals within society. It also addresses issues such as how to manage high volumes of responses and how to weight responses from different groups.

The Office of Public Services Reform in the Cabinet Office has developed five principles of good customer feedback to guide Departments in consulting on public services.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

2012 Olympics

Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if she will place in the Library the results of the opinion survey undertaken by ICM on behalf of UK Sport on a London bid for the 2012 Olympics. [93376]

Mr. Caborn: I will arrange for a copy of the full results of the ICM survey of public opinion on a London 2012 Olympic Bid to be placed in the Library.

A summary of the results of the survey were published by my Department and presented to the Select Committee on Culture, Media and Sport on 15 January. The full results were published by ICM on their website at www.icmresearch.co.uk on 16 January.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what her estimate is of the total expenditure by her Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92466]

Dr. Howells: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon Friend the Minister of State for the Cabinet Office on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

DEFENCE

Air Traffic Contract

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether a risk assessment was made in the first assessment of the Nottingham Air Traffic (ATC) contract. [93693]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 28 January 2003]: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the Wattisham air traffic contract. A risk assessment was included during the bid evaluation process for the first competition of the Wattisham air traffic contract, and that process identified areas of concern in all bids. The resulting contract with VT Aerospace (contract CS 4D/2017) was, however, terminated by mutual consent and the competition was re-run between the other bidders, leading to a contract with Serco (contract CS 4D/2027).

Accommodation Blocks (Portland)

Jim Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been received by his Department in exchange for the sale of the Hardy accommodation blocks at Portland. [93617]

Dr. Moonie: The freehold of the Hardy accommodation blocks at Portland were owned in part by the Ministry of Defence and in part by the Crown Estate. The sale was on the basis of a shared receipt pro rata of those freehold areas. The Ministry of Defence received £300,000 for its part of the accommodation blocks site.

Blood/Plasma

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 20 January (ref. 91885), what the expected requirements for blood and plasma are. [93594]

Dr. Moonie: I am withholding the information requested in accordance with Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Challenger II

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the desertification of Challenger II tanks will be completed (a) before they are loaded for transport to the Gulf and (b) before they arrive in the Gulf; and if he will make a statement. [93937]

Mr. Ingram: The improvement in the performance of Challenger II tanks in desert conditions is achieved through the combined effect of a number of modifications. The first modification was completed prior to the tanks being loaded for transportation. The remaining modifications will be completed after they arrive in theatre.

Cluster Bombs

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if cluster bombs are part of the ordnance package on its way to the Gulf. [93938]

Mr. Ingram: I am withholding this information in accordance with Exemption la of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, which relates to defence.

Depleted Uranium Munitions

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) British forces and (b) United States forces deployed to the Gulf have depleted uranium munitions available as part of their armoury. [91974]

Mr. Ingram: I can confirm that British Forces deployed to the Gulf will have depleted uranium munitions available as part of the armoury. The deployment of depleted uranium munitions by US Forces, is a matter for the US Government.

Financial Dynamics

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence pursuant to his answer of 7 January 2003, Official Report, column 45W, on Financial Dynamics, when the two meetings which his Department's official attended with Financial Dynamics took place; and whether Financial Dynamics were authorised to represent his Department in liaising with the press. [92057]

Mr. Hoon: The two meetings took place on 10 and 12 December 2002. Financial Dynamics' role was to advise the Government on likely media perspectives of the market implications of the discussions between the Ministry of Defence and BAE Systems. The Ministry of Defence press office continued to represent the Department as usual in dealing with media inquiries on the issue, and continues to do so.

Graduates

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of (a) Naval, (b) Army and (c) RAF officers received in each year since 1990 were graduates. [93657]

Dr. Moonie: Details of the graduate intake to the Officer Corps in the Armed Forces in recent years are as follows:

	Naval Service			Army			RAF
	Officer Intake	Graduate Intake	%	Officer Intake	Graduate Intake	%	Officer Intake	Graduate Intake	%
1995–96	222	173	78	650	492	76	421	274	65
1996–97	374	290	78	616	493	80	471	284	60
1997–98	346	276	80	718	555	77	639	346	54
1998–99	376	283	75	635	480	76	694	340	49
1999–2000	367	275	75	598	461	77	776	370	48
2000–01	398	273	69	719	593	82	675	354	52
2001–02	386	268	69	727	559	77	767	336	44

Figures for all services are not available prior to 1995–96

Human Centrifuge

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress towards the procurement of a human centrifuge; and what discussions his Department has had with AMST of Austria on the matter. [93990]

Mr. Ingram: AMST is one of two companies currently in competition for the contract to provide a new human carrying High G Centrifuge for the RAF. An announcement on the award of this programme is planned for August 2003.

Military Forces Deployment

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what UK military forces are (a) deployed and (b) in the process of deployment in the Gulf and Middle East region, setting out how many personnel of which unit and service are (i) stationed and (ii) due to be stationed in each location in the region. [92340]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 21 January 2003]: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Premature Voluntary Release

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications there have been for Premature Voluntary Release from (a) 40, (b) 42 and (c) 45 Commando in each month of the past year. [93653]

Dr. Moonie: RM Commando PVR applications recorded during 2002:

	January to March	April to June	July to September	October to November
40 Commando	15	10	10	5
42 Commando	15	20	10	5
45 Commando	15	10	10	20

Notes:

1 The data for the final quarter of 2002 are not fully available, and do not therefore include December applications.

2 All figures are rounded to the nearest 5 to protect against individual identification, and data are presented quarterly due to small monthly numbers involved.

3 Data includes RM Officer and Other Ranks, but excludes small numbers of RN personnel assigned to the Commando units.

4 The data indicate the periods in which the PVR application was recorded, which may be slightly later than the date of submission, due to managerial or administrative delays.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92257]

Dr. Moonie: Details of Ministry of Defence expenditure on advertising and publicity are contained in the annual MOD Performance Reports. For 1995–96 the information is shown on page 32, Cm 3448; for 1996–97 the information is shown on page 49, Cm 3781; 1997–98 the information is shown on page 49, Cm 4170; for 1999–2000 the information is shown on page 60, Cm 5000; for 2000–01 the information is shown on page 68, Cm 5290 and for 2001–02 the information is shown on page 71, Cm 5661.

Copies of these reports are available in the House.

Figures for 1998–99 were not provided in the annual performance report and are as follows:

£ million

Category	Expenditure
Recruitment
Royal Navy/Royal Fleet Auxiliary	6.65
Army	11.77
Royal Air Force	10.17
Civilian	3.27
PR, Marketing and Business Support Services	0.84
Chief of Public Relations Expenditure	2.39
Sales Promotion	1.06
Scholarships	0.38
National Employers Liaison Committee (Territorial Army)	1.05

The expenditure for advertising and publicity is spread among many different budgets and budget holders. The Department thus does not have a central advertising and publicity budget and forecast information—in this case for financial year 2002–03—could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, as in past years, information on the outturn figure is collated and is expected to be included in the 2002–03 performance report, when that document is published.

The breakdown of expenditure on publicity and advertising by agencies and non-departmental public bodies sponsored by the Ministry of Defence is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Reserve Forces

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with employers of reservists currently on the reserve list; and how many reservists have been called up to date. [93869]

Dr. Moonie: As at 21 January 2003, 1,816 reservists had been sent call-out notices in support of Operation TELIC. Single Service Adjudication Officers have been in contact with reservists' employers to consider applications for revocation, exemption or deferral of employees' call-out and applications for financial assistance to cover the additional costs resulting from call-out as defined by the Reserve Forces Act 1996 (RFA 96).

In addition, the Ministry of Defence has been conducting a long-standing campaign designed to win and maintain the support of Britain's employers for the volunteer reserve forces, which was re-launched in September 2002 as the SaBRE (Supporting Britain's Reservists and Employers) campaign. Its purpose is to explain to employers not only the benefits of employing reservists, but also the attendant rights and obligations that employers have in respect of those of their employees who are also reservists.

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he will take to prevent breaches of the Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act 1985. [93870]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence has been conducting a long-standing campaign designed to win and maintain the support of Britain's employers for the volunteer reserve forces, which was re-launched in September 2002 as SaBRE (Supporting Britain's Reservists and Employers). Its purpose is to explain to employers not only the benefits of employing reservists, but also the attendant rights and obligations that employers have, including the requirement to reemploy reservists who have been called-out in accordance with the Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act 1985. In addition, when a reservist is called-out, a letter is sent to their employer reminding them of their obligations under the Act.

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he will take against companies in violation of the Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act 1985. [93871]

Dr. Moonie: Under the Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act 1985, an employer must take into his or her employment, under the same conditions of service as they were previously serving, those former employees who have been called-out as reservists who make a written application at the end of a period of called-out service. If this is not reasonable and practical, the reservist must be reinstated on the most favourable terms of service available.

Under the Act, where an employer fails to reinstate a reservist, the reservist may apply to a reinstatement committee. These committees, appointed by the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, have the power to compel an employer to reinstate an employee and/or order the employer to pay appropriate compensation. Failure to comply with an order of a reinstatement committee is a criminal offence and an employer may be fined on conviction.

The Act confers no powers on the Ministry of Defence to take measures against employers who fail to re-instate a reservist.

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what financial and legal support he will give to reservists sacked by companies in violation of the Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act 1985. [93872]

Dr. Moonie: The Reserve Forces (Safeguard of Employment) Act provides for reinstatement and/or compensation for reservists dismissed from their jobs whilst called out. Reservists who feel they have been unfairly dismissed by their employer may apply to a reinstatement committee to hear their case.

Any decision to seek legal advice is a matter for the individual, and the Ministry of Defence is not in a position to offer legal advice in individual cases. However, The Forces Law Network, an association of solicitors with experience of the needs of service personnel, can provide independent legal advice. Advice on how to apply for reinstatement, and what to do if any employer fails to honour his/her legal obligations, is available to reservists at both unit and regional level. In addition, the SaBRE (Supporting Britain's Reservists and Employers) campaign can answer general queries about the provisions of the Act.

Reservists' Pensions

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are in place for reservists to continue with company pensions when they are called up; and if he will make a statement. [93651]

Dr. Moonie: The Reserve Forces (Call-out and Recall) (Financial Assistance) Regulations 1997 (Statutory Instrument 1997 No 309) allows Reservists to continue payments into their civilian employers' pension scheme while they are called out. Under the regulations, the Ministry of Defence has powers to pay the employer's pension contribution, provided that the reservist continues to pay any employee's share required by the scheme. Pension scheme administrators must accept the MOD's payments for this purpose.

Service Personnel (Gulf)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his estimate is of the cost of the deployment of troops and tanks to the Gulf announced on 20 January. [93900]

Mr. Ingram: The information requested is not yet available. When it is, I will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from which units the personnel in BARTs and RESTs under operation FRESCO are drawn; how many of them are due to be deployed to the Gulf and from which units will personnel be drawn to replace them; and if he will make a statement. [93936]

Mr. Ingram: Breathing Apparatus Rescue Teams (BARTs) and Rescue Equipment Support Teams (RESTs) have been assembled by withdrawing individuals from almost every unit of the Royal Navy and Royal Air Force. Recognising the important contribution the teams have played during the national firefighters dispute, every effort is made to preserve the capability of BARTs and RESTs. Recently, six RAF and 124 Royal Navy personnel have been withdrawn from Operation FRESCO as a direct consequence of deployments to the Gulf. During the course of the industrial action, the Ministry of Defence has maintained a programme of replacing personnel who needed to be withdrawn for various reasons, including the Gulf deployment, in order to ensure that the overall fire and rescue capability remains broadly constant. As this is a rolling programme, there is no direct correlation between those personnel stood down from Operation FRESCO due to their deployment to the Gulf and those personnel (or their parent units) from across the Royal Air Force and Royal Navy being trained as replacements.

Services' Protective Clothing

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tests have been conducted to ensure the reliability of (a) gas masks and (b) protective suits worn by services personnel. [93566]

Mr. Ingram: Both the S10 respirators ('gas masks') and Nuclear, Biological and Chemical (NBC) suits ('protective suits') are manufactured to required specifications (including stringent quality assurance) to ensure that a high level of reliability is achieved. The respirators have routine inspections covering fit, damage, distortion, wear and component life and are subject to periodic tests (normally annually) in a gas environment to confirm their operational effectiveness. The NBC suits, which are vacuum-packed by the manufacturer prior to dispatch, are subject to exacting quality assurance control. The integrity of the packaging is checked prior to issue to personnel.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what the procedure is for repairing damaged protective suits used by service personnel to protect them from (a) chemical, (b) nuclear and (c) radiological attack. [93567]

Mr. Ingram: Due to the nature of the item, damaged nuclear, biological and chemical suits are replaced and not repaired.

Software Procurement

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to mandate companies tendering for the supply of future software systems for the Royal Navy to use Open Source Software for the engineered operating systems. [86480]

Mr. Ingram: While the Ministry of Defence is examining the benefits of using Open Source Software in some areas, it is not envisaged that its use will be mandated to Project teams. The appropriateness and benefits of Open Source Software for any given project will be assessed against a range of criteria, on a case by case basis.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the potential financial savings for the Royal Navy of the adoption of Open Source Software for the operating systems of its future software packages. [86481]

Dr. Moonie: Software used in the Ministry of Defence is selected on its ability to meet business and operational needs, taking full account of value for money, long-term viability, security and interoperability. The Ministry of Defence currently has no explicit policy on the use of Open Source Software, but does follow the Government Open Source Software policy published and announced in Parliament on 22 July 2002. This policy is available on the e-Envoy website (www.e-envoy.gov.uk) or the Office of Government Commerce website (www.ogc.gov.uk).

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the security implications of adopting commercial off-the-shelf instead of made-to-measure operating systems for future software systems for the Royal Navy. [86483]

Dr. Moonie: It is recognised that, increasingly, systems which include commercial off-the-shelf software will be offered to the Ministry of Defence by potential contractors for defence applications. This can be beneficial in reducing development times and costs, but can give concern as off-the-shelf software may be of uncertain origin and not stringently tested prior to release. Projects are therefore treated on a case by case basis. The security requirements of each system will be specified in the design documents. When a commercial off-the-shelf product (e.g. an operating system) is to be used with specified security features, it is required to undergo security evaluation.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Council Housing

8. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to receive the National Audit Office report on council stock transfers; and whether his review of council housing finances will be published before he has received the report. [93773]

Mr. McNulty: The timetable for the National Audit Office's report has yet to be finalised. However it is scheduled for consideration by the Public Accounts Committee of this House on 31 March. The NAO research has been helpful in the broader review of the vehicles available for the delivery of the decent homes target.

The statement by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on the Government's comprehensive long-term programme for sustainable communities, including housing, will be made shortly.

Firefighters Dispute

9. Hugh Robertson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on recent progress in resolving the industrial action by firefighters. [93774]

14. Mr. Barnes: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, if he will make a further statement on the firefighters' dispute. [93779]

Mr. Raynsford: My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister made a statement to the House on this issue yesterday.

10. John Barrett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many armed forces Breathing Apparatus Rescue Teams and Rescue Equipment Support Teams were on fire cover during the 24-hour strike by members of the Fire Brigades Union on Tuesday 21 January. [93775]

Mr. Raynsford: There were 331 Breathing Apparatus Rescue Teams and 59 Regional Equipment Support Teams providing emergency fire cover in the United Kingdom for the 24-hour strike on 21 January. This is the same number of teams as for the previous 10 days of strike action.

The number of red appliances in use by the military continues to increase. The armed forces are now able to deploy 177 red engines, 90 more than at the start of the last 8 day strike.

The military now also has a number of aerial water towers to provide additional cover in extreme situations.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many days were lost to industrial action by firefighters in each of the last 12 months. [92764]

Mr. Raynsford: In the year up to 23 January 2003, eleven days were lost to national industrial action by firefighters. Ten of these days were in November 2002, and one day from the 21–22 January 2003.

New Deal for Communities

11. Mr. Mahmood: : To ask the Deputy Prime Minister, if he will make a statement on the progress of the New Deal for Communities. [93776]

Mrs. Roche: Our New Deal for Communities Partnerships have a wide range of projects underway and are developing agreements with those who provide public services to make them more accountable to local people. Many partnerships can now point to important successes in reducing crime, improving the quality of the local environment and engaging with local people. Some of our partnerships do face challenging circumstances, but all are striving for success.

Key Workers

12. Jonathan Shaw: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what steps he is taking to increase the number of houses and flats available to key workers. [93777]

Mr. McNulty: Under the Starter Home Initiative, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister aims to help 10,000 key workers to buy homes in areas where the high cost of housing is undermining recruitment and retention. In addition, the Housing Corporation's Challenge Fund in 2003/04 will provide some 2,800 new homes for rent or home ownership for key workers in the South East of England.

Next week's announcement by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will outline our future approach to key workers housing.

Local Government Finance

13. Dr. Pugh To ask the Deputy Prime Minister in which year the ceilings and floors arrangements in the local government settlement 2003–04 will finish. [93778]

Mr. Leslie: We expect floors and ceilings to be part of the system for the foreseeable future.

Capita Group

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list the contracts that have been awarded to the Capita Group by his Department. [89972]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has awarded the following contracts to the Capita Group:

(1) Housing Employment Mobility Services

(2) Neighbourhood Renewal—recruitment of advisors

(3) Staff recruitment. A former DTLR call off contract for the external recruitment of staff below the senior civil service.

The Capita Group are also working on the Local Government on-line website development and implementation. This contract was awarded to the Cathedral Consortium, who then sub contracted this work to Capita Group.

Departmental Expenditure (Newsprint)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the total expenditure of his Department was on newspapers, magazines and periodicals in 2002. [90541]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister was established as a separate department on 29 May 2002. From its formation until 31 December 2002, Office of the Deputy Prime Minister expenditure on newspapers, magazines and periodicals is estimated at £144,000, (including Government Offices). This figure is rounded to the nearest £1,000.

East Riding of Yorkshire Council

David Davis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures he will take to ensure the East Riding of Yorkshire Council receives enough funding to guarantee the provision of nursery school places from April 2004. [93837]

Mr. Raynsford: In anticipation of the duty to secure universal provision for three-year-olds from April 2004, the new education formula, announced in the provisional local government settlement, allocated funding through Formula Sending Shares based on the greater of the number of pupils in the latest applicable (January 2002) count and 85 per cent. of the resident three year old population.

Ministerial Meetings

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what meetings (a) he, (b) other Ministers and (c) officials of his Department have held with (i) Sir Jeremy Beecham, (ii) other Local Government Association Executive members and (iii) representatives of the Fire Authority employers since 1 December 2002; on what dates the meetings were held; and what was discussed in each case. [91632]

Mr. Raynsford: Ministers and senior officials meet with Sir Jeremy Beecham and other members of the Local Government Association Executive on a regular basis to discuss many issues. The last meeting took place at the Central-Local Partnership on 22 January.

Ministers and senior officials have also met representatives of the Fire Authority employers since 1 December 2002. Subjects discussed have included the proposals contained in the final report of Sir George Bain's Independent Review of the Fire Service, and how the Government intends to take them forward.

Planning Appeals

Helen Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what advice he plans to issue to (a) regional planning bodies, (b) local authorities and (c) the planning inspectorate on the implementation of PPG3, following the decision in Rowlinson v Warrington Borough Council. [92352]

Mr. McNulty: Planning Policy Guidance Note 3, 'Housing', introduced a series of tough new measures designed to meet the country's future housing needs in the most sustainable way possible, including a sequential approach which gives priority to re-using brownfield sites in urban areas in preference to developing greenfield sites. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is not convinced that it is necessary to issue further advice in the light of the decision in Rowlinson v. Warrington Borough Council, which was determined on the facts of the case.

Helen Jones: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the impact on the Government's regeneration policies of the decision in the case of Rowlinson v Warrington borough council. [92351]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to make such an assessment. The judgment in Rowlinson v. Warrington borough council was made on the facts of that specific case, and the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is not convinced that they are of wider or general application.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he received the planning application for Thameslink 2000; what associated applications have been submitted, and on what dates; what progress has been made in relation to the (a) planning and (b) associated applications; when he expects to make a decision; and if he will make a statement. [93073]

Mr. Leslie: Railtrack have, at various stages, made 47 separate applications in regard to the Thameslink 2000 project, many of which replaced or varied earlier ones. They first applied in November 1997 for an Order under the Transport and Works Act (TWA) and for planning permission, together with applications for listed building consent (LBC) and conservation area consent (CAC). These proposals were modified by further applications in 1998 and 1999 for LBC and CAC and, in September 1999, for an amending TWA Order and related planning permission. In October 2000, while the public inquiry was underway, Railtrack submitted a further tranche of amending planning and LBC applications. The position concerning the applications is therefore a complex one which has involved many changes.

The inspector who held the public inquiry provided a report in January 2002, followed by supplementary reports in May and June 2002. These were published in July 2002. In summary, he concluded that whilst the scheme would bring very substantial transportation, regeneration and economic benefits, there were three key deficiencies in the scheme—at London Bridge and Blackfriars stations and in the Borough High Street area—which required resolution before a decision could appropriately be made on the scheme as a whole. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has since been giving careful consideration to the inspector's conclusions and to the many representations which have been received since the inquiry closed. These include a letter of 31 October 2002 from the Strategic Rail Authority who proposed that the scheme be split into two phases and asked for approval to be granted subject to conditions to deal with the outstanding issues identified by the inspector.

We are today informing Railtrack that a decision on the scheme is to be deferred pending the submission and consideration of fresh applications aimed at addressing the deficiencies identified by the inspector, an amended Environmental Statement and a proper examination of the SRA's proposal to split the project into two phases. This will require a re-opening of the earlier inquiry.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

PFI (Schools)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will make a statement on the findings of the Audit Commission report, "PFI in Schools". [92769]

Mr. Miliband: The Audit Commission's report found that whilst teaching staff and pupils were generally pleased with their new schools, there had been some difficulties in the procurement process and some design aspects were less than ideal. However, the report focused only on a small number of very early PFI pathfinder schools. Since those early days, as the report itself made clear, we have continuously refined and improved the schools PFI process in the light of experience. Over 500 schools are now covered by PFI deals, representing over £1.3 billion of private sector investment. Another 400 PFI schools are in procurement or provisionally approved. This is a major programme by any standards and many schools are now receiving substantial investments to help provide high quality accommodation, raise educational standards and transform working conditions for pupils and staff.

Mr. Flight: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what assessment he has made of the merits of funding the building of schools through the Private Finance Initiative. [92771]

Mr. Miliband: The Private Finance Initiative (PFI) has significant merits. For example, it allows for risk sharing with the private sector. The public sector does not pay anything until construction work on the school building is complete and the school is receiving the contracted service. New schools are generally completed on time and are then maintained to a high standard over the whole life of the contract. This prevents the deterioration of the schools estate which has been so common in the past. Also, teaching professionals can focus on teaching without the distractions of facilities management and poor accommodation.

Using the PFI to fund the building of schools has so far meant that an extra £1.3 billion has been invested to provide better conditions for pupils and teachers in over 500 schools. Transforming school accommodation is helping us to raise educational standards.

As far as individual PFI projects are concerned, each one is assessed at the outset to ensure it will provide best value over the whole life of the contract. Further checks are made at various points during the procurement process to ensure that value for money for the public sector is delivered. Once the project is operational and transactions appear in the local authority's accounts, the authority's auditors will give an opinion on whether these have been compiled in accordance with the relevant accounting standards.

Annual Report

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much producing his Department's latest Annual Report cost; how many copies were printed; how many copies of it were sold at its cover price; to whom copies of the report have been provided free of charge; and how many copies were provided free of charge. [90880]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Department pays for the design and typesetting of its departmental Annual Report. The costs of printing are met by the publisher, The Stationery Office (TSO). The Department buys in copies from the TSO at a discount to distribute to Ministers, Ofsted, the Education and Skills Select Committee, DfES and House of Commons Libraries, senior managers and some of our partners and stakeholders.

At the time of this answer, 1,166 copies have been sold, including 750 purchased by the Department.

The cost to the Department of typesetting and design was £42,346 and buying in copies from TSO cost £16,773. The total cost to the Department was therefore £59,119.

Class Sizes

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the class sizes of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Haltemprice and Howden for the current academic year. [92852]

Mr. Miliband: In January 2002, the average class size (taught by one teacher) in primary and secondary schools in Haltemprice and Howden parliamentary constituency was 27.2 pupils and 22 pupils respectively. This compares with the average class size (taught by one teacher) in primary and secondary schools in England of 26.3 pupils and 21.9 pupils respectively.

Class Sizes (Kirklees)

Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the class sizes of (a) primary and (b) secondary schools in Kirklees in each of the last five years. [93788]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is shown in the table.

Maintained primary and secondary schools[1], average class size[2], Kirklees local education authority

Position in January each year	Primary	Secondary
1998	29.3	22.3
1999	28.5	22.8
2000	27.6	23.0
2001	26.8	22.6
2002	27.0	22.9

GCSE Results

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list the secondary modern schools that achieved better results at GCSE than the average for all-ability comprehensive schools in 2001. [88938]

Mr. Miliband: The secondary modern schools which achieved better results at GCSE than the average of 47 per cent. for all-ability comprehensive schools in England in 2001 are as listed:

School	Town	County	Percentage of 15-year-olds achieving 5 or more GCSE grades A- C or GNVQ equivalent*

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92447]

Mr. Miliband: We are unable to provide the quarterly figures for the number of press releases dating back to 1995 without incurring disproportionate costs.

The total number of press releases issued each year between 1995 and 2002 is set out in the table.

	Total number of press releases
1995	472
1996	443
1997	447
1998	598
1999	605
2000	538
2001[1]	395
2002[1]	210

[1] Employment issues were transferred to the Department for Work and Pensions in 2001 as part of the machinery of Government changes. This saw a reduction in the number of press releases issued.

Press releases dating from 1998 can be accessed via the Department's website, www.dfes.gov.uk/pns/newsiist. Press releases prior to 998 can be accessed via the Government News Network (GNN) website www.nds.coi.gov.uk.

School Playing Fields

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his policy is on the disposal of a school playing field site for development, where the school has ceased to exist as a result of merger with an adjoining school. [93947]

Mr. Miliband: A local authority, governing body or foundation body must obtain the Secretary of State's consent before disposing of any playing field that has been used for the purposes of a maintained school within the preceding 10 years. This applies to both continuing and closed schools.

Applications to dispose of school playing fields are assessed against three main criteria. These are:

(i) schools' needs: that playing field provision and curriculum requirements at the school making the disposal, and at other schools in the local area, will be met;

(ii) community needs: that community use of school playing fields is taken into account, with alternative facilities made available if necessary; and

(iii) finance: that any sale proceeds are re-invested to provide new or improved sports facilities at schools, or are used otherwise to help raise standards by providing better educational facilities.

The criteria are set out in the Department's Guidance 0580/2001: The Protection of School Playing Fields and Land for City Academies. The criteria enable the Secretary of State to take into account the team game playing field provision at other local schools. This is to ensure that where there are surplus fields at one school, other local schools are given the opportunity to use those surplus fields. The School Playing Fields Advisory Panel provides advice on the extent to which applications meet the published criteria. The Secretary of State has no influence over what happens to a school playing field once consent has been given to its disposal. Any future development is a matter for the local planning authorities.

Selective Secondary Schools (Torbay)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills (1) how many and what percentage of Torbay Unitary Authority primary school pupils have gained selective secondary school places in the last three years for which figures are available; [92932]

(2) how many selective place secondary school pupils from outside the Torbay Unitary Authority attended (a) Churston, (b) Torquay Boys' and (c) Torquay Girls' Grammar Schools in each of the last three years; what percentage of the school roll this represented; and how many pupils and what percentage of the selective stream entry came from outside the Torbay Unitary Authority attending Westlands School in each of the last three years. [92933]

Mr. Miliband: The information requested is not held centrally.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Sulphur Dioxide Emissions

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list UK sulphur dioxide emissions in each year since 1997. [94292]

Alun Michael: The following table shows estimated UK emissions of sulphur dioxide (SO_2) from 1997 to 2000 (the latest year for which data are available). Data since 1970 on UK emissions of air pollutants, including sulphur dioxide, are published annually in the National Atmospheric Emissions Inventory (NAEI), which can be found at the NAEI website, http://www.naei.org.uk.

Year	SO_2 emission (thousands of tonnes)
1997	1,665
1998	1,588
1999	1,210
2000	1,165

"Living Places: Powers, Rights and Responsibilities"

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what arrangements her Department has made to consult (a) town, (b) parish and (c) community councils about the proposals contained in the document "Living Places—Powers, Rights and Responsibilities". [92654]

Margaret Beckett: The consultation paper Living Places—Powers, Rights, and Responsibilities was sent to 370 local authorities, 97 police authorities and constabularies, 17 Government Departments, 23 Government related agencies, 114 public bodies and non-government organisations and 168 companies.

The launch of the consultation at the Urban Summit received wide-spread high profile press coverage in all the major daily publications. 1,400 copies were given out at the summit and the consultation document has also been available since its launch free of charge from DEFRA publications and through the DEFRA website.

Agriculture and Fisheries Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs pursuant to her answer of 7 January 2003, Official Report, columns 81–84W, concerning the Agriculture and Fisheries Council on 16 to 19 December 2002, what the Government's stance was on each of the 11 key features of the Council's conclusions, embodied in the three new regulations on the common fisheries policy. [91774]

Mr. Morley: We exerted strong pressure to secure the ending of subsidies for building new vessels at the earliest opportunity; retention of the coastal limits for a further period with a clear indication of expectation that they would continue beyond that; continuation of Hague Preference; and Regional Advisory Councils. On the rest of the key features we, with like-minded member states, generally gave steady support without which the points might not have been secured.

Bioterrorism

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has held with the Home Office about strategies for safe handling of domestic pets in the event of bio-terrorist attacks. [92523]

Mr. Morley: Discussions are being held with the Home Office and other Government Departments on a number of different aspects, including those relating to animals.

Birds

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) farm birds and (b) wild birds have been spotted on (i) special projects and (ii) non-special projects land in each region in each of the last 10 years. [93744]

Mr. Morley: There is no routine year-on-year monitoring of birds on Countryside Stewardship special projects. However, there are some data available regarding those special projects that are specifically targeted at particular bird species. For example a report published by RSPB in 2001 showed cirl buntings had increased by 83 per cent. on land under Countryside Stewardship scheme agreements, compared with an increase of only 2 per cent. on non-agreement land.

At present, only provisional results for regional bird data are available. Indicators have been developed based on on-going research by RSPB/BTO on behalf of DEFRA. These provisional estimates show that between 1970 and 1999 the Woodland species population index increased in the North East, North West, Yorkshire and the number, East Midlands and the West Midlands. The woodland species population index declined in the East, South East and South West regions. For the five regions where estimates are available, the Farmland species population indices decreased over the period. More detailed information is available on the Government's sustainable development website http://www.sustainable-development.aov.uk/indicators/reaional/2001/h13.htm

Cattle Passports

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many cases of non-compliance with the cattle passport rules are being investigated. [93726]

Alun Michael: There are currently seven cases of breach of the Cattle Identification rules being pursued by Defra's investigators as a result of referrals by the British Cattle Movement Service. A further 27 cases are being considered for referral by BCMS. Local authorities also investigate cases independently of Central Government Agencies.

Civil Servants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many civil servants have been employed by (a) her Department and (b) each of its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if she will make a statement. [92388]

Alun Michael: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 333–34W.

Civil Servants (Psychometric Testing)

Mr. Flook: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many civil servants have (a) been tested and (b) will be tested using psychometric testing. [92592]

Alun Michael: (a) This information is not held centrally by the Department, (b) The inclusion of psychometric testing is being considered as part of the senior managers' development Programme, which will cover approximately 560 people. We are awaiting advice from the consultants recently appointed to design and deliver the programme on the role of psychometric testing within it.

Flooding (Insurance)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the number of homes in England and Wales that are uninsurable against the risk of flooding. [89626]

Margaret Beckett: No such estimate has been made. Some properties have always been uninsurable against flooding.

Compost

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether mechanically separated municipal solid waste organic matter used as a compost feedstock will be treated in the same way as source-separated feedstocks under the amendment to the Animal By-products Order. [93275]

Mr. Meacher: Waste that has, or may have, come into contact with meat or meat products will be classified as catering waste and will need to be treated as catering waste, in line with the requirements of the Animal By-products Order. As it may be difficult to demonstrate that household waste collected unsorted and then mechanically separated has never been in contact with meat or meat products, this is that it has been kept apart from meat and meat products may be more straightforward, if that cannot be done, then source separated waste must also be treated as catering waste.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will publish the standards required for compost derived from mechanical separation of municipal solid waste organic matter for use on land. [93276]

Mr. Meacher: There are no statutory standards for compost, although by virtue of Best Value Indicator BV82b, compost counts towards local authority statutory targets for recycling and composting. The Waste and Resources Action Programme (WRAP), in close co-operation with the Composting Association, has developed a BSI Publicly Available Specification (PAS) for compost. The delivery of this PAS for compost should help to create markets for organic waste derived products by creating confidence in the product. Achieving the PAS will depend on, for example, the suitability of the feedstock and the composting process used. We expect the EU Commission to issue a proposal for a Bio-waste Directive later this year; this should contain harmonized EU standards for composting.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the running costs of (a) the Department and (b) each of its sponsored agencies were in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90713]

Alun Michael: Detailed information on administration costs for Defra and its agencies, going back to 1998–99 and with projections to 2003–04, is set out in Table 5.5 of the 2002 Departmental Report (Cm 5422). Data for years before 1998–99 are not available on the same basis. Provisional outturn for gross and net administration cost limits were published in Public Expenditure 2001–2002 Provisional Outturn (Cm 5574), Tables 4 and 5. Updated information, with plans to 2005–06, will be published in the 2003 Departmental Report in the spring.

Equine Passports

Mr. David Cameron: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimates she has made of the costs of administrating equine passports. [93363]

(2) what steps her Department is intending to take to minimise the costs to horseowners of introducing equine passports. [93366]

Alun Michael: At present there are 56 organisations approved in the UK to issue horse passports. The administration costs to them will vary according to their own requirements and the number of passports they each issue. We have not therefore made any estimate of the costs of administering horse passports.

Current costs to horseowners of buying horse passports is expected to decreasedue to economies of scale which will occur when every horse is required to have a passport.

Flooding

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs which (a) agencies and (b) authorities are responsible for (i) flood prevention, (ii) flood management and (iii) remedial action in respect of the village of Pitton in Wiltshire; what their functions are; and if she will make a statement. [92758]

Mr. Morley: The Department of Environment, Food and Rural Affairs has policy responsibility for flood defence in England while operational responsibility for delivering the service falls to the 'operating authorities': the Environment Agency, local authorities and Internal Drainage Boards. The Environment Agency has a general supervisory duty over all matters relating to flood defence and they are also responsible for flood forecasting and flood warning arrangements. In respect of Pitton, Salisbury district council and Wiltshire county council have responsibilities as flood defence and highways authorities respectively.

I understand that flooding in Pitton is due to a combination of high groundwater and springflows. The Agency has exercised its supervisory power by producing reports into the flooding that occurred in 1995 and 2000. Following the 1995 report, Salisbury district council undertook some works with Defra grant aid. I understand that all the authorities have signed up to an action plan following the 2000 report.

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the total estimated financial cost of flood damage in Nottinghamshire was for 2002–03 [92856]

Mr Morley: The Environment Agency does not hold data for total financial cost of flood damage for all flooding events in all locations.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much money has been lost by her Department and its agencies and non-departmental public bodies through (a) fraud and (b) theft for each year since 1996–97. [92461]

Alun Michael: The Department has only been in existence since June 2001. Information covering earlier periods is therefore not available, and could be constructed retrospectively only at disproportionate cost. Annual reports, which the Treasury prepares on fraud, covering returns from both the former MAFF and DETR, are deposited in the House of Commons Library.

However, annual returns of fraud submitted by DEFRA, including its Agencies to HMT covering the financial years 2001/2002 show the total cost of theft and fraud to the department to be as follows:

	Fraud (£)	Theft (£)
Core-DEFRA	61,066	38,678
Agencies	—	226,111
Non-departmental bodies	N/a	N/a

Horticulture Research International

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much the mailshot on the Horticulture Research International, dated 20 January 2003, cost broken down into (a) postage, (b) publication and (c) envelopes. [93018]

Mr Morley: The Government announced its response to the Quinquennial Review of Horticulture Research International to Parliament on 20 January 2003. A copy of the statement has been made available on DEFRA's website: www.defra.gov.uk. reference: News Release 24/03 of 20 January. The Department has also written to more than 150 individuals or organisations who made representations about the Review to alert them to the statement. The cost of this exercise has not been identified separately but is estimated to be less than £50.

In-farm Slaughter

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) what discussions she has had with the Food Standards Agency about in-farm slaughter; [93873]

(2) what plans she has to devise a procedure which would allow in-farm slaughterers to continue to operate within the law; [93875]

(3) what her policy is on in-farm slaughter. [93874]

Mr. Morley: There have been no recent discussions with the Food Standards Agency regarding on-farm slaughter. The on-farm slaughter of animals is permitted under the 'Welfare of Animals (Slaughter or Killing) Regulations 1995'. The hygiene regulations covering the on-farm slaughter of animals are a matter for the Food Standards Agency.

Landfill

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs (1) how many hazardous waste landfill sites operate in the United Kingdom; how many of these are in-house sites; and if she will make a statement; [89753]

(2) how many landfill sites have submitted applications to deal with hazardous waste after July 2004; how many of these are in-house sites; and if she will make a statement. [89754]

Margaret Beckett: The information that is available on landfill sites relates to England and Wales and comes from a conditioning plan exercise conducted by the Environment Agency. The figures requested are set out in the table, broken down by region:

Region	Hazardous (post 2002)	Of which in-house[1]	Hazardous (post 2004)	Of which in-house[1]
Anglian	47	8	9	7
Midlands	42	4	4	2
North East	39	10	11	6
North West	27	6	8	5
South West	16	1	2	1
Southern	13	0	1	0
Thames	19	1	0	0
Wales	15	6	3	3
Total	218	36	38	24

[1] In-house is defined as those landfill sites owned and operated by a company for disposal of its own waste.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90604]

Alun Michael: There would be no impact to the cost of salaries to core Defra employees by increasing the national minimum wage by the amounts quoted, either nationally or across the Department in total. The minimum salary for a Defra employee is already above the rates quoted. This is a national salary payable to Defra employees across the United Kingdom.

Special Projects

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much has been spent on special project schemes in each region in each of the last 10 years. [93743]

Alun Michael: The amount of Government funding for Countryside Stewardship Special Projects[1], in each Government Office region over the last 10 years has been as follows:

Government funding per year (£1,000s)

Region	1993	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002	Total

[1] These figures include two types of Countryside Stewardship special projects: projects for land management (e.g. overwintered stubbles for cirl buntings) where the payment is made annually for 10 years and capital works projects (e.g. restoration of traditional buildings) where the payment is made in one year only.

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to rationalise the special projects scheme; and if she will make a statement about her plans for its future. [93745]

Alun Michael: We are carrying out a wide-ranging review of English agri-environment schemes, including the Countryside Stewardship scheme, under which special projects are available.

The review has now reached the second consultation stage, within which views have been invited regarding the Agri-environment Framework document. This document contains a proposal that a higher tier scheme should:

> "...include provision for special projects, focussing particularly on encouraging group applications aimed at tackling localised environmental problems requiring collective or co-ordinated management, especially where this falls outside the standard menu of options".

Responses to this consultation should be received by 28 February 2003.

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many statutory instruments were issued by MAFF in each calendar year from 1979 to 2001; and how many have been issued by her Department since June 2001. [89837]

Alun Michael: The number of Statutory Instruments issued by MAFF in each calendar year from 1979 June 2001 is as follows:

	Number
1979	95
1980	128
1981	110
1982	119
1983	108
1984	82
1985	88
1986	102
1987	127
1988	96
1989	135
1990	158
1991	111
1992	145
1993	150
1994	115
1995	138
1996	162
1997	139
1998	130
1999	116
2000	127
2001[1]	—

[1] To 7 June 297 (of which 259 related specifically to the Foot and Mouth Disease outbreak)

Defra was created on 8 June 2001. The number of statutory instruments laid by Defra in 2001 was 219 of which 159 related specifically to the Foot and Mouth disease outbreak, and seven were on topics previously the responsibility of DETR.

The figure in 2002 was 127 of which 29 were on topics previously the responsibility of DETR and 6 related to the aftermath of the Foot and Mouth Disease.

Teleworking

Mr. Miller: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what estimate she has made of the effects on the environment of the level of teleworking (a) now and (b) over the next five years. [91541]

Mr. Meacher: Any measure which reduces the need to travel and leads to reductions in emissions of local air pollutants and greenhouse gases would generally have a positive effect on the environment, but no quantification has been undertaken to measure this.

Thames (Dredging)

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when the Environment Agency or other Government body last dredged the Thames in the Marlow and Medmenham area. [93210]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 27 January 2003]: The Environment Agency last dredged the River Thames in the Marlow and Medmenham area in 1995.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chechnya

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government has made to the Russian Government about renewal of the OSCE's mandate in Chechnya; and if he will make a statement. [93135]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 28 January 2003]: I discussed the issue with the Russian Foreign Minister on 27 December 2002, and sought an extension to the OSCE Assistance Group's existing mandate to allow further negotiations about the future of the mission's presence in Chechnya.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by Her Majesty's Government to ensure that human rights monitors from the OSCE remain in Chechnya, and if he will make a statement. [93136]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 28 January 2003]: With our EU and international partners, we have repeatedly pressed the Russian Government to agree a new mandate for the OSCE Assistance Group in Chechnya, which includes the monitoring of the human rights and humanitarian situation as one of its key responsibilities.

Health and Safety Strategy

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has collated on the application to his Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the Revitalising Health and Safety strategy statement; and if he will make a statement. [89495]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office will be issuing a revised health and safety policy statement which outlines the responsibilities of all staff. This also gives clear guidance on how to access the arrangements to ensure the health and safety of staff, visitors and contractors and provides contact details of the health and safety advisers employed by the FCO. Staff are involved in health and safety issues through health and safety liaison officers and consultation with the Trade Unions.

The FCO's health and safety experts report quarterly to the Administration Board, chaired by the FCO's health and safety champion, on the incorporation of health and safety awareness in the Department's work. All new staff in London receive health and safety induction training. The health and safety team regularly review the training provision to ensure its suitability.

Iraq

Mr. Ancram: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with EU partners in advance of the General Affairs and External Relations Council on 27 and 28 January on the subject of Iraq, with particular reference to the formulation of a common position; and if he will make a statement. [93625]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 28 January 2003]: I have had frequent discussions with my EU counterparts and other Foreign Minister colleagues on Iraq in the run-up and in the margins of the General Affairs and External Relations Council on 27–28 January; I shall continue these contacts.

EU Foreign Ministers were united on Iraq at the General Affairs and External Relations Council on 27 January. We reaffirmed our view that UN Security Council resolution 1441 represents a final opportunity for Iraq to resolve the crisis peacefully. We urged Iraq to engage in full and active co-operation with the weapons inspectors and provide them, without delay, with all additional and complete information on questions raised by the international community. The question of an EU Common Position did not arise.

The full conclusions of the Council on Iraq are as follows:

> "The Council, deeply concerned about the situation in Iraq, reaffirms that its goal remains the effective and complete disarmament of Iraq's weapons of mass destruction. The Council fully supports the efforts of the UN to ensure full and immediate compliance by Iraq with all relevant resolutions of the Security Council, in particular with UNSCR 1441 of 8 November 2002. The resolution gives an unambiguous message that the Iraqi government has a final opportunity to resolve the crisis peacefully.
> The Council therefore urges the Iraqi authorities to engage in full and active co-operation with UNMOVIC and IAEA. The Iraqi authorities must, as an imperative, provide the inspectors, without delay, with all additional and complete information on questions raised by the international community. The Council expresses its appreciation for the work accomplished by the inspectors so far and reiterates its confidence and full support for Dr. Blix and Dr. El Baradei to complete their mission in accordance with UNSCR 1441. It welcomes their intention to continue and intensify their operations.
> The Council recalls that it stands ready to engage all necessary efforts to answer the needs of UNMOVIC and IAEA in personnel and practical means.
> The Council underlines the fundamental importance of preventing the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction in accordance with the relevant international instruments. The Security Council has a key role to play in these endeavours.
> The Council reaffirms the role of the UNSC in the implementation of UNSCR 1441. The responsibility of the UNSC in maintaining international peace and security must be respected."

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what powers member states of the United Nations Security Council have to offer political immunity to Saddam Hussein in inviting him to go into exile. [93894]

Mr. Rammell: The powers of the Security Council are set out in the Charter of the United Nations, Chapter VII of which provides that the Council shall decide what measures are to be taken to maintain or restore international peace and security.

Nuclear Weapons

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set out the direct and indirect trade, barter or other form of exchange that has taken place since 1973 between the United States and the United Kingdom on nuclear weapons, nuclear weapons components or nuclear weapons materials under the provisions of the 1959 amendment to the 1958 US-UK Agreement on Mutual Defence on Atomic Energy Matters. [92307]

Mr. Hoon: I have been asked to reply.

Exchanges of information between the United Kingdom and the United States on nuclear weapon matters take place only under the auspices of the 1958 Mutual Defence Agreement, and its amendments.

There have been no transfers of nuclear weapons between the UK and the US. The UK is a member and a Depositary state for the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons (1968) and our actions, including under the Mutual Defence Agreement, are in compliance with that treaty. I am withholding other details under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Pakistan

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many people applied from Islamabad for (a) visitor visas and (b) permanent settlement in the UK in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [93427]

Mr. Rammell: The number of settlement and non-settlement applications received in Islamabad since 1997 is given below:

	Settlement	Non-settlement
1997	9,183	23,828
1998	10,837	38,250
1999	10,279	40,537
2000	9,956	54,390
2001[1]	2,595	13,256
April 2001 to March 2002	10,271	65,149
April 2002 to December 2002	2,005	37,774

[1] These figures are for the period January to March 2001. During 2000 UK visas changed to collecting annual statistics over a financial year period.

HEALTH

General Practioners (Training)

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many places are available for the training of GPs in England and Wales; and what percentage of trainee places have been filled. [84492]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 2 December 2002]: Information on the places available for the training of general practitioners in England are collected by the Directors of Postgraduate General Practice Education. The information is shown in the table and indicates an increase of 14.9 per cent., since 1999.

Year	Number available to provide GP training
1999	2,111
2000	2,235
2001	2,264
2002	2,425

From the latest figures it is estimated that 90 per cent. of trainee places were filled.

Information in respect of Scotland and Wales is the responsibility of the devolved administrations, whilst the institutions in Northern Ireland are dissolved, responsibility rests with Ministers in the Northern Ireland Office.

NHS IT Projects

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list IT projects with a total contract value of more than £5 million which are being undertaken by the NHS. [86038]

Ms Blears: The Department of Health, only approves National Health Service Information Management and Technology business cases that exceed £20 million whole life cost. This category currently consists of one case, the Swindon and Marlborough NHS Trust electronic patient record scheme (whole life cost £25.3 million). The remaining cases are dealt with at various intermediate levels in the NHS; previously by regional offices and now strategic health authorities. We do not maintain a central list of cases approved in the NHS.

Acute and Primary Care Trusts

Hugh Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will state for each NHS acute trust and each NHS primary care trust for the latest year for which figures are available (a) the national reference cost index (Market Forces Factor adjusted), (b) the increase or decrease in funding which the trust would require if its costs were the national average and (c) the trust's surplus or deficit that year. [93081]

Mr. Hutton: The information is available in the Library in the Reference Cost Index 2002.

It is not possible to identify the potential increase or decrease that each trust would require if costs were moved to the national average at this point. Approximately 11 per cent. of services are still excluded from reference costs and national average costs do not yet exist for these services. This does not allow a full analysis and assessment of the overall impact on an individual organisation's income flows.

Information on National Health Service trusts' surplus and deficits have been placed in the Library.

Asthma

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year since 1997, broken down by ethnicity, the percentage of children suffering from asthma. [91987]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of hospital episodes by age where the primary diagnosis is asthma. The International Classification of Disease 10 codes J45-J46 has been used. The data is for 1997–98 to 2001–02.

Information on the number of hospital episodes where the primary diagnosis is asthma is collected by age. This is shown in the table for the years 1997–98 to 2001–2002.

Ordinary admissions and day cases combined: completed episode primary diagnosis 493 (ICD9 code) diagnosis asthma J45-J46 (ICD10)

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent guidelines he has issued to general practitioners on accepting asylum seekers; and what assessment he has made of the effect on existing patients. [92843]

Ms Blears: The most recently published guidance is Health Service Circular 1999/018. This explains that refugees or persons applying for asylum in the United Kingdom are regarded as ordinarily resident. They are therefore eligible to register with a general practitioner or personal medical services pilot provider for national health service primary care services.

Primary care trusts are responsible for securing all health services for their populations. In doing this they will continually assess whether or not the current configuration of primary care services matches the need of the current population. This will include assessing the local impact of asylum seekers.

Bio-terrorism

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures are in place to prevent contamination in the event of a terrorist attack using biological agents. [88386]

Mr. Hutton: Emergency service personnel will play a central role in dealing with any possible contamination, in the event of a potential attack using biological agents. To this end all the 'blue light' emergency services have been provided with suitable personal protective equipment to protect them against the effects of contamination in the event of a bio-terrorism attack. Protocols for washing down and decontamination of emergency service and national service personnel, the public and premises have been developed with the fire service. The NHS already has in place sound working procedures to deal with biological agents, the spread of infectious diseases and to deal with contaminated equipment and premises. The advice of the Advisory Committee on Dangerous Pathogens will be sought on how to tackle any new risks from dangerous pathogens should they emerge.

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent training has been provided to NHS personnel to deal with a terrorist incident involving biological agents. [88395]

Mr. Hutton: Public health guidance was issued to regional directors of public health in October 2001. General guidance "Planning for Major Incidents: The NHS Guidance" issued by the Department is now openly available on the Department's website www.doh.gov.uk/epcu/cbr/intro.htm with links to complementary guidance on dealing with key biological agents and investigating unusual illnesses on the Public Health Laboratory Service website www.phls.co.uk/topics az/deliberate release/menu.htm. In addition, four specialties have been targeted for immediate training in dealing with the deliberate release of a biological agent: consultants in communicable disease, infectious disease physicians, clinical microbiologists/virologists and accident and emergency (A&E) physicians. Training has started and is being developed further. The Department has consulted with the relevant royal colleges concerning the training it is doing and with the British Infection Society. Training programmes have been devised for primary care trusts and general practitioners and are due to be piloted in Eastern region in early 2003.

Specific training materials such as videos and information packs have also been prepared for occupational health physicians and other clinicians involved in implementation of the national smallpox plan which is available on the Department's website.

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he is giving to the public on action in the event of a terrorist attack using biological agents. [88398]

Mr. Hutton: Advice about key biological agents is available to the public on the Department's website www.doh.gov.uk/epcu/cbr/intro.htm with links to complementary guidance on the Public Health Laboratory Service website www.phls.co.uk/topics az/deliberate release/menu.htm. Information leaflets concerning the deliberate release of smallpox, plague, anthrax, tularaemia and botulism have been prepared and will be made available to the public in the event of any outbreak. The Department is working across government to develop further public information. A wide range of techniques is being considered to find the most effective way to convey information to the public, such as posters and the internet, to help people maintain vigilance and prepare for the consequences of terrorist acts.

Cancelled Operations

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many planned operating lists at (a) the Alexandra hospital, Redditch and (b) the Worcestershire Royal infirmary were cancelled due to staff shortages between 23 December 2002 and 3 January 2003. [93252]

Mr. Lammy: No planned lists were cancelled at Worcestershire Royal hospital, and only two operations from the 23 planned were cancelled during this period at the Alexandra hospital. These were cancelled as a result of an outbreak of diarrhoea and vomiting resulting in a loss of bed capacity, not due to staff shortages.

Chiropody

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what response the Department has made to the Society of Chiropodists and Podiatrists' report of 6 December. [86984]

Mr. Hutton: The Department has not issued a formal response to the document "NHS Chiropody/Podiatry Services—Cause for Continuing Concern, Time for Government Action", issued by the Society of Chiropodists and Podiatrists.

However, I wrote to the chairman of the Society on 27 January, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Civil Servants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many civil servants have been employed by (a) his Department and (b) each of its agencies and non-departmental bodies in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92382]

Mr. Lammy: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State at the Cabinet Office (Mr. Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93042]

Mr. Lammy: The Department takes any misuse of its information technology systems very seriously. All staff are regularly reminded of the Department's policy on misuse of IT, with detailed guidance contained in the document Acceptable Use of Information Technology available on the Department of Health Intranet.

The table shows the total recorded cases of computer misuse within the central Department of Health. A more detailed breakdown of these figures is not available. Management checks indicate only a small number of the breaches involve inappropriate content.

Correspondence Protocol

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice he will provide to health authorities and NHS trusts on observing the requirements of the protocol of the administrative court that public bodies must reply to all correspondence over disputed matters in 14 days. [87547]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 17 December 2002]: The Pre-Action Protocol for potential judicial review claims stipulates that public bodies exercising a judicial function should respond to letters before action in an instance where judicial review is threatened within 14 days. National health service organisations' duty to follow the Protocol requires no further guidance from the Department, and as statutory bodies, they will need to consult their own legal advisers on how to proceed in each case. However, compliance with the Protocol and with other statutory bodies forms part of the requirements set out in 'Improvement, Expansion and Reform', the NHS planning and priorities framework for 2003–06.

Departmental Offices (Running Costs)

Dr. Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the running costs were of his Ministers' private offices, separately identifying expenditure on staff, in each financial year from 1997–98 to 2001–02. [80954]

Mr. Lammy: The running costs for Ministers' private offices for the financial years 1997–98 to 2001–02 are shown in the table.

£000

Year	Staff	Non staff	Total
1997–98	1,385	464	1,849
1998–99	1,564	580	2,144
1999–2000	1,983	670	2,653

Note:

Private Office Expenditure

An additional Minister was appointed during 1999–2000. The data is taken from the Department's Accounts system and is in cash terms. The salaries of Ministers themselves are not included.

Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the outcome was of the Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council held on 3 December; what the Government's stance was on the issues discussed, including its voting record; and if he will make a statement. [87251]

Ms Blears: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health represented the United Kingdom for the Health element of the first day of the Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council in Brussels on 2 December 2002; the consumer affairs items were also taken on that day.

The main health business of this Council related to tobacco. The Council reached qualified majority on a First Reading Deal on the Tobacco Advertising Directive. He emphasised that the UK supports European Union legislation on tobacco advertising, having strong domestic legislation in place. He made clear the Government's determination to ensure the legal victories secured by the tobacco companies over previous European legislation would not be repeated with this Directive. He therefore voted against the Directive because he did not think that the drafting of some provisions was good enough or that it went as far as it could in some areas (for example by not covering cigarette papers).

A Council Recommendation on the prevention of smoking and on initiatives to improve tobacco control was adopted by a qualified majority, with support from the UK. The Commission also gave an update on the World Health Organisation Framework Convention on Tobacco Control.

Member States set out their positions on the pharmaceuticals reviews with a discussion on three key outstanding issues in the European Medicines Evaluation Agency (EMEA) Regulation. There was no vote on this item. On scope, the UK was amongst several Member States who spoke out against extension of the centralised procedure for human medicines, and in favour of a choice for companies. Others supported the Commission. Most felt that Member States should appoint at least one member to the management board. Many were willing to consider also accepting representatives of patient groups or the European Parliament. A majority of Member States and the Commission were able to accept the Presidency compromise of a single renewal of an authorisation after five years.

Council adopted a Recommendation on the prevention and reduction of risks associated with drug dependence. Council Conclusions on action against obesity were adopted unanimously. The UK voted in favour of both of these items.

The Presidency presented a progress report on negotiations on a Directive setting standards of quality and safety for the donation, procurement, testing, processing, storage and distribution of human cells and tissues. The Commission said that they would look carefully at the changes in scope the Council was proposing in relation to the medicinal products and medical devices Directives.

The Commission updated the Council on the high level process of reflection on patient mobility and health care development, and on the programme of co-operation on bioterrorism and health security. The Commission will be tabling a proposal to set up a network centre for disease control in May 2003, to be set up in 2005. The aim is to enhance the EU capacity to prevent the spread of communicable diseases, working closely with Member States' own institutions.

The Commission reported that it had established a working group, to consider the quality of information on internet sites in the health sector. The group, consisting of representatives from government, Non-Government Organisations and industry, has reported and agreed actions including measures on transparency, privacy and accountability. The Commission will monitor work through the E-Europe 2005 ActionPlan.

Items under any other business included an information paper from Ireland on post-polio syndrome. There was also a brief discussion on the follow-up to the G10 initiative on the pharmaceutical industry. A Commission communication, was under preparation, and should issue in May 2003. Italy announced they would have an Informal Ministerial meeting on this during their Presidency. Finally, there was a presentation from Belgium on their candidate for the Director-Generalship of the WHO, Peter Piot.

The consumer part of the Council met with minimal discussion over a short agenda.

The Council adopted a Resolution on Community consumer policy strategy 2002–06 without debate, endorsing the aims and objectives of the Commission's strategy as published in May 2002, namely a high common level of consumer protection, effective enforcement and the involvement of consumer organisations. The UK voted in favour, as did all other Member States.

The Council and the Commission endorsed the Presidency's conclusions on a joint Commission-UK seminar held in November on using consumer statistics to inform and prioritise consumer policy. In accordance with the conclusions, the Commission will take forward technical work on definitions and the comparability of consumer statistics.

As an information point only, the Council took note of a Commission presentation on the preliminary results of the European Extra-Judicial Network (EEJ-Net), the EU network of clearing houses designed to facilitate and resolve cross-border, out-of-court consumer disputes.

Finally, Greece informed the Council that it wanted to contribute to the consumer agenda during its forthcoming Presidency by strengthening its involvement in the internal market. It highlighted in particular a seminar on the Commission's Green Paper of 2003, and a Ministerial conference on unfair trading to be held on 7 May 2003.

Empty Homes

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many empty homes his Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if he will establish an empty homes strategy within his Department; and if he will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92915]

Mr. Lammy: The Department has no residential accommodation on the administrative estate, empty or otherwise.

Five years ago, the Department was in the process of disposing of the St. Charles Youth Treatment Centre, Brentwood, which included nine houses and eight flats that were empty. The site, including the housing, was eventually transferred to the Home Office for re-use within Government.

No information about residential accommodation owned by National Health Service trusts or primary care trusts in England is currently held that could answer this question, although a database of residential accommodation available for NHS staff in London has been built.

A survey of the NHS residential estate was last conducted in September 1998, which showed that there were 895 houses and flats vacant at that time. This was however a snapshot in time, and does not take account of units being held back for occupancy within a short time, as might be expected in a managed portfolio in periods of high staff turnover.

NHS Estates produced 'Sold on Health' (2000), which highlights opportunities to improve management of the NHS healthcare estate and new ways of driving out surplus estate and getting best value from the whole asset lifecycle.

The NHS housing initiative was established in April 2000 to tackle the problem of a lack of affordable accommodation for health workers on moderate incomes.

The NHS Plan announced, in July 2000, a target to deliver an additional 2,000 units of affordable accommodation for nurses in London by July 2003.

The initiative extends to cover the south east of England and other areas of high property prices throughout the country.

Green Minister

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which Minister in his Department is the nominated Green Minister; how often he has attended meetings of the Green Ministers; and which official has responsibility for the DEFRA rural proofing check-list in his Department. [88458]

Mr. Lammy: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Public Health (Ms Blears) is the nominated Green Minister in the Department of Health.

It is established practice under Exemption 2 of Part II of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information relating to the proceedings of the Cabinet and its committees-such as Ministerial attendance at committees.

Officials in the Department's policy and planning directorate have lead responsibility for co-ordinating rural proofing activity in the Department of Health.

Homeless People

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance is given to homeless people to have access to a nutritionally balanced diet. [87421]

Ms Blears: The Homelessness Directorate within the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister are working with the Department of Health and the clinical practitioners and health visitors association to improve access to and raise awareness of the benefits of a healthy diet.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department takes by way of partnership agreements with other Departments to improve the health care needs of homeless people. [87448]

Ms Blears: Vulnerable groups—including homeless people—have been identified as a key priority in the Government's cross-cutting review on health inequalities. In the review, Departments across Government gave commitments to take action where their programmes, policies and resources can make an impact on inequalities, including for vulnerable groups. A forthcoming All-Government delivery plan on health inequalities will set out how Departments' commitments will translate into action; the Department will drive forward the implementation of that plan.

Hospital Food

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the nutritional standards of hospital food for (a) adults, (b) children and (c) vulnerable elderly people. [83346]

Ms Blears: The Better Hospital Food programme has been designed to improve both the quality and availability of food for all patients through, amongst other things, the introduction of a 24-hour catering service and the provision of additional daily snacks.

Hospitals should have available to them expert dietetic advice, which should be called upon when designing hospital menus to ensure they meet the need of all patients. Additionally the essence of care, issued by the Chief Nursing Officer in 2001, highlights the importance of nutritional screening to identify patients who are at risk.

The National Health Service recipe book, issued in May 2001, sets out the minimum standards to be provided by hospitals and also provides additional guidance on meeting the nutritional needs of children, elderly and long stay patients as well as those requiring food with modified consistency. There is additionally guidance on common therapeutic diets.

A guidance document on providing catering services to children and young adults is due to be issued to the NHS shortly.

Hospital Fractures

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people experienced bone fractures while being cared for in NHS hospitals in each of the last five years; and how many of the injured persons died while still in hospital. [93100]

Mr. Lammy: The Department does not collect this information centrally. In-patient central records monitor why a patient has entered a hospital, but do not necessarily record subsequent changes to the reason they are being cared for in hospital.

However, the Government are concerned about national health service patients affected by adverse events, including bone fractures. It established the National Patient Safety Agency in July 2001 to improve the safety of NHS patient care by promoting an open and fair culture and by introducing a national reporting and learning system for adverse events. It is planned for the system to be rolled out across the NHS from summer 2003. The reporting and learning system will, in time, enable us to understand the nature and extent of adverse events in the NHS, including bone fractures and take action to prevent them being repeated.

In addition, the national service framework for older people requires the NHS to take action to prevent falls and reduce resultant fractures or other injuries to older people.

HPA

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions are taking place about the future pension situation for HPA employees after 1 April; and when he expects these to be concluded. [90052]

Ms Blears: The intention is for transferring staff to be able to retain membership of their existing pension scheme. As a special health authority, the Health Protection Agency will be able to admit existing and new staff to the NHS occupational pension scheme.

The current Transfer of Undertaking (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 statutory regulations do not cover occupational pension schemes. If for any reason it were not possible for individuals to retain their membership of their existing pension scheme, all necessary steps will be taken to ensure that staff retain broadly comparable pension arrangements in the future. Advice is being sought from the Government Actuary's Department and if appropriate to seek a certificate of comparability.

Inequality Review

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he intends to take to address the community development aspects of the Tackling Inequality 2002 Cross-cutting Review. [84886]

Ms Blears [holding answer 9 December 2002]: We will shortly be publishing an all Government delivery plan for tackling health inequalities. This will set out priorities for action across Government including local Government and in the national health service, in partnership with the community, voluntary and business sectors and will address the community development aspects of tackling health inequalities.

Kava-kava

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will place in the Library (a) the discussion paper that the Medicines Control Agency used to provide the framework from which risk management options have been considered regarding kava-kava, (b) the information used to assess the economic impact of the various regulatory options considered by the Medicines Control Agency regarding kava-kava and (c) the Medicines Control Agency risk analysis for kava-kava on the viability risk management options other than banning kava-kava; [91471]

(2) if he will place in the Library data used by the Medicines Control Agency in considering the safety of kava-kava that relates to potential enzyme induction caused by (a) kava-kava and (b) registered medicines in association with kava-kava in adverse reaction case reports; [91472]

(3) if he will place in the Library the Medicines Cont[illegible] Agency's (a) risk benefit analysis in relation to kava[illegible] (b) supporting documents and (c) expert advic[illegible] [91474]

(4) if he will place in the Library correspondence and submissions (a) sent to and (b) received by the Medicines Control Agency regarding the regulating of kava-kava. [91473]

Ms Blears: I am placing in the Library of the House copies of the following documents: the Medicines Control Agency's letters to interest groups about kava-kava; a summary of the responses received in response to the Agency's public consultation (MLX 286); copies of responses to the consultation received where permission has been received from the author; papers considered by the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) and by the Medicines Commission; minutes of the meetings of the CSM held on 12 December 2001, 10 July 2002 and 16 October 2002; minutes of the meeting of the CSM's working group held on 12 March 2002; the final regulatory impact assessment (RIA).

Some of the papers considered by the advisory committees have been anonymised under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information, as have parts of the minutes of meetings, under exemptions 10, 13, 14 and 15 of the code.

Minutes of the Commission's meeting of 7 November 2002 will be placed in the Library once the minutes have been formally ratified by the Commission. This is expected in February.

We will review all other documents sent and received by the MCA relating to kava-kava to assess what, if any information is subject to non disclosure under the code and seek permission for disclosure from external parties where necessary. The main categories into which these additional documents fall include: factual advice sought from and given by the MCA following inquiries from a wide range of external parties, including members of the public, about the regulatory position of kava-kava and the progress of consideration of safety issues; legal advice sought by and given to the MCA; factual information exchanged between the MCA and the Food Standards Agency, other Government Departments, regulatory authorities elsewhere in the European Union, papers reflecting policy advice to and discussion with Ministers. Some of these categories of information will be exempt from disclosure under the code.

In relation to kava-kava medicines with a marketing authorisation, exemptions 10, 13 and 15 of the code apply. This information remains confidential and publication would be premature while the issues are still under consideration; however, the advice will be published (some papers may be anonymised) once a regulatory decision has been made.

MMR

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what regulations and restrictions apply to the import of the single (a) rubella, (b) measles and (c) mumps vaccine; and what the licensing arrangements are for each. [93419]

Ms Blears: Single rubella vaccine and single measles and mumps vaccines are licensed in the United Kingdom. However, the pharmaceutical companies that hold the UK marketing authorisations for single measles and mumps vaccines do not manufacture the products for, or market them in, this country and the vaccines being prescribed and administered are imported unlicensed medicines. Licensed single rubella vaccine is currently available in the UK. However, unlicensed rubella vaccine may also be imported on occasions when the licensed vaccine is unavailable.

An unlicensed medicine, such as a single vaccine, may only be imported in accordance with The Medicines (Standard Provisions for Licences and Certificates) Amendment Regulations 1999 No. 4. An importer must hold the appropriate Wholesale Dealer's or Wholesale Dealer's Import Licence issued by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA), and is required to notify the MCA on each occasion that they intend to import such a product. Importation may proceed unless the importer has been informed by the MCA that it objects to importation. The MCA may object and prevent importation if it has concerns about the safety or quality of the product, or if there is an equivalent licensed medicine available. The maximum quantity that may be imported per notification is defined in the regulations.

NHS (Private Sector Treatments)

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the Worcestershire Acute Hospitals NHS Trust's expenditure on NHS patients treated surgically in the private sector was between 23 December 2002 and 3 January 2003. [93253]

Mr. Lammy: Approximately £100,000 was spent by the Worcestershire Acute Hospitals National Health Service Trust on treatments for NHS patients in private hospitals in Halesowen, Droitwich and Worcester during the period.

NHS Hospitals (Tendering)

Dr. Richard Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the private companies on the Government's register of expertise for tendering to run NHS hospitals have experience in managing emergency services; and what safeguards are in place to prevent these firms recruiting the best managers from the NHS. [93251]

Mr. Lammy: The independent panel set up by the National Health Service Appointments Commission assessed the general ability of each private sector organisation to run a hospital trust. The expertise and experience of every organisation which tenders for a NHS franchise will be thoroughly and rigorously assessed before any contract is awarded. The Government's aim is for the best managers from either the public or private sectors to be put into franchised hospitals to help turn around their performance.

NHS Hotmail System

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will place in the Library the specification for the NHS hotmail system being developed by EDS. [91590]

Ms Blears: A copy of the output base specification for email and directory services has been placed in the Library.

NHS Trusts (Powers of Direction)

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what direction he has given to NHS trusts in the last three months; and if he will make a statement on his powers of direction to (a) NHS trusts and (b) foundation trusts. [88240]

Mr. Hutton: There have been no instances over the past three months where my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has used his powers of intervention to give direction to a particular trust.

As set out in A Guide to NHS Foundation Trusts (paragraph 1.11), national health service trusts will not be subject to Secretary of State powers of direction.

Parking Charges (Hospitals)

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals in England charge for parking for (a) visitors, (b) medical staff and (c) medical staff at discounted rates. [89926]

Mr. Hutton: This information is not held centrally. It is a matter for individual hospitals to decide whether or not to charge for car parking and the cost of such charges in the light of local circumstances. Where charges are introduced, patients who are eligible to claim reimbursement of travelling expenses under the hospital travel costs scheme may have the charges reimbursed.

Patients (Homelessness)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients in NHS hospitals were homeless in each year between 1997–98 and 2000–01, broken down by health authority. [93371]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Information on the total inpatient admissions to national health service hospitals in English health authorities for 1997–98 to 2000–01, where the address is classified as 'no fixed abode' has been placed in the Library.

Pregnant Women

Jim Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what provision (a) has been made and (b) is planned to support pregnant mothers engaged in (i) alcohol and (ii) substance abuse and to protect their unborn children from such abuse. [93216]

Ms Blears: Midwives provide the majority of care for pregnant mothers as well as advice and support on healthy lifestyles including alcohol and substance misuse. Specialist staff may also be attached to antenatal clinics.

The Department produces health promotion resources which are targeted at pregnant women to reduce drinking and increase awareness of risk to the unborn child, e.g., Drinking for two. A recent survey indicated that 30 per cent. of women gave up drinking during pregnancy and around 70 per cent. of those who did drink, drank less than one unit per week on average.

Specialist alcohol treatment services provide support and treatment for people with more serious alcohol problems, including pregnant women. There are around 475 specialist alcohol treatment services in England, providing treatment worth approximately £95 million per year.

Obstetric and substance misuse services exist throughout the country. The Department of Health's Drug Misuse and Dependence—Guidelines on Clinical Management (Clinical Guidelines) recommends different approaches to deliver care to pregnant drug misusers, such as specialist midwives, or drug dependence staff attached to the antenatal clinic. The type of service in each area will depend on local circumstances, the number of pregnant drug misusers presenting for care, expertise of the obstetric and primary care services, and availability of specialist or shared-care support. Further information is available at http://www.doh.qov.uk/druqs/pdfs/dmfull.pdf

Primary Care Trust Chair Salaries

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the average salary was for chairs of primary care groups in England in the year to 31 October 2002; [93968]

(2) what the average salary is of (a) primary care group and (b) primary care trust chairpersons in England. [93262]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 27 January 2003]: There are no longer any primary care groups in existence. The current average annual remuneration for primary care trust chairs is £12,600. All non-executives on PCT boards receive £5,294 per annum.

Primary Care Trusts

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent to which the new national health service funding formula for primary care trusts is governed by rural factors. [92902]

Mr. Hutton: The new national health service funding formula takes account of a wide range of health and socio-economic factors associated with the need for health care.

In calculating health need in rural areas the new formula takes account of the effects of access, transport and poverty.

The new formula provides a better measure of health need in all areas.

Private Health Schemes

Sue Doughty: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 619W, on private health schemes, if it would interfere with the duties of an NHS body if it allowed the use of beds by private health care funded patients for operations for which there is a waiting time longer than three months for NHS patients. [93150]

Mr. Hutton: It is for national health service bodies themselves to determine whether it is permissible and appropriate to offer private patient services in the light of relevant local circumstances.

Residential Care Homes (Top-up Fees)

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards top-up fees for patients in residential care homes. [90785]

Jacqui Smith: When a local council supports individuals in care homes, it should provide and fund accommodation sufficient to meet resident's assessed needs. Residents should only contribute to care costs according to the National Assistance (Assessment of Resources) Regulations 1992 and neither they nor third parties should be asked to make top-up payments in addition to the resident's assessed contribution in order to meet assessed needs.

Furthermore, council supported residents may not top-up from their own resources for more expensive accommodation than the council would normally pay for to meet assessed need unless they have a deferred payment agreement or are subject to the 12-weeks property disregard.

Otherwise, a resident can still opt for more expensive accommodation as long as they have a third party such as a friend or a relative who is willing make up the difference on their behalf. In order to agree a third party top-up agreement the local council needs to be satisfied that the third party has sufficient resources in order to continue to make the additional contribution on behalf of the resident.

Silicone Cosmesis (Artificial Limbs)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answers of 7 November 2002, Official Report, column 542W, and 27 November 2002, Official Report, column 356W, on NHS funding of silicone cosmesis for artificial limbs, if he will list the sums allocated to individual (a) health authorities and (b) primary care trusts in (i) 2001–02 and (ii) 2002–03 out of the £0.5 million and £1.5 million baseline allocations made respectively for those years. [92884]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Allocations to individual health authorities and primary care trusts in 2001–02 and 2002–03 did not separately identify sums for silicone cosmesis.

Smallpox Vaccinations

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what advice he is giving to the public regarding smallpox vaccinations; [88397]

(2) what plans he has to make smallpox vaccinations available to the public. [88508]

Mr. Hutton: There are no plans to vaccinate the whole population as a contingency measure against the threat of a bio-terrorist incident involving smallpox. Mass vaccination of the population could be justifiable if there was a smallpox attack or outbreak but it would not be acceptable to expose people to the risk of vaccination in the absence of any possible exposure to the smallpox virus. This is consistent with the approach recommended by the World Health Organisation.

Smallpox vaccine has a much higher rate of serious complications than vaccines that are in regular use today. Certain groups are at even higher risk, such as those with weak immune systems or with severe eczema.

We have already announced that a small number of key frontline national health service staff and a small number of military personnel who would provide the first response in the event of a confirmed, suspected or threatened release of smallpox will be vaccinated shortly. We are discussing with other Government Departments how to identify key workers in the emergency services and agreeing circumstances and timing under which they might be vaccinated.

Our contingency plans for dealing with smallpox are detailed in the draft guidelines on smallpox available on http://www.doh.gov.uk/epcu/cbr/biol/smallpoxplan.htm.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the ratio of speech therapists to population is in (a) Coventry, (b) the West Midlands and (c) the UK as a whole; [93137]

(2) how many speech therapists are working in Coventry. [93138]

Mr. Lammy [holding answer 28 January 2003]: The latest available information is shown in the table. Figures for the United Kingdom are not available, so England figures have been used.

NHS hospital and community services (HCHS): qualified scientific, therapeutic and technical staff rates per 100,000 population within the speech and language therapy area of work for Coventry health authority, West Midlands regional office area and England as at 30 September 2001

	Numbers of staff		Rate per 100,000 population
	Whole-time equivalents	Headcount	Whole-time equivalents	Headcount
England	4,207	5,685	8.6	11.6
of which: West Midlands	446	576	8.5	10.9
of which: Coventry HA	33	41	11	13.6

Statutory Instruments

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many statutory instruments have been issued by his Department in each calendar year since 1979. [89844]

Mr. Lammy: The Department of Health was formed in July 1988. Information for the period between July 1988 and December 1998 could be provided only at disproportionate cost, but is available on the website of Her Majesty's Stationery Office at www.legislation.hmso.gov.uk/stat.htm and in the Library.

Information for the years 1999–2002 is shown in the table.

	Number of Statutory Instruments issued
1999	170
2000	216
2001	399
2002	392

Tuberculosis

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to the answer of 10 December 2002 ref: 83330, how much his Department spent on educating the public about prevention and awareness of turberculosis in each year since 1997; and what form this year's Awareness campaign took. [87577]

Ms Blears: Approximately £43,000 was spent annually on tuberculosis awareness campaigns between 1997–98 and 2000–01.

In 2001–02, £309,178 was spent on a campaign which incorporated press, television and radio advertising as well as the distribution of leaflets and posters throughout England in English, Gujarati, Hindi, Bengali, Punjabi, Urdu, Somali and Russian. £80,821 has been spent so far in 2002–03 in support of this campaign.

Worcestershire Health Economy

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assumptions were made in the service and financial framework for the Worcestershire health economy for 2002–03 in terms of (a) anticipated additional allocations from the Department of Health during the financial year and (b) the uplift for GP prescribing budgets; if these assumptions were in line with the external advice available to those preparing the framework; and who approved the final service and financial framework. [93007]

Mr. Lammy: Worcestershire health authority received an increase of £34.630 million to its revenue resource allocation, a 9.68 per cent. increase on the total 2001–02 allocation, in 2002–03.

The assumptions made in the 2002–03 service and financial framework by Worcestershire health authority (HA), which co-ordinated the process, were:

> There were no anticipated additional allocations from the Department of Health during the financial year. However, there was an assumption made of slippage in-year of £2.5 million, i.e., allocations received in 2002–03 but against which expenditure would not be incurred recurrently until future years. This forecast slippage was at the same level as previous years.
> The uplift for primary care prescribing costs assumed by Worcestershire health authority was 11 per cent. on the 2001–02 forecast outturn of these costs. This was in line with national guidance. The HA also proposed making efficiency savings of 3.6 per cent., giving a net increase of 7.4 per cent. As required by national guidance, where prescribing costs efficiency savings were planned, this was supported by an action plan prepared by the HA.

The chief executive designate for the new strategic health authority (StHA) played an active part in the local discussions and agreements with primary care groups and national health service trusts, and agreement of service and financial frameworks (SaFFs) was an important element of the franchise plan for the chief executive of the StHA.

In addition the Department of Health, both at regional office and national levels, had an overseeing role for the whole SaFF process in particular and to ensure that all key targets were planned to be met.

Working Time Directive

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the cost to each acute trust in the NHS of the introduction of the European Working Time Directive; how many extra staff he estimates will be required as a result of the application of the directive; how many have so far been recruited; and if he will make a statement. [88356]

Mr. Hutton: The European Working Time Directive (EWTD) has applied to the majority of national health service staff since October 1998. The EWTD will be extended to doctors in training from August 2004, initially with a maximum of 58 hours per week, reducing to 48 in 2009.

The Department has not collected figures on a trust-by-trust basis, as work force planning of this kind is the responsibility of local trusts. However, the Department's guidance makes clear that compliance with the EWTD will be achieved only by trusts employing a wide range of solutions and maximising the skills and experience of their whole workforce. This is part of the bigger challenge of modernising the NHS and the guidance will help contribute to finding solutions that work in different specialties, in different hospitals.

The guidance also makes clear that changes to the working practices of both medical and non-medical staff, and building on the increases in consultant and specialist registrars, will allow trusts to meet their objectives under the Directive.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Asylum (Ports of Entry)

Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to increase the percentage of applications for asylum at ports of entry. [92728]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: In order to give advance publicity to the implementation of section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, I made a Ministerial Statement on 28 November 2002 and issued a press release on the same day. The press release was issued to foreign media in this country and those abroad in countries where we receive a high number of asylum applicants. A further press release was issued on 7 January 2003, and this triggered extensive media coverage here within the UK.

In addition, posters advertising the change in policy have been displayed in the arrivals hall at the major ports and airports since 10 December 2002. Copies of the posters have also been displayed in Voluntary Sector Offices, such as Migrant Helpline and the Refugee Action Project.

Asylum Appeals

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum appeals (a) between 1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002 and (b) since

1 April 2002 have been (i) lodged and (ii) heard; how many of these appeals have been refused; and, in relation to these refusals, how many applications for judicial review have been lodged. [93334]

Beverley Hughes: The available information is shown in the table. Appeal outcomes in any given time period do not necessarily relate to appeals lodged in the same period.

Asylum appeals determined by adjudicators of the Immigration Appellate Authority, excluding dependants, April 2001 to September 2002[1]

Number of principal appellants				Appeals determined by adjudicators

[1] Provisional figures rounded to the nearest 5. Numbers might not add up due to rounding.

[2] Appeals received based on electronic sources.

[3] Based on information supplied by the Lord Chancellor's Department. Determinations do not necessarily relate to appeals received in the same period.

[4] Based on data supplied from the Presenting Officers Unit within the Home Office.

[5] Estimate. Figures rounded to the nearest hundred, and subject to later revision.

In the calendar year 2001 there were 2,210 applications for leave to move for judicial review. 13 per cent. of the 2,300 decisions in the calendar year 2001 granted leave to move. Information is unavailable for the periods requested. Applications for leave to move for Judicial Review do not necessarily relate to appeals refused by the Immigration Appellate Authority in the same period. The figures exclude further appeals to the Tribunal and the House of Lords.

Asylum statistics are published quarterly. The latest published figures give information up to and including September 2002. The next publication giving figures up to and including December 2002 will be available from 28 February 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants under the expedited appeals process have received (a) legal advice and assistance in preparing their asylum appeal and (b) legal representation at the appeal hearing. [93335]

Beverley Hughes: The expedited appeals process commenced in August 2002 and ended when the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 was commenced in November 2002, and non-suspensive appeals came into force for the 10 EU accession countries.

Over 160 (rounded to the nearest five) appeals were dealt with under this process. All expedited appeal claimants passed through the Oakington fast track process and had access to on site legal advice from the Refugee Legal Centre or Immigration Advisory Service. Procedures were put in place to ensure the availability of legal advice once the claimants left Oakington and were detained pending determination of their appeal.

Asylum statistics are published quarterly and are available on the Home Office Research and Development and Statistics Directorate website at: http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1.html

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for asylum were refused in an initial decision in each year since 1997; and how many of these were subsequently allowed on appeal. [93325]

Beverley Hughes: The tables show the number of asylum applicants refused in an initial decision in each year from 1997 to 2001 and the number of appeals allowed in each of those years.

Initial asylum decisions in the United Kingdom[1] by year 1997–2001

[1] Figures rounded to the nearest five, with * = one or two.

[2] Information is of initial decisions, excluding the outcome of appeals or other subsequent decisions.

[3] Cases considered under normal procedures may include some cases decided under the backlog criteria..

[4] Cases decided under measures aimed at reducing the pre 1996 asylum application backlog.

[5] Includes some cases where the application has been refused on substantive grounds.

[6] Provisional data.

Not all initial decisions to refuse an application result in an appeal. It is estimated that around 77 per cent. of refusals of applications made in 2001 resulted in an appeal, and that around a fifth of those appeals were allowed. The appeals allowed figures given in the following table do not necessarily relate to the refusals in the same year. These could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by examination of individual case records.

[1] Figures (other than percentages) rounded to the nearest five. Numbers might not add up due to rounding,

[2] Figures for 1997 to 2000 are based on manual counts of data received in Appeals Support Section of the Home Office. Some cases are received elsewhere in the Home Office before being forwarded to ASS and so may be counted in a later month than when they arrived in the Home Office.

[3] Figures for 1997 and 1995 represent the number of appeals sent to the IAA by the Home Office.

[4] Based on information supplied by the Lord Chancellor's Department. Determinations do not necessarily relate to appeals received in the same period.

[5] Percentages based on total determined excluding without foundation appeals referred to Secretary of State for further consideration. Based on data supplied by the Presenting Officers Unit within the Home Office (October 1999-December 2001).

[6] Appeals received by the Appeals Support Section based on electronic sources.

[7] Provisional figures.

Asylum statistics are published quarterly. The latest published figures give information up to and including September 2002. The next publication giving figures up to and including December 2002 will be available from 28 February 2003 on the Home Office Research Development and Statistics Directorate website at http://www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/immigration1 .html.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many asylum seekers have been denied asylum in the UK in the last 12 months; and what percentage have been deported; [92838]

(2) how many asylum seekers from Algeria have been denied asylum in the UK in the last 12 months; and what percentage have been deported. [92839]

Beverley Hughes: In the period October 2001 to September 2002, 84,625 initial decisions were made on asylum cases, of which 1,185 had been lodged by Algerian nationals. In this period, 56,025 cases were refused asylum and exceptional leave to remain (ELR), of which 1,125 were Algerian. This information relates to cases and therefore excludes dependants.

Information on the number of these cases that were removed within the same period is not available except by examination of individual case files at disproportionate cost. However, 10,300 principal asylum applicants were removed in this period. Estimates of principal asylum applicants removed show 110 Algerian nationals removed in the period October 2001 to June 2002. Corresponding data for the period July to September 2002 will be available following publication of the next quarterly asylum statistics.

The number of asylum applications from Algerians increased between 1993 and 1995 from 275 to a peak of 1, 865.

Information on the number of asylum decisions and removals is published quarterly on the Home Office website at . The next publication will be available from 28 February and will cover the final quarter of 2002.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Afghan nationals sought asylum in Britain in the last five years for which data is available; and were (a) accepted and (b) rejected in each year; and how many were returned to Afghanistan or third countries. [92981]

Beverley Hughes: The available data on applications and initial decisions are included in the table. However, data on initial decisions are independent of applications data, and do not necessarily relate to applications made in the same period.

Applications received for asylum in the UK, excluding dependents, and initial decisions, for nationals of Afghanistan, 1997 to 2001 and January to September[1]

[2] Figure may include a small number of dependants leaving under Assisted Voluntary Return Programmes.

[3] Data have been estimated due to data quality issues.

[4] Provisional data.

Note:

Figures are rounded to the nearest five.

Data on applications in the period October to December 2002 and removals by nationality in the period July to September 2002 are due to be published at the end of February 2003 on the Home Office website: www.homeoffice.gov.uk/rds/whatsnew1.html

Mr. Philip Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will exclude Silverlands at Chertsey, Surrey from consideration for accommodation for asylum seekers. [92999]

Beverley Hughes: Chertsey is not within a designated dispersal area for asylum seekers requiring accommodation. Similarly for the trial of accommodation centres we are looking to provide accommodation away from London and Kent.

All adult asylum seekers will be required to attend an induction centre irrespective of whether they require support including accommodation. We are proposing a national network of induction centres and it is envisaged these will be up and running by the end of 2003. The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) is currently considering options for accommodation to support the Induction Centre to meet the needs of asylum seekers arriving in London and the South East.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to use (a) hotels, (b) hostels and (c) country homes in Shropshire as induction centres to house asylum seekers. [93017]

We are intending to have a national network of induction centres which are being introduced on a phased basis. To date we have opened one induction centre in Kent and are in the process of negotiating contracts for accommodation to support an induction centre for asylum seekers making their claim in London and the south east. The third phase of the project is to provide induction centres in regional areas. The National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has invited expressions of interest from each regional consortium. The West Midlands consortium, which includes Shropshire, has expressed an interest but has indicated to NASS that it is not currently considering using any properties in Shropshire.

Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how he intends to monitor the impact of the withdrawal of asylum support for in-country applicants on asylum seekers in the UK. [92726]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: Under section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002, those people who make their asylum claim as soon as reasonably practicable on arrival in the UK, will continue to receive the support they need. The Home Office is working in close consultation with local authorities and voluntary sector organisations to establish the best way in which the impact of the changes may be monitored on the ground.

Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what impact he estimates the withdrawal of asylum support for in-country applicants will have on the numbers of homeless people living in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement. [92727]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: Section 55 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002 prevents the provision of support to asylum seekers who do not make their asylum claim as soon as reasonably practicable on arrival at a port in the UK. The purpose of the new policy is to ensure that those wishing to seek asylum do so at the earliest opportunity. If this purpose is fulfilled, there is no reason to suppose that there will be an increase in the number of homeless people. Since 8 January 2003, when the new policy was introduced, there has been no indication of increased homelessness.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93046]

Hilary Benn: The figures, so far as information is available in the form requested, are as follows:

Cases of computer misuse

Criminal Records Bureau (Checks)

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research was undertaken by (a) his Department and (b) Capita to determine the (i) likely level of demand for Criminal Records Bureau checks and (ii) Criminal Records Bureau customers' preferred means of submitting applications for checks. [89984]

Hilary Benn: Original research into the likely level of demand for Criminal Records Bureau (CRB) checks was undertaken by the Home Office and CRB. Two comprehensive market research studies were carried out by Coopers Lybrand (1996) and Accent Market Research (March 2000) to determine who would use the service and what likely levels of take up were anticipated. These studies were validated by the Labour Force Survey carried out between September and November 1999. A telephone survey with existing checkers was carried out to validate the baseline information created from the above research. In December 2001, Capita Account Managers conducted their own research to determine which Registered Bodies were likely to be major users of the service and there is ongoing joint Capita and CRB forecasting work based on latest actual demand and outputs from a forecasting model.

An analysis of legislation and its likely impact on CRB demand was also undertaken. The analysis looked at whether or not legislation would increase the number of sectors eligible for CRB checks or whether or not the impact would be neutral. It was determined that the outcome was likely to be neutral.

The original concept for the CRB was based on a call-centre, telephone-based and online application route, with capacity to deal with individual paper applications. That arrangement was expected to be convenient for applicants and would reduce errors. It was also in line with the Government's e-government objectives. Market research was undertaken by Rosslyn Research in 2000 to establish employer's requirements in terms of service standards.

However, during extensive consultation with registered bodies and employers from January to June 2001, there was strong pressure from them to introduce a full-scale paper-based application. Consequently, in May 2001, the CRB agreed to introduce more extensive capacity to deal with paper-based applications.

Departmental Expenditure (Newsprint)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total expenditure of his Department was on newspapers, magazines and periodicals in 2002. [90527]

Mr. Blunkett: The total expenditure for the Home Office and Agencies during 2002 was £45,292.81. This does not include expenditure by non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs). Collection of this data could be achieved only at disproportionate cost.

Departmental Performance Report

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department's autumn performance report for 2002 will be published. [93158]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Howard Flight) on 21 January 2003, Official Report, column 302W.

External Consultancies

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92232]

Hilary Benn: The information is not available in the format requested. Total expenditure figures on consultants by Non Departmental Public Bodies (NDPBs) for the period in question and also planned expenditure by core Home Office Directorates and its Agencies in 2002–03 is not held centrally. Total expenditure on external consultants in each year from 1995–96 to 2001–02 for the core Home Office and its Agencies.

Consultancy expenditure by the Home Department and Agencies

	Expenditure
1995–96	10,200,000
1996–97	11,804,984
1997–98	7,627,016
1998–99	4,588,445
1999–2000	10,302,672
2000–01	27,877,286
2001–02	21,147,058

The increase in expenditure on consultancy in financial years 2000–01 and 2001–02 is primarily due to a major investment programme in the modernisation of the Home Office and in particular on IT related modernisation and also the cost of setting up the National Probation Directorate.

Extradition Cases

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much was spent on each extradition case in the last five years, broken down by individual case. [93337]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The information requested is available only at disproportionate cost.

Failed Asylum Seekers

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many failed asylum seekers left the UK in each year since 1997, broken down by those (a) deported and (b) who left voluntarily. [93324]

Beverley Hughes: Information on the number of failed asylum applicants (a) removed; and (b) known to have left the United Kingdom voluntarily since 1997 is given in the table. It is not possible to separately identify the number of principal applicants who departed 'voluntarily' after enforcement action had been initiated against them.

Principal asylum applicants removed from the UK[1]

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001[2] (p)	January to September 2002[3] (p)
Total number of principal asylum applicants removed[4]	7,165	6,990	7,665	8,980	9,285	7,780
Of which:
Assisted voluntary returns programme[5]	—	—	50	550	980	640

[1] Persons who had sought asylum at some stage, excluding dependants.

[2] Removal figures exclude 1,495 dependants of asylum seekers removed in the period April to December 2001, of which 230 left under the assisted voluntary returns programme; data on dependants removed have only been collected since April 2001.

[3] In the same period 1,825 dependants of principal asylum seekers departed, of which 185 left under the assisted voluntary returns programme.

[4] Including persons known to have departed "voluntarily" after enforcement action had been initiated against them.

[5] Persons leaving under the assisted voluntary returns programmes run by the International Organisation for Migration. May include some on-entry cases and some cases where enforcement action has been initiated.

Family Visitor Appeals

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to publish the final report of the inter-departmental review of family visitor appeals. [93094]

Beverley Hughes: The report of the inter-departmental review group and the report of the research commissioned by that group have been delayed by unforeseen circumstances They will be published shortly. A copy of the report will be placed in the Library as promised.

Foster Deportation

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at what times on (a) 1 December, (b) 2 December and (c) 3 December 2002, members of the press office at 10 Downing street held conversations with members of the press office at the Home Office regarding the deportation of Mr. Foster; which officials in the Downing street press office and in the Home Office press office took part in these conversations; and what the duration was of each such conversation. [91364]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 20 January 2003]: The Home Office press office has regular daily contact with their opposite numbers at Downing street press office. Records of these conversations and their duration are not kept.

Full-time Equivalent Staff

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many full-time equivalent staff are employed in (a) the Department and (b) each of the agencies it sponsors; and what the figures were for 1997. [90672]

Mr. Blunkett: Home Office staff figures in each region and nation of the UK are published in "Civil Service Statistics" year on year and placed in the Library.

Health and Safety

Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether his Department and its agencies have met the commitment arising from Action Point 13 of the June 2000 Strategy statement on revitalising health and safety to summarise health and safety performance and plans in annual reports from the year 2001 onwards; [89496]

(2) what information he has collated on the application to his Department and its agencies of the checklist, circulated by letter by Sir Richard Mottram, referred to under Action Point 12 of the revitalising health and safety strategy statement; and if he will make a statement [89498]

(3) which senior officials within his Department and its agencies take responsibility for health and safety at board or equivalent level; and where their names are publicised. [89497]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Work and Pensions (Nicholas Brown) on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 85W.

Immigration

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what manpower complement is allocated by immigration services to each of the south coast ports; what his estimate is of how many persons entered through each port in the last year for which information is available; and what coverage is available for non-canalized ports of entry. [91252]

Beverley Hughes: The latest data on passenger arrivals that is available for public use is for 2001.

For a meaningful comparison, a snapshot taken on 31 December 2001 shows the actual number of staff in post at the south coast ports of Dover East, Dover Hoverport, Felixstowe, Folkestone, Newhaven, Plymouth, Poole, Portsmouth and Southampton on that date was 404 full time equivalent officers, comprising of 356 immigration service staff and 48 administrative staff.

The total number of passenger arrivals at south coast ports was 9,924,100. This figure is broken down as follows:

South Coast Port	Number
Dover East	6,340,000
Dover Hoverport	944,000
Felixstowe	55,200
Folkestone	28,900
Newhaven	169,000
Plymouth	328,000
Poole	140,000
Portsmouth	1,620,00
Southampton	299,000

Note:
Figures rounded to the nearest three significant digits.

The UK Immigration Service conducts regular risk assessments of small ports not routinely staffed and there is continuous monitoring of arrivals including spot checks. The details of passengers subject to immigration control arriving at small ports, which are not routinely staffed by the Immigration Service, are still checked against the Warnings Index system.

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department pursuant to his answer of 19 December 2002, Official Report, column 988W, on immigration, whether the Reporting Line is still in operation; and when he will publish the evaluation of the trial. [93834]

Beverley Hughes: The trial of the confidential hotline ran from May to July 2002. I have remitted the recommendations of the evaluation back to officials for further details on cost and application. I undertook, in my response to the hon. member's most recent question on this subject, 20 January 2002, Official Report, column 183W, to write to the hon. member once these details have been considered. I will do so as soon as this consideration has taken place.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92442]

Mr. Blunkett: I refer the hon. Member to the answer provided by my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley South (Douglas Alexander) on 22 January 2003, Official Report, Column 333W.

Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he plans to bring into effect section 4 and section 76 of the Nationality, Immigration and Asylum Act 2002; and if he will make a statement. [93258]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Section 4 will be brought into force as soon as administrative arrangements for giving effect to the new appeal rights have been put into place. Section 76 will come into effect on 10 February.

New Prisons

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's proposed spending plans on new prison building in 2003–04. [91897]

Hilary Benn: Existing funding is being used to deliver a programme to increase prison capacity. This will conclude in 2003–04 when 450 places will become available at Birmingham prison. This completes a programme that planned to increase capacity by 2,660 places.

Following the outcome of the recent Spending Review (SR 2002) the Government have committed further funding to increase prison capacity. By the end of 2003–04 it is intended that this will provide another 740 places across the prison estate.

Roma People

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many central and eastern

European Roma he expects to migrate to the UK following the accession to the EU of (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Slovakia, (c) Hungary and (d) Poland. [93439]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Research conducted by University College London for the Home Office, which will be published soon, suggests that the numbers of people who will migrate to the UK from the new member states will not be significant. This research corroborates a number of other independent studies which have looked at the scale of migration flows after enlargement. These have been summarised in reports by the European Commission in 2000 and the former Department for Education and Employment in 1999. None of this research has been able to predict exact numbers expected from specific countries or ethnic groups to the UK.

Whole-time Equivalent Staff

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the distribution of his Department's whole-time equivalent staff was, including the staff in agencies and other bodies reporting to him, in each Government office region and nation of the UK (a) in 1996 and (b) at the most recent available period. [90470]

Mr. Blunkett: Home Office staff figures in each region and nation of the UK are published in "Civil Service Statistics" year on year and placed in the Library.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Departmental Performance Report

Tony Wright: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when her Department's autumn performance report for 2002 will be published. [93154]

Ms Rosie Winterton: I refer the hon. Member to the written answer I gave to the hon. Member for Arundel and South Downs (Mr. Flight) on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 200W.

Grandchildren (Access)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what rights grandparents have regarding access to their grandchildren. [93549]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The Children Act 1989 requires that the court's paramount consideration must be the welfare of the child. Judges are guided by a list of factors set out in section 1(3) of the Act, known as the 'welfare checklist'. The court has the discretion to take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the individual case when deciding any question concerning the child, including issues of contact and residence.

Any person (including grandparents) may, provided that the permission of the court is obtained, apply to the court for an order for residence or contact with a child. This requirement is designed as an early filter for those applications the court feels would not to be in the best interests of the child. Experience suggests that grandparents (or other interested relatives) do not usually experience difficulty in obtaining permission where their application is motivated by a genuine concern for the child.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what proposals she has to ensure that grandparents have increased legal rights of access to their grandchildren; and what other rights grandparents have in the event of family breakdown. [93550]

Ms Rosie Winterton: The current requirement is for grandparents to obtain the leave of the court to issue an application for contact with grandchildren. Experience has shown that grandparents, or wider family members, do not usually experience difficulty in obtaining leave when the application is motivated by genuine concern for the child. Consequently, there are no plans to amend the Children Act 1989. In the event of a family dispute, any person, including grandparents, with a contact order can apply to the court to determine the implementation or variation of the existing order.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many magistrates courts have closed since May 1997. [87644]

Yvette Cooper: Decisions about magistrates court closures are made by independent Magistrates Courts Committees (MCCs). MCCs are not required by statute to inform the Government of court closures.

The best information indicates that the number of court closures is as follows:

	Number
1996	21
1997	[1]21
1998	25
1999	7
2000	13

PRIME MINISTER

Al-Qaeda

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what his assessment is of the likelihood that (a) Al-Qaeda, (b) other terrorist groups and (c) Iraq might carry out an attack on the United Kingdom. [93897]

The Prime Minister: The terrorist threat remains real, and serious. As recent events have shown, no country is immune from attack, and it simply is not possible to guarantee against more attacks in the future. However, this Government are resolute in their determination to defeat terrorism regardless of its source.

External Consultants

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body spent on external consultancy in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (planned); and if he will make a statement. [92224]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office today at column 855W.

Heritage Assets

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister what sales of heritage assets and antique assets have been made by his Department since May 1997; if he will list such assets; and if he will estimate the total sales proceeds. [92417]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office today.

Terrorism

Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what independent advice he has received on the terrorist threat to the United Kingdom. [94037]

The Prime Minister: Advice on any terrorist threat to the UK is the responsibility of the Security Service. The Director General of the Security Service is responsible to my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary for this advice, which is provided on a continuous basis. Strategic assessments about terrorist threats to the UK are provided to the Government by the Joint Intelligence Committee.

SCOTLAND

Broadband

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when she last met the Regional Broadband Unit to discuss the rollout of broadband services in Scotland. [91737]

(2) if she will make a statement on her Department's role in how the money awarded to Scotland from the UK Broadband Fund is to be spent. [91740]

(3) if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on the development of broadband services for the benefit of (a) small businesses in rural areas and (b) consumers in rural areas. [91739]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scottish Executive is taking forward the rollout of broadband in Scotland with its strategy, 'Connecting Scotland our broadband future—Making it Happen', for accelerating and widening access, and for increasing take up across Scotland. Both the small business sector and rural consumers are recognised priorities.

Scottish interests on the UK Broadband Taskforce, previously the Regional Broadband Unit, are represented by the Executive, which also negotiates directly with the Department of Trade and Industry on awards to Scotland from the UK Broadband Fund.

Electronics Industry

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what assessment she has made of the future viability of the Scottish electronics industry. [92291]

Mrs. Liddell: Despite the global downturn in the electronics sector, Scotland retains a number of key competitive advantages which can give confidence that the sector will continue to play a key role in the Scottish economy. We have a skilled workforce, investment in world class science and technology and an innovative business base.

Ferry Services

Mr. Peter Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans she has to provide further financial support for ferry services between (a) Campbell town and Ballycastle and (b) Rosyth and Zeebrugge. [90390]

Mrs. Liddell: Decisions on financial support for the Campbeltown to Ballycastle ferry service are a matter for the Scottish Executive. I have no plans to provide financial support for the Rosyth-Zeebrugge ferry service. The Scottish Executive provided funding by means of a Freight Facilities Grant to the port operator, Forth Ports plc, for improvements to the port infrastructure at Rosyth.

Industrial Action/Illness

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many working days have been lost in her Department due to (a) industrial action and (b) illness in (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99, (iii) 1999–2000, (iv) 2000–01, (v) 2001–02 and (vi) 2002–03 to date. [93574]

Mrs. Liddell: The Scotland Office was established in its present form on 1 July 1999. No days have been lost due to industrial action. Details of working days lost due to illness are given in the following table:

Dates	Working days lost due to illness
1 July 1999 to 31 March 2000	396
1 April 2000 to 31 March 2001	662.5
1 April 2001 to 31 March 2002	601.5
1 April 2002 to 30 November 2002	479

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Infant Mortality

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what future funding plans the Medical Research Council has announced for research into reducing the number of baby deaths through (a) miscarriage, (b) premature birth, (c) still birth and (d) obstetrics. [93162]

Ms Hewitt: The MRC does not, as a rule, earmark funds for particular topics. Research proposals in all areas compete for the funding available. When appropriate, high quality research in the areas MRC is promoting may be given priority in competition for funds, but research excellence and importance to health continue to be the primary considerations in funding decisions. The MRC has not announced any future funding plans for research into reducing the number of baby deaths, but it always welcomes high quality applications for support into any aspect of human health.

The MRC spent an estimated £19.1 million in 2001–02 on its Reproductive health portfolio. Reproductive health research includes normal and abnormal fetal and placental development and growth, as well as conditions affecting pregnancy and childbirth.

Advisory Group on Nanotechnology Applications

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many times the Advisory Group on Nanotechnology Applications has met since April 2001; what its budget is for financial years 2003–4 and 2004–5; and if she will make a statement. [91957]

Ms Hewitt: The Group met on four occasions and also communicated between these meetings. The Group has now completed its work and has no budget.

DTI is currently finalising its policy on Nanotechnology and one of the steps will be to establish a Nanotechnology Strategic Advisory Group as a formal non-departmental public body.

Agency Workers Directive

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what research her Department has conducted into the potential (a) financial impact and (b) impact on employment of the implementation of the agency workers' directive in its present form. [93398]

Alan Johnson: The Department of Trade and Industry held a 16-week public consultation into the proposal for a directive, and has published a regulatory impact assessment of the proposal which provides an assessment of the potential costs and benefits for the UK. I have placed a copy of this in the Library of the House.

Business Environment Simplifications Taskforce

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who have been members of the Business Environment Simplification Taskforce since its inception; what (a) expenses and (b) salary each received; and if she will make a statement. [91662]

Mr. Wilson: The members of the European Commission's Business Environment Simplification Taskforce were as follows:

Prof Chris Evans (Chairman) (UK)
Dr Wolfgang Krebs (Austria)
Ms Kathy Vanhoorne (Belgium)
Mr Bjrn Meier (Denmark)
Mr Risto Suominen (Finland)
Mr Jean Prada (until 17/2/98) and Mr André Gauron (from 17/2/98) (France)
Mr Dieter Philipp (Germany)
Ms Antigone Lyberaki (Greece)
Mr Dominic Ellickson (Ireland)
Mr Carlo Borgomeo (Italy)
Mr Armand Berchem (Luxembourg)
Dr Elisabeth Steyger (Netherlands)
Mr Rui Gomes (Portugal)
Mrs Elisa Sainz Ruiz (Spain)
Mrs Camille Forslund (Sweden)

The Taskforce operated from October 1997 to April 1998, when it reported to the Commission. Details of whether the members were paid and the level of their expenses are not readily available from the European Commission.

I refer the hon. Member to my statement of 13 July 2000, Official Report, column 620W in response to the then hon. Member for Southport, in which I welcomed the Taskforce's recommendations. My right hon. Friend the Member for Derby South, who was President of the Board of Trade at the time they were published, had also welcomed the recommendations, which addressed improving the business environment in public administration, education and training, employment and working conditions, finance and research and innovation. Those recommendations have helped Member States and the Commission in their continued endeavours to promote enterprise and ease burdens on companies, particularly small- and medium-sized enterprises.

British Energy

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public money has been given to British Energy in each of the last five years; and what this money has been used for. [93682]

Mr. Wilson: On 9 September 2002 the Government agreed to provide British Energy with a credit facility for up to £410 million in respect of its working capital requirements and cash collateral for trading in the UK and North America. On the 26 September 2002 the Government agreed to extend the credit facility and increase it from £410 million up to £650 million. As of 24 January 2003, £418 million of the facility has been drawn down.

Capital Expenditure (Energy)

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the principal elements of planned (a) current and (b) capital expenditure for financial year 2002–03 on (i) post office and telecommunications, (ii) nuclear liabilities, (iii) aerospace, (iv) departmental capital and other minor programmes and (v) capital investment in energy as listed in tables 2 and 3 of her annual report for 2002–03 to 2003–04.Cm 5416; and if she will make a statement. [92793]

Ms Hewitt: The principal elements of planned expenditure in 2002–03 in these categories at the time of publication of the annual report (Cm 5416) are as follows:

£ million

	(a) Current	(b) Capital
(i) Post Office and Telecommunications
Modernisation of the Post Office network	70	—
(ii) Nuclear Liabilities
Decommissioning (non-cash) costs on UKAEA sites	84	—
Decommissioning (non-cash) costs on BNFL sites	112	—
Resource Consumption of UKAEA	20	—
UKAEA net capital receipts	—	(7)
(iii) Aerospace
Net expenditure on the Government's portfolio of Launch Investment Contracts	75	22

£ million

	(a) Current	(b) Capital
(iv) Departmental capital and other minor programmes
National Physical Laboratory capital expenditure	—	31
Radiocommunications Agency capital expenditure	—	12
(v) Capital investment in Energy
Renewable energy capital grant schemes	—	163

Commercial Policy (QMV)

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her policy is on the recommendation of Working Group VII of the European Convention that areas of commercial policy should be decided by Qualified Majority Vote. [91544]

Ms Hewitt: I am giving full consideration to the Convention's deliberations in co-ordination with my Ministerial colleagues. Many areas of commercial policy are already decided by QMV. Further moves on commercial policy cannot be considered in isolation and the full implications of these proposals, including their impact on trade policy, will need to be understood before UK position is finalised.

Consultations

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list consultations her department has conducted since 2 May 1997; and when each consultation (a) opened and (b) closed. [93799]

Ms Hewitt: Records relating to consultation documents issued before the introduction of the Cabinet Office Code of Practice on Written Consultations on 1 January 2001 are not held centrally. The list of consultations undertaken by the Department since 1 January 2001, and the dates they were opened and closed, are placed in the Libraries of the House.

Correspondence

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when she expects to reply to the correspondence from the hon. Member for Westmorland and Lonsdale of 13 January, regarding redundancies announced by Clarks at K Shoes in Kendal. [94016]

Ms Hewitt: A reply to your letter was sent on 28 January 2003.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the running costs of (a) the Department and (b) each of its sponsored agencies were in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90706]

Ms Hewitt: Detailed information on administration costs for the Department of Trade and Industry and its agencies, going back to 1998–99 and with projections to 2003–04, is set out in Table 5 of the 2002 departmental report (Cm 5416). Data for years before 1998–99 are not available on the same basis. Provisional outturn for gross and net administration costs limits were published in Public Expenditure 2001–02 Provisional Outturn (Cm 5574), Tables 4 and 5. Updated information, with plans to 2005–06, will be published in the 2003 departmental report in the spring.

Export Credits (Equitorial Guinea)

Mr. Hammond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment her Department has made (a) of the availability of ECGD support for investment in Equatorial Guinea and (b) of the adequacy of such support in relation to the current level of opportunity for British business investment in Equatorial Guinea. [92621]

Ms Hewitt: ECGD is able to offer Overseas Investment Insurance to protect UK direct investment in Equatorial Guinea against the risks of war, expropriation and restrictions on remittances. It will also consider approaches from UK exporters for cover under its "Good Projects" scheme which provides support for viable hard currency generating projects and relies on the use of structured finance techniques e.g. dedicated income streams and offshore escrow accounts.

ECGD recognises increasing demand from UK investors in and exporters to Equatorial Guinea, and a review of its risk assessment and cover policy is scheduled for the spring, following completion of the IMF's latest assessment of Equatorial Guinea.

Export Promotion Support

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial support is available for UK companies exhibiting abroad. [91843]

Ms Hewitt: British Trade International supports UK companies wishing to exhibit at overseas trade fairs through the Support for Exhibitions and Seminars Abroad (SESA) scheme. All UK businesses and organisations involved in exporting from the UK are eligible for support. Grant entitlement is currently limited to three participations in most countries (five in Japan, China (excluding Hong Kong), Russia and the USA).

The basic level of grant for eligible participants is 60 per cent. of their expenditure on stand space and stand construction up to a maximum of £2,300.

The scheme is over subscribed, resulting in restrictions on the number of exhibitions in the programme, and on the number of companies in each group. Estimated expenditure on supporting UK organisations exhibiting abroad during 2002–03 is £21 million.

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what financial support her Department gives to UK companies for the purpose of exchanging abroad; and what assessment she has made of support given by (a) France and (b) Germany to businesses based in those nations exhibiting abroad. [92356]

Ms Hewitt: British Trade International supports UK companies wishing to exhibit at overseas trade fairs through the Support for Exhibitions and Seminars Abroad (SESA) scheme. All UK businesses and organisations involved in exporting from the UK are eligible for support. Grant entitlement is currently limited to three participations in most countries (five in Japan, China (excluding Hong Kong), Russia and the USA).

The basic level of grant for eligible participants is 60 per cent. of their expenditure on stand space and stand construction up to a maximum of £2,300.

The scheme is over subscribed, resulting in restrictions on the number of exhibitions in the programme, and on the number of companies in each group. Estimated expenditure on supporting UK organisations exhibiting abroad during 2002–03 is £21 million.

The Director of Trade Partners UK, International Business Schemes attends twice yearly meetings of the West European Trade Facilitation Exhibitions Group (WETFEG) this forum is attended by a number of European State countries with similar schemes to SESA. Through this committee Trade Partners UK receive periodic reports from the member states on their various trade fair schemes and programmes. We are not aware of any assessment on the support given by France and Germany.

GATS

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the estimated impact of GATS on (a) the UK economy and (b) developing countries. [91355]

Ms Hewitt: The UK can expect to gain from commitments taken by other WTO Members, as this will provide a more stable and competitive environment for UK companies seeking to expand into new markets. Similarly, for developing countries, GATS commitments should help to attract foreign participation in their markets and bring new investment and technology, while commitments by developed countries should confirm market access for service sectors and modes of supply (notably movement of people) of interest to them.

Liberalisation is always a domestic policy choice. Governments will always weigh the risks and benefits in their assessment of what is in their overall interest. GATS negotiations cannot and will not force countries to make commitments where they choose not to do so.

Iraq (Export Credit Guarantee)

Jeremy Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what her estimate is of the potential export credit guarantee liability in respect of contracts entered into with companies in Iraq and the Government of Iraq; how much of this amount is in respect of military contracts; and what amount of export credit guarantee liability has been paid. [92338]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 21 January 2003]: ECGD has not underwritten any business with Iraq since early 1990. Claims of £623 million were paid and remain outstanding, however as these guarantees have expired there are no further liabilities.

Of the £600 million outstanding, around £26 million is in respect of equipment with potential defence applications, (e.g. communications equipment).

Post Office

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the state of negotiations between the National Federation of Sub Postmasters and Post Office Ltd. about the implementation of universal banking and the post office card account. [93377]

Ms Hewitt: Negotiations between the National Federation of Sub Postmasters and Post Office Ltd. are a matter for the two parties concerned.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much (a) her Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by her Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92259]

Ms Hewitt: For expenditure on advertising through COI from 1995–96 to 2000–01,1 refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Twickenham on 20 November 2001, Official Report, column 162W. Expenditure for 2001–02 and 2002–03 (to date) was £3,959,543 and £3,841,676 respectively. Information on publicity expenditure from centrally held budgets is contained in 'The Government's Expenditure Plans' which are available in the Libraries of the House.

Information on publicity and advertising by NDPBs is not held centrally and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Redundancies (Cumbria)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions she has had with (a) South Lakeland district council and (b) Cumbria county council regarding the redundancies recently announced by Clarks at K Shoes in Kendal. [94011]

Alan Johnson: The North West Development Agency (NWDA) are in close contact with South Lakeland district council officials to coordinate the response to the situation in Kendal. NWDA will also participate in a task force meeting, convened by Cumbria county council, to discuss the K Shoes redundancies on 31st January 2003.

Scotch Whisky

Mr. Donohoe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the outcome of her recent visit to India and Thailand, with particular reference to representations she made on behalf of the Scottish whisky industry. [93265]

Ms Hewitt: During my recent visit to India and Thailand, I raised the issue of taxation on spirits and beer with Mr. Arun Shourie, the Minister for Commerce and Industry in New Delhi, and the Thai Prime Minister, Dr. Thaksin, and Deputy Finance Minister, Mr. Suchart, in Bangkok.

Mr. Tim Jackson, of the Scotch Whisky Association, accompanied me on my visit to India as part of a UK trade delegation and during my call on the Thai Deputy Finance Minister.

He raised the concerns of the Scotch whisky industry, in relation to the Indian Market, direct with Mr. Shourie.

During the call on the Thai Deputy Finance Minister, Mr. Jackson offered to provide assistance to the relevant Thai authorities in their analysis of alternatives to ad valorem excise duties.

The Thai Deputy Minister of Finance indicated that it was his aim to overhaul the current regime on Scotch whisky. He expressed the hope that this would be soon.

Temporary Workers

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps her Department is taking to help improve the competitiveness of Britain's temporary worker market. [93399]

Alan Johnson: The Department of Trade and Industry is seeking to maintain a modern and effective regulatory framework for temporary agency work. To this end we have consulted on proposed changes to the conduct of employment agencies and employment business regulations, and also on the proposed European Union directive on temporary agency work.

Third-world Producers

Helen Southworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will support the right of poor country governments to provide targeted support and protection for their local producers. [91607]

Ms Hewitt: Flexibilities for developing countries (with additional flexibilities for the least developed countries) to retain some targeted support and protection for their local producers already exist within all WTO trade defence instruments agreed in the Uruguay Round.

The Government recognise that trade reform can have significant adverse effects on particular sectors and groups, especially in the short-term. This is why it is important that trade reform is accompanied by complementary policies to manage the process of change and integration into the world trading system. This may include some measures to promote indigenous industrial development. But the evidence of the benefits of specific tariff protection is mixed so the Government do not see it as a particularly useful tool to foster economic growth and therefore poverty reduction. Greater protectionism by developing countries limits the opportunities for poor countries to trade both with each other and with developed countries, excluding them further from the benefits of international trade.

The Government also believe that existing WTO agreements should take better account of countries' specific development needs. Therefore, within the current Doha Development Agenda negotiations we support the further development of Special and Differential Treatment provisions to assist developing countries to integrate into the world trading system.

Trade Liberalisation

Mr. Challen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress has been made in the GATS negotiations with ensuring that impact assessments are made on the liberalisation of trade. [91352]

Ms Hewitt: The negotiating guidelines and procedures drawn up by WTO members for the current GATS negotiations call for impact assessment to be an on-going activity of the Council, with the negotiations adjusted in the light of the results of the assessment.

In March 2002, the Services Council held a two-day symposium devoted to impact assessment. All the papers tabled for that symposium are publicly available on the WTO website at http://www.wto.org/english/tratop—e/serv—e/symp—assessment—serv—march02—e.htm.

UK Space Strategy

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the objectives of the UK Space Strategy 1999 to 2002 were met; and if she will make a statement. [91656]

Ms Hewitt: The objectives set out in the United Kingdom Space Strategy 1999 to 2002, 'New Frontiers', were: to help industry maximise profitable business opportunities in the development and exploitation of space systems which improve the quality of life and enhance choice for consumers; to pursue the highest quality astronomy and space science; to improve our understanding of the Earth's environment and natural resources; to foster the development of innovative technology, its commercial exploitation and its application to research; and to communicate the results and their significance to a broad audience.

I am satisfied that we have made good progress towards each of these objectives. The Strategy included a large number of key actions to monitor the implementation of the Strategy. Details of the actions and progress made have been made publicly available on the BNSC website: www.bnsc.gov.uk

These long-term objectives have been further refined. I published a new draft Strategy for public consideration on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 13WS. This further focuses on the use of space systems throughout the economy. Copies of the draft Strategy have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses and the text is available on the BNSC website. We aim to publish the final Strategy later this year.

TRANSPORT

Airport Capacity

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will complete his review of airport capacity in the south east of England. [93610]

Mr. Spellar: The consultation period, throughout the UK, has been extended until we have consulted on Gatwick runway options. We intend to issue a revised south east consultation paper next month. The consultation period will then run for four months after the date of publication of the new material. Those who have already responded to the consultation will be able to amend, add to, or replace their response having considered the new material, if they wish to do so.

All responses to the consultation will be considered and analysed carefully before final decisions are taken. These will be set out in an air transport White Paper, which we aim to publish towards the end of the year.

Bicyclists

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, if he will bring forward proposals to sections 28 and 29 of the Road Traffic Act 1988 so that the provisions in respect of dangerous or careless riding of bicycles apply to bicycles ridden on a public footpath which is not adjacent to a road. [94053]

Mr. Jamieson: This amendment is not necessary as a public footpath is a highway and therefore a 'road' for the purposes of sections 28 and 29 of the Road Traffic Act 1988.

Correspondence

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to reply to the letter of the hon. Member for Reigate and East Surrey of 17 December 2002, concerning Redhill Aerodrome. [93785]

Mr. Jamieson: The letter to which the hon. Member refers was received in the Department on 30 December 2002 and acknowledged on the same day. A reply was sent on 27 January 2003.

Emissions

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate his Department has made of carbon dioxide emissions from transport from 1997 to 2002; and if he will make a statement. [93824]

Mr. Jamieson: Carbon dioxide emissions from transport between 1997 and 2001 (including from domestic aviation) were estimated to be as follows:

Million tonnes of carbon

	By 'end user'	By 'source'
1997	39	36
1998	39	36
1999	39	36
2000	39	35
2001	n/a	34

'End user' figures include a share of the emissions from fuel processing industries and the combustion of fossil fuels at power stations, whereas the 'source' figures do not. The 1997 to 2000 figures are published in "Transport Statistics Great Britain, 2002 Edition" and are obtained from the National Environmental Technology Centre (NETCEN). Only 'source' figures are available for 2001 and these are provisional estimates derived from DTIs "Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics 20022. No estimates are available yet for 2002.

Illegal Immigrants

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many illegal immigrants were recorded as entering the UK via UK ports in each year since 1997, broken down by region; and what the estimates were in each year. [93242]

Beverley Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that information on the number of illegal immigrants recorded as entering at UK ports is not available.

Light Aircraft

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to reduce noise from light aircraft using grass airstrips in rural England. [93696]

Mr. Jamieson: Light aircraft have to comply with an internationally agreed noise certification standard, unless they were on the UK register prior to 1980. This standard was tightened for aircraft certificated after 1999. There are currently no plans for additional measures to reduce aircraft noise from light aircraft using grass airstrips in rural England. It is the responsibility of all aerodromes to ensure that appropriate rules are set and enforced to minimise noise nuisance.

M60 (Flooding)

Andrew Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions flooding has occurred on the stretch of the M60 between Denton and Hollinwood since it opened; how many accidents on this stretch have been attributed to flooding; who designed this stretch of motorway; what plans he has to undertake work to rectify design faults; and what estimate he has made of the cause of flooding in each case. [93420]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mr. Andrew Bennett, dated 29 January 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, to reply to your recent question about flooding on the M60 Motorway between Demon and Hollinwood.

Since the M60 opened m October 2000, there have been no recorded occurrences of flooding caused by either failures of the motorway drainage system or overflow from external water courses. What has happened is that during periods of intense rainfall, excess water can collect on the surface of the carriageway.

Whilst we are not aware of any accidents that have occurred as a result, there are anecdotal reports from drivers that this is a matter of concern.

The section of motorway between Denton and Medlock was designed on behalf of the Highways Agency by Mouchel Consulting Ltd. The remaining length to Hollinwood was the subject of a Design and Build contract undertaken by Balfour Beatty who used Gifford and Partners to advise on the design.

At present, we are not aware of any design faults to which the excess water could be attributed. However, mindful of our duty of care towards motorway users, suitable warning signs were erected in Autumn last year. Additionally, and working with Greater Manchester Police, we have made use of variable message signing which is currently being used to good effect by encouraging drivers to slow down and take extra care in wet conditions.

Investigations are currently in hand to identify causes of the surface water problems and I will write to you again when we have a clearer picture.

Rail Crime

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many crimes have been committed against passengers on British Rail lines in the past five years. [93825]

Mr. Jamieson: The British Transport Police (BTP) have provided me with the following information.

	2001–02	2000–01	1999–2000	1998–99
Violent Crime	4,737	4,726	4,652	4,084
Sexual Offences	718	647	751	789
Theft of passenger property	16,918	15,194	14,661	12,725
Robbery	2,625	2,109	1,813	1,612
Public Disorder Offences	1,712	1,585	1,691	1,796
Motor vehicle/cycle offences	13,197	13,044	13.460	14,895
Total	39,907	37,305	37,028	35,901

These figures are for offences reported to the BTP for the rail network that they police, less London Underground. The figures for 1997–98 were recorded using different Home Office rules that would not be comparable with the figures for subsequent years.

Road Deaths

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) people (b) children under 15 and (c) cyclists were killed on Britain's roads in each of the last 10 years; and if he will make a statement. [93096]

Mr. Jamieson: The table shows the number of fatalities in the All, Child (0–14) and Cyclist categories in each year since 1992.

Road accident fatalities: GB 1992–2001

Casualties	All	Child	Cyclists
1992	4,229	268	204
1993	3,814	270	186
1994	3,650	265	172
1995	3,621	230	213
1996	3,598	211	203
1997	3,599	228	183
1998	3,421	179	158
1999	3,423	196	172
2000	3,409	162	127
2001	3,450	185	138

[1] Fatalities aged 0–14.

During the period 1992–2001 there has been a steady downward trend in the number of people killed and seriously injured on our roads. This has been achieved despite an increase in road traffic (including pedal cycles) since 1992 of 15 per cent.

Road Quietening

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road quietening schemes that are being examined by his Department in Hull and the East Riding. [93821]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mr. David Davis, dated 29 January 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, 10 reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for a list of road quietening schemes that are being examined by his Department in Hull and the East Riding.

The Highways Agency is working to achieve the Government's commitment to deliver the target of resurfacing 60% of the trunk road and motorway network with low noise surfacing by 2011. This includes resurfacing all concrete roads. Within Hull and the East Riding there are two sections of concrete roads, both on the M62 Motorway, between Gilberdyke and Newport, and Balkholme and Gilberdyke. Some preliminary design work has been undertaken on schemes for these sections of road. There is also a section of concrete carriageway on the M18 Motorway between Junctions 6 and 7, which falls partly within the East Riding. The timing of resurfacing work will depend on when road maintenance is required.

In addition, the Agency regularly reviews the trunk road and motorway network to identify the need for maintenance. At present, we envisage undertaking the following maintenance schemes within the next four years and will be considering the use of quieter surfaces:

M62

Junction 35 to Langham

A63

M62 to South Cave

South Cave to Welton

Western Interchange to Brighton Street

I hope this is helpful. If you would like any further information you may wish to contact the Agency's Area Manager for Hull and the East Riding, Mick Spink, on 0113 283 5397, or you can email him at mick.spink@highwavs.gsi.gov.uk

Thames Valley Multi-modal Study

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the annual capital sums are which are planned within the budget for transport over 10 years announced in the Thames Valley multi-modal study. [93612]

Mr. Spellar: The capital measures recommended by the Thames Valley Multi-Modal Study have been estimated by the consultants to cost £1.1 billion over an implementation period to 2018. Subject to the Government's response to the recommendations, the annual capital costs will depend on decisions about the phasing and construction of recommended schemes.

Train Franchises

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many train franchises were (a) renewed and (b) let in the last year; and what the average duration of those new franchises is. [93609]

Mr. Spellar: The following franchises were renewed or re-let in 2002. The table shows the type of extension/renewal/re-letting and the duration.

Train operator	Re-letting etc. (date)	Duration
Chiltern railways	18 February 2002	Until 2012, 2017 or 2022 depending upon the achievement of contractual terms
GNER	16 January 2002	Extension of two years to April 2005
South West Trains	6 November 2002	Extension of one year to February 2004 in order that negotiations about extension of the franchise for a further three years may continue

TREASURY

Flooding

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he plans to introduce an extra tax for property owners whose dwellings are threatened by persistent flooding. [92857]

Mr. Boateng: As stated in the 2002 Spending Review White Paper, the Government are building on the work of the flood and coastal defence funding review to explore options for putting in place new funding mechanisms and simplifying the administration of flood defences. An announcement on any reforms to the administration or funding of flood defence will be made in due course.

Diversity Objectives

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the diversity objectives set by each senior civil servant within his Department for the latest year available; and if he will make a statement. [93443]

John Healey: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the Financial Secretary to the hon. Member for North Norfolk (Norman Lamb) on 13 January 2003, Official Report, column 414W.

Health and Safety Accidents (Treasury)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the health and safety accidents which occurred in HM Treasury in 2001–02, stating the reason for each accident; and if he will make a statement. [93450]

John Healey: There were 27 minor health and safety accidents in the period concerned, of which 11 involved Treasury staff and 16 involved contractors working in HM Treasury.

Information Technology Skills

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the credit incentives from learning providers about higher level information technology skills; and what financial incentives his Department is planning to encourage individuals to undertake training. [93368]

John Healey: The Chancellor and other Treasury Ministers have received representations on skills issues from a variety of organisations, including learning providers. The Government are currently reviewing the funding of adult learning, including the role of financial incentives. This review will feed into the National Skills Strategy, which will be published in the summer.

Office of Government Commerce

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reasons underlie the reduction in expenditure by the Office of Government Commerce between 2001–02 and 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [93441]

Mr. Boateng: The level of resource consumption estimated for 2001 -02 for the Office of Government Commerce (OGC) in the latest H.M. Treasury Departmental Report (Cm5425) was £88 million, reducing to a planned -£5million in 2002–03. The actual level of resource consumption in 2001–02 was £6million. The change between the estimated and actual outturns for 2001–02 is largely accounted for by a revaluation to and change in timing of the run down of some of the provisions the OGC holds in respect of its obligation to dispose of the Government's remaining surplus Residual Civil Estate. The change in the timing will also affect the outturn for 2002–03 where it is now anticipated that the likely outturn will be some £50 million. Such fluctuations in the valuations of and timing for the sale of the remaining surplus Estate, which reflect market conditions and opportunities, can be expected to continue in the future, although on a smaller scale as the size of the remaining Residual Estate continues to reduce. The actual change in resource consumption between years also reflects a reduction in the level of income the OGC generates .

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Department and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93504]

John Healey: Information on absenteeism is not available. Unauthorised absence is recorded as unpaid leave along with authorised unpaid absence (such as maternity leave or career breaks) and cannot be disaggregated.

Information on sickness absence covering the Treasury, Customs and Excise, the Valuation Office Agency, Inland Revenue, the Department for National Savings, the Government Actuary Department and the Office for National Statistics is published by the Cabinet Office in their annual reports on "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service".

Information since 1994 from those reports is as follows:

Average working days absence per staff-year

	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Customs and Excise	8.3	9.6	9.1	8.9	9.4	9.6	9.0	8.7
Inland Revenue	9.6	10.8	10.8	11.9	11.0	11.5	10.9	9.5

HM Treasury	7.0	8.4	5.1	4.9	5.3	5.5	3.9	4.7

Information for the Royal Mint and the Debt Management Office is as follows:

Average working days absence per staff-year

	1994	1995	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Royal Mint	7.5	8.2	8.0	5.8	6.3	6.5	5.4	5.9
Debt Management Office	—	—	—	—	0	0.5	0.3	1.1

Information for 2002 will be announced in due course. Sick absence targets for Customs and Excise, Inland Revenue, Valuation Office Agency, ONS and HM Treasury are reported in the relevant departmental or annual reports. These are available on the relevant websites. Targets for DNS, GAD and the Royal Mint are in the following table. The DMO are reviewing their sick management policies.

	Sick absence target
DNS	4.3 working days by 2003
GAD	7.5 working days by end of March 2003.
Royal Mint	6.3 days for non-industrial staff for 2003

Tax Regime

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will change the Inland Revenue regime for life insurance and tax exempt savings plans; and when he will next meet the Association of Friendly Societies. [93974]

John Healey: The Sandler review of the market for medium and long-term retail savings, which was published last July, recommended two changes to the regime for taxing life insurance products. These changes are the abolition of qualifying policies and the replacement of the so-called 5 per cent. tax-deferral rule which applies to withdrawals.

As we announced in the Pre-Budget Report, the Government are considering these proposals as part of the Budget process and is discussing their implications with the insurance industry and friendly society movement. I understand that the Association of Friendly Societies (AFS) has been in frequent contact with Treasury and Inland Revenue officials. I am not aware of any recent request from the AFS for a meeting with Treasury Ministers.

Unemployment (Fife)

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the latest figure is for unemployment in the Fife region for (a) men, (b) women, (c) men over 50 and (d) women over 50. [93558]

John Healey: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. MacDougall, dated 29 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your Parliamentary Question about unemployment in Fife. (93558)

The local Labour Force Survey for March 2001 to February 2002 (not yet adjusted for the 2001 Census) shows an estimated 15,000 unemployed people resident in the Fife local authority district. No figures by age and sex are available as the sample sizes are too small to provide reliable estimates.

The Office for National Statistics also compiles claimant count statistics for local areas of people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance. The following table shows the figures for Fife in December 2002.

Claimant count in Fife local authority district—not seasonally adjusted (December 2002)

	Men	Women
Total claimants	6,499	1,931
Age 50 and over	1,229	376

Written Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of written parliamentary questions received by his Department in 2001–02 were not answered substantively within (a) two weeks, (b) one month and (c) three months; and if he will make a statement. [93445]

John Healey: Treasury Ministers attach importance to answering parliamentary questions promptly. In the 2001–02 session, 4,618 of the 5,888 written questions to the Treasury (78.4 per cent.) received substantive replies on or before the due date for answering. 111 (1.9 per cent. of the total) had not been answered within two weeks, 57 (1.0 per cent.) within one month and 43 (0.7 per cent.) within three months. In the 2002[en rule]03 session to date, 76.7 per cent. of all written questions have been answered on time.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Paul Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will set out for each quarter from September 2000 (a) how many applications for attendance allowance have been received, and of those how many were (i) successful, (ii) unsuccessful, (iii) subject to appeal and (iv) successful at appeal, (b) what the average processing time has been for attendance allowance for (i) first-time claims and (ii) appeals for claims to be reconsidered, (c) how many applications for attendance allowance have (i) been subject to reconsideration and (ii) successful at reconsideration, and what was the average number of days taken to process appeals, and (d) how many (i) claims, (ii) reviews, (iii) reconsiderations and (iv) appeals there were on which a decision had not been reached at the end of each quarter of the last three years. [89826]

Maria Eagle: Such information as can reliably be made available is contained in the table. Information is not available on claims, reviews, reconsiderations and appeals on which a decision had not been reached (part (d) of the question).

Benefits Agency (Fraud)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent guidelines he has issued in respect of the (a) disciplinary measures and (b) criminal proceedings to be imposed when staff of the Benefits Agency are found to have committed fraud. [92505]

Malcolm Wicks: In December 2002 the Department issued a revised disciplinary policy to all staff which outlined the guidelines to be issued in all cases of serious and minor misconduct, including internal fraud. The policy is supported by separate guidance produced for individuals and managers and includes categories of disciplinary offences and the range and duration of penalties.

Guidance outlining the circumstances when criminal proceedings should be considered is regularly reviewed and updated as appropriate.

Call Centres

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the telephone call centres that provide services for his Department and its agencies, indicating in each case (a) who is responsible for operating the centre, (b) how many staff work in the centre and (c) what the cost of the centre was in the last 12 months to his Department and its agencies. [88448]

Mr. McCartney: The available information has been placed in the Library. This information is not routinely collected or validated centrally. Many DWP call centre services are integrated with the Department's core functions to varying degrees and this has made it difficult to disaggregate some staff functions and costs or to provide details on a consistent basis. The figures provided should, therefore, be read with reference to the explanatory notes that it has been necessary to provide for most returns.

Disability Living Allowance

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many recipients of higher level disability living allowance there are in (a) England, (b) Scotland, (c) Wales and (d) Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [92795]

Maria Eagle: The information requested is contained in the table. Disability Living Allowance is divided into two components: care, which has three rates; and mobility, which has two.

Number of people receiving the highest rate care component and the higher rate mobility component of Disability Living Allowance at 31 August 2002

Northern Ireland	38.3	83.8

Gas Pipes

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of the gas network has metal mains pipes. [87482]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I am informed by the Health and Safety Executive that there are approximately 275,000 km of gas main in Transco's network of which approximately 55 per cent. of the total length are metal i.e. 151,000 km.

Government Subsidised Training

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what research he has (a) commissioned and (b) received into the length of time which individuals on average practise a particular trade or occupation after receiving Government subsidised training in it. [93560]

Mr. Nicholas Brown [holding answer 27 January 2003]: The objective of our policies is to help jobless people, particularly the most disadvantaged, move into and remain in employment. Initiatives such as the New Deals and Work Based Learning for Adults are helping to achieve this. Some of those helped into work by government programmes may change their jobs or occupations at a later date. However, the skills and confidence they have gained through participation in our programmes will stand them in good stead in the current dynamic labour market. Success, therefore, should be measured by the improvement in the level of employment. This has increased by 1.3 million since 1997 and now stands at 27.8 million.

There has been no specific research into the length of time individuals stay in a particular occupation after receiving Government subsidised training. However, we have commissioned a study into Work Based Learning for Adults that will examine the impact of a subsidised training programme on client outcomes.

Grants

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will list the grants funded by his Department for which individual members of the public and organisations may apply; and if he will make a statement as to (a) the total of such funding in the last financial year, (b) the total number of awards and (c) their administrative costs. [82197]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Our objectives are to fight poverty, create opportunity for all and help people become self sufficient and independent. Jobcentre Plus and The Pension Service administer adiverse range of grant schemes, usually linked to specific life events such as maternity or bereavement, to which individual members of the public can apply for help. Grants are also available to help people lead independent lives in the community.

In addition the Department works in partnership with a number of grant aided organisations. However we do not administer any grant schemes which are open to application by outside organisations.

Information on administration costs is currently not available in the format requested. The Department now accounts for its administration and benefit expenditure by Strategic Objective, as set out in its Public Service Agreements (PSA), and by individual Requests for Resources (RfRs) as set out in the Departmental Estimates and Accounts.

Information relating to the principal grant schemes administered by the Department in 2001–02 is in the table.

	2001–02 Expenditure (£ million)	Number of awards
Sure Start Maternity Grant[1]	61.2	201,000
Funeral payments [1]	38.4	42,000
Community Care Grants [1]	102.6	233,000
Job Grant[2]	5.3	530,000

Incomes (Kendal)

Mr. Collins: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of the population of the Kendal travel-to-work-area had an income (a) below, (b) at and (c) above the national average in each of the past five years. [94817]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The information requested is not available.

Minimum Income Guarantee

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if the 34-page version of 'Review Claim Form A2' continues to be issued to Minimum Income Guarantee claimants. [88202]

Mr. McCartney: The review claim form A2 continues to be used when reviewing certain Minimum Income Guarantee (MIG) claims. It is completed, for example, when the claimant is in receipt of another income such as occupational pension, has capital, or receives Invalid Care Allowance or Attendance Allowance. It was used in around 10 per cent. of MIG claims in 2001–02 and was completed by a member of DWP staff in two thirds of these cases. Help to complete the form is available to everyone.

David Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many pensioners in Telford benefit from the Minimum Income Guarantee. [93283]

Mr. McCartney: As at August 2002 there were 2,900 people benefiting from the Minimum Income Guarantee in the Telford constituency.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what his estimate is of the total expenditure by his Department on ministerial travel (a) in the UK and (b) abroad, in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92474]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, Mr. Alexander, on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many companies offered occupational pension schemes on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) 1 May 2002. [93002]

Mr. McCartney: The information is not available.

Some information on the proportion of private sector employers that offer occupational pension schemes can be found from the DWP Employers1 Pension Provision survey, which has been conducted in 1994, 1996, 1998 and 2000. Results from these surveys have been published and are available in the Library.

The table is a reproduction of Table 4.2 of 'Employers Pension Provision Survey 2000', by Alison Smith and Stephen McKay, DWP Research Report no. 163.

Notes:

1. COMBS schemes (contracted-out on a mixed benefit basis) were not available until April 1997. Top Hat schemes are those set up for senior managers or only currently available to senior management.
2. Figures for 1997 are not available. There was no survey in 2002 but a survey for 2003 is currently being undertaken.
3. Methodological improvements to the survey between 1996 and 2000 mean that results are not strictly comparable across years. A detailed explanation of these improvements is given on pages 45–46 of the publication referred to above.
4. Data are only available in the form of proportions, rather than numbers of employers.
5. Results refer to private sector employers only.
6. Companies may offer more than one type of pension scheme.

Pension Credit

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of the likely take-up of the new pension credit; and how many questions pensioners will be required to answer to assess their eligibility. [93884]

Mr. McCartney: We have committed to a target of paying pension credit to at least three million pensioner households by 2006. We have already shortened the minimum income guarantee claim form from 40 to 10 pages. We are designing the pension credit application process to be even simpler, including use of the telephone for most applications. The number of questions that a pensioner is required to answer in order to assess their eligibility to pension credit will depend on their individual circumstances.

Pensioner Poverty

Mr. Graham Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what recent representations he has received about pensioner poverty. [89715]

Maria Eagle: The Department receives representations about pensioner poverty on an ongoing basis and also meets with Partnership Against Poverty group regularly.

Providing a decent income is the key to tackling pensioner poverty and from April, no pensioner will have to get by on less than £102.10 a week (£155.80 for married couples).

Pensions

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on his policy on the annual upgrading of retirement pensions for British citizens living in (a) Barbados and (b) Canada. [88792]

Mr. McCartney: We uprate State Pensions for British citizens living overseas where there is a legal requirement or a reciprocal social security agreement to do so.

The UK has a reciprocal agreement with Barbados that provides for British pensioners living in that country to be paid the same rate of State Pension as would be paid if they lived in the UK. However, although there is a social security arrangement with the Canadian Government, it does not allow for the payment of UK benefits to persons in Canada and contains no similar provision on the uprating of State Pensions.

The uprating of State Pensions abroad is the subject of a Court of Appeal hearing set for 24–25 March 2003. This is an appeal against the High Court's finding that the UK Government are not in breach of the European Convention on Human Rights by not annually uprating the State Pension in countries where there is no agreement to do so.

Retirement Age

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what discussions he has had with interested groups on plans to make the retirement age for men and women equal. [87364]

Mr. McCartney: The UK has a fixed age for eligibility to State Pension (currently 60 for women and 65 for men, although to be equalised at 65 for both sexes as from 2020). We do not have a national mandatory retirement age. Sex discrimination legislation prohibits employers from setting different retirement ages for men and women.

A variety of representations have been received from a range of organisations and individuals about the equalisation of State Pension Age, the bulk of which would have been dealt with at the time of the previous administration. A discussion document "Options for Equality in State Pension Age" was published in December 1991. A White Paper "Equality in State Pension Age" followed in December 1993.

Plans to equalise the State Pension age progressively over the period 2010 to 2020, were enacted by the 1995 Pensions Act.

We are also committed to implementing the age strand of the European Employment Directive by 2006, when domestic legislation will come into force outlawing age discrimination in employment and training. Under the Directive, employers' compulsory retirement ages are likely to be unlawful unless they are objectively justified.

Transco

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what punitive action was provided for prior to March 2002 by (a) statute and (b) regulation against Transco for failure to fulfil its statutory obligations to reassess its engineers' qualification to the Approved Competency Standard, and to provide an emergency service to domestic premises. [91403]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: In March 1997, Transco was registered with Corgi and all its emergency service operatives were deemed to hold valid certification under the Health and Safety Commission's Approved Code of Practice (ACOP) scheme, the sole means of demonstrating safety competence then in force. As this certification was valid for five years, no action could have been taken against Transco up to March 2002.

If Transco were to breach legal requirements in this area, there is a range of enforcement action available to HSE under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1994, ranging from the provision of advice to the serving of an enforcement notice and, ultimately, prosecution.

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when the Approved Competency Standard ceased to be the qualification required by Transco for its engineers engaged in safety work in domestic premises. [91406]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Since 1998, competency standards have been incorporated in the Nationally Accredited Certification Scheme for Individual Gas Fitting Operatives (ACS). However, a new National Vocational Qualification, developed by the Gas and Water Industries National Training Organisation (GWINTO), was launched in 2002, and includes competence assessments that, with regard to gas safety matters, are aligned with those of the ACS.

Transco has a duty to meet the requirements of the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1998 with regard to gas work downstream of the emergency control valve immediately before the meter. It has to ensure that its operatives who undertake this work are competent to do it safely. The accepted means for determining competence is for operatives to be assessed against recognised national standards on a five-yearly cycle. Standards were originally set under a Health and Safety Commission Approved Code of Practice (ACOP). All Transco engineers engaged in safety work in domestic premises hold valid certificates of competence under one or other of these schemes, and accordingly, meet the registration conditions laid down by the Council for Registered Gas Installers (CORGI).

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what percentage of work under the safety case is performed by non-Transco employees; and who bears statutory responsibility for the quality of that work. [91407]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: The percentage of work performed by non-Transco employees may vary and is not prescribed in Transco's safety case. However, the safety case contains details of Transco's health and safety management system, which includes arrangements for the management of contractors.

Both Transco and their contractors have a statutory responsibility for ensuring work carried out is such that it will not, so far as is reasonably practicable, expose either its own employees or others to risks to their health and safety.

Unemployment

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions if he will make a statement on unemployment in (a) Romford, (b) the London Borough of Havering and (c) Greater London. [90300]

Mr. Nicholas Brown: Our policies have created a strong economy geared to delivering stability, low inflation and have helped deliver a high and stable level of employment benefiting every part of the country. Alongside this, through Jobcentre Plus and programmes such as the New Deal, our labour market policies promote attachment to the job market.

Our success is reflected in the fall in the unemployment figures for London, the London Borough of Havering and for Romford which are in the table:

Claimant unemployment (not seasonally adjusted)

	December 1997	December 2002	Percentage fall
Romford	1,093	835	24
London borough of Havering	3,295	2,350	29
Greater London	234,000	166,000	29

CABINET OFFICE

Government Car Service

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office whether a Minister's spouse or partner may use a Government car for official engagements when not accompanied by the Minister. [94992]

Mr. Alexander: The rules on the use of an official car by a Minister's spouse or partner are set out in "Travel by Ministers".

Press Releases

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many press releases have been issued by his Department in each (a) year and (b) quarter from 1995–96 to 2002–03; and if he will make a statement. [92427]

Mr. Alexander: The number of press releases issued by the Cabinet Office since 1995 is as follows:

1995—128
1996—135
1997—189
1998—277
1999—343
2000—381
2001—196
2002—106

The figures for 1999 and 2000 include press releases issued by the Year 2000 Media Co-ordination Unit, which was operating from the Cabinet Office. Most of these figures will also include press releases issued on behalf of the Privy Council Office, which have only been separately identifiable since 1 January 2002.

Lists and copies of Cabinet Office press releases issued from 1999 are available at http://www.cabinet-office.gov.uk.

Providing quarterly figures since 1995–96 could be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Public Appointments

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to extend the opportunities for members of the public to receive appointments to public bodies, task forces and ad hoc advisory committees. [93388]

Mr. Alexander: As Cabinet Office Minister responsible for public appointments, work is currently under way in my Department on a new website, through which people will be able to get details of current and prospective public appointment vacancies across Departments. This new website will enable people to search on the basis of topic, Government Department, location of the body etc. and will be linked through to the job specification and how to apply. The new website will be complemented by a biannual newsletter so that access to the internet is not a barrier. The website and newsletter will be available in the course of the year.

Individual Departments are responsible for appointments to the public bodies they sponsor, and for setting up and organising the membership of specific task forces and ad hoc advisory committees.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2000–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92230]

Mr. Alexander: Details of my Department's spend on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1997–98 to 2001–02 can be found in the table. Information prior to 1997–98 is not held on the Department's accounting system and is therefore available only at disproportionate costs.

£ thousand

Year	Publicity	Advertising
1997–98	472	144
1998–99	1,634	138
1999–2000	2,551	262
2000–01	1,803	464
2001–02	4,260	2,708

The estimated spend on publicity and advertising in 2002–03 is £2,106,000. This is based on actual expenditure incurred up to and including December and forecast expenditure for the remaining months of the financial year. It is not possible to separate out the publicity costs from the advertising costs without incurring disproportionate cost.

Expenditure incurred by non-departmental public bodies sponsored by my Department are not held on our accounting system and is therefore available only at disproportionate cost.

The increase in publicity expenditure between 1997–98 and 1999–00 is due to expenditure in connection with Year 2000 compliance awareness.

The increase in publicity expenditure from 2000–01 to 2001–02 from £1,803 to £4,260,000 is due to expenditure of £2,670,000 incurred by the Office of the E-Envoy for the UK Online advertising campaign, offering help to people wanting to use the internet.

The increase in advertising expenditure from 1998–99 to 2000–01 from £138,000 to £464,000 is due to expenditure on recruitment advertising for posts within the Department. These posts range from administration and junior management level through to the senior civil service. Also included is recruitment advertising expenditure for specialist placements within the Government Information and Development Centre.

The advertising figure for 2001–02 includes £2,491,000 incurred in by the Office of the E-Envoy for the UK Online advertising campaign, offering help to people wanting to use the internet.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Department and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93508]

Mr. Alexander: Absenteeism is defined as unauthorised absence for which pay would be stopped. The Cabinet Office (and agencies) keep records of unpaid absence generally but they also include authorised absence. Separating the records could be achieved only at disproportionate costs.

Sick absence figures for government departments are published annually in the report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service" . The most recent report for calendar year 2001 was announced by Ministerial Statement 19 December 2002. Copies are available in the Libraries of the House. Figures for 2002 will be announced later this year.

Cabinet Office figures (including its agencies and non-departmental public bodies) are

	Days per staff year
1993	7.3
1994	6.3
1995	7.7
1996	6.4
1997	6.6
1998	7.3
1999	6.8
2000	4.6
2001	5.7

Figures for 1990–92 are not available.

Our target for reducing sick absence is no more than 6.0 days per staff year by the end of 2003

Previous targets, which were achieved, were no more than

7.4 days per staff year in 1998

6.4 days per staff year by 2001

The Cabinet Office is committed to achieving its targets and has in place sick absence management procedures recommended by the 1998 report "Working Well Together—Managing Attendance in the Public Sector".

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what level of funds unallocated to good causes has been held by each of the Lottery fund distributors in each of the past five years; what percentage of their total balance this represented in each year; and if she will make a statement. [94138]

Mr. Caborn: All funds held in the National Lottery Distribution Fund (NLDF) are allocated to one of the Good Causes. Information regarding funds not yet committed to projects by each distributing body is only readily available in the form requested for the past three years. The figures in the following table show the position at the end of each of the last three completed financial years.

Note:

A negative figure in the table appears where a distributing body's commitments exceed its balance. The figure in the 'Total' row for uncommitted funds is the sum of the positive amounts only. Negative figures have been treated as zero in these calculations.

Although some distributing bodies have funds in their NLDF balances which are not yet assigned to projects, the collective allocation of the 15 bodies is more than the total NLDF balance. The total level of commitment at September 2002, the latest date for which figures are available, stood at £3.99 billion, £470 million more than the balance of the NLDF at that time.

The question of how best to deliver Lottery money most effectively was a part of the recent consultation exercise on Lottery Distribution Policy carried out by my Department. Proposals arising from this exercise will be published later this year.

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what assessment she has made of the variation in expenditure relative to revenue received of the Lottery income distributing bodies; and if she will make a statement. [94139]

Mr. Caborn: There are significant differences between the 15 Lottery Distributing Bodies in terms of the nature of their activities and the type and timescale of the projects that they support.

There are therefore good reasons why different bodies will draw down funds raised for them at different rates. DCMS is working with the distributors to encourage and facilitate greater commitment of Lottery funds and the faster expenditure of committed money. This must however be consistent with the principles of good financial management and accountability.

At 30 September 2002, the distributors collectively had made commitments, with varying degrees of firmness, totalling 3.99 billion while the amount held in the National Lottery Distribution Fund (NLDF) at this time was 3.52 billion.

Nick Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations she has received concerning the accountability of the Lottery Fund distributing bodies and their application processes to (a) applicants, (b) the public and (c) her Department; what assessment she has made of them; and if she will make a statement. [94140]

Mr. Caborn: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has from time to time received representations about the accountability of the Lottery distributors and their application processes. The Accounting Officer of a Lottery distributor is accountable to both the Department's Permanent Secretary and to Parliament for the proper and prudent expenditure of funds, and distributors' activities are subject to external audit by the National Audit Office. As Lottery proceeds allocated to distributors are public money, the general principles of Government Accounting must be applied in the design and implementation of systems for the distribution of that money. Each Lottery distributing body must, under the terms of its financial directions, publish and make available guidance on how to apply for funds.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in her Department and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for her Department; and if she will make a statement. [93509]

Dr. Howells: Cabinet Office publishes an annual report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service". The most recently published figures for the calendar year 2001 were announced by Ministerial Statement on 19 December 2002, and copies placed in the Libraries of the House.

For DCMS and the Royal Parks Agency the 2001 average working days sickness absence per staff year figures were:

	Certified sickness	Self-certification	Total	Staff years
DCMS	3.8	2.1	5.9	420
Royal Parks Agency	2.5	11.0	13.5	229

The 1999, 2000 and 2001 reports are available on the Cabinet Office website www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/civilservice/publications/sickness/index.htm The sickness absence figures for 2002 will be announced in due course.

DCMS and its Agency have no recorded cases of any unauthorised absenteeism.

The targets set for DCMS and its Agency were:

	2001–02	2002–03
DCMS	7 days	6 days
Royal Parks Agency	10 days	9 days

DCMS, its Agency and each of its non-departmental public body (NDPB) are committed to managing sickness absence effectively, and in meeting the 2003 target for reduced sickness absence as set out in the Service Delivery Agreements (SDA) and NDPB Funding Agreements.

DCMS does not hold central absenteeism and sickness records for NDPBs. To provide this information could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Tote

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans the Government have to sell the Tote (a) to a racing trust to allow it to compete commercially with all long-term profits invested in the sport and (b) to a profit-making company with interests in the gambling sector. [93794]

Mr. Caborn: The Government's policy in this area is well established. The intention remains to sell the Tote to a consortium of racing interests and that is the basis we are working on. We would only consider other alternatives if that model proved to be unviable.

DEFENCE

Helicopters

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many helicopters are in service with (a) 847 NAS, (b) 846 NAS and (c) 845 NAS, and what the serviceability rate is of the aircraft of each squadron. [93648]

Mr. Ingram: The numbers of aircraft and overall serviceability rate for 847 NAS, 846 NAS and 845 NAS are as follows:

Aircraft

	Number
847 Naval Air Squadron
Lynx Attack Helicopter Mark 7	Six Aircraft; 100 per cent. overall serviceability rate
Gazelle Attack Helicopter mark 1	Eight aircraft; 83 per cent. overall serviceability rate
846 Naval Air Squadron
Sea King Helicopter Mark 4	10 aircraft; 60 per cent. overall serviceability rate
845 Naval Air Squadron
Sea King Helicopter Mark 4	10 aircraft; 90 per cent. overall serviceability rate

Serviceability is defined as the number of aircraft within the Actual Operating Fleet (AOF—the actual aircraft allocated to the Operating Commander to complete the mandated task) that are fit to fly at the time of reporting expressed as a percentage of the AOF. The figures provided are accurate as of 27 January 2003.

Iraq

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on British involvement in military strikes on targets in the Iraqi no-fly zones since 11 September 2001; what the cost of this involvement has been to Britain; and what (a) military and (b) civilian casualties have resulted. [93217]

Mr. Ingram: Our records do not separately identify expenditure incurred in maintaining the no-fly zones, nor can they be broken down from specific dates. However, the table sets out the overall estimated additional expenditure incurred as a direct result of operations in the Gulf during financial year 2001–02 and 2002–03.

	£ million
2001–02	22[1]
2002–03	26[1]

[1] Denotes figure calculated on a resource basis.

I will write to the hon. Member with further details concerning expenditure in 2001–02 and 2002–03.

We are not aware of any civilian casualties resulting from responses made in self-defence by coalition aircraft patrolling the no-fly zones since 11 September 2001. It is not possible to confirm whether military casualties have occurred.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will estimate the impact of increasing the minimum wage (a) in line with average earnings, (b) to £4.17 per hour, (c) to £4.87 per hour, (d) to £5.00 per hour and (e) to £5.30 per hour, on the cost of salaries of departmental employees (i) in total and (ii) for each nation of the United Kingdom in the next financial year. [90609]

Dr. Moonie: Based on the net working hours of Ministry of Defence staff, increasing the minimum wage by any of the rates at (a) to (e) will have no impact on the cost of salaries for the MOD.

Rifles

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many rifles have been supplied for use by (a) front-line troops and (b) support forces. [94103]

Mr. Ingram: The information to distinguish between the number of rifles of all types held by front line troops and support forces is not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost. Troops being deployed as part of Operation Telic are to be equipped with the modified SA80 rifle. To date, 50,000 modified SA80 rifles have been issued to United Kingdom Armed Forces personnel.

SA-80 A2 Rifle

Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many troops being deployed in the Gulf as part of Operation Telic are to be equipped with unmodified SA-80 A2 rifles. [93991]

Mr. Ingram: None. Arrangements are in place to ensure that all troops deployed on Operation Telic will be equipped with the modified SA-80 A2 rifle.

Service Personnel (Cancelled Holidays)

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much compensation has been paid to service personnel for cancelled holidays in the past six months; and how many service personnel have been compensated. [93652]

Dr. Moonie: During the period June—December 2002, approximately 46 Service personnel claimed a total of about £11K in refunds under the Nugatory Holiday Expenditure scheme. This scheme reimburses Service personnel for otherwise irrecoverable expenses incurred through having to cancel or curtail holidays at short notice due to unplanned and unforeseen military commitments.

Services' Protective Clothing

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) gas masks and (b) protective suits have been issued to service personnel. [93568]

Mr. Ingram: All service personnel receive a personal issue of one respirator, to be retained at all times, and protective suits are made available for operational requirements. Protective suits are bulky items so whilst one suit is given as a personal issue, the others would normally be held by Quartermasters and issued as required. Thereare sufficient stocks of gas masks and protective suits to meet our contingency plans.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

EU Food Production

6. Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the change in the amount of food which will be produced in the EU after the expansion of the organisation. [94163]

Margaret Beckett: Accession to the EU will promote restructuring and improved productivity in the new member states. We welcome that. But it makes the need for reform of the common agricultural policy all the more critical in order to avoid stimulating artificial and uneconomic production in both the new and the existing member states.

Sugar Production

16. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she next expects to meet British Sugar to discuss the development of new technology in sugar beet refining. [94173]

Mr. Meacher: Defra maintains regular contact with British Sugar at all levels. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, (the Lord Whitty), visited the Wissington Sugar Factory as recently as 17 January.

Horticulture

17. Hugh Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on Government policy towards horticulture. [94174]

Alun Michael: As my right hon. Friend the Minister of State for Environment, stated at Oral Questions on 19 December last, the Government welcome the contribution of horticulture to the UK economy. It is worth some £2 billion at the farm gate and supports substantial downstream activity in packhouses, processing and the garden industry. We will continue to work with the industry through the Sustainable Farming and Food Strategy published on 12 December, by funding research and development and through the England Rural Development Programme.

Brown Trout

18. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what strategy has been in place during the past five years to combat the effects of water acidity upon stocks of native brown trout; and if she will make a statement. [94175]

Mr. Morley: The Government have lobbied for, and implements controls both on atmospheric emissions (to tackle the impacts at source) and on forestry practices (to help minimise the impacts). Alongside these controls we use catchment liming (if feasible and appropriate) as a method of remediation.

Sewer Flooding

19. Mrs. Helen Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what action she is taking to tackle sewer flooding. [94176]

Mr. Morley: The Department has been working closely with the Office of Water Services to look at ways of tackling the serious problem of sewer flooding. The Government appreciate this can cause a great deal of stress and anxiety for those affected.

Following a consultation on flooding from sewers, Ofwat announced that they will consider proposals from sewerage undertakers for additional schemes to alleviate the most serious problems in the period up to 2005.

Fishing Fleet

21. Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the effect of the forthcoming expansion of the European Union on the economic viability of the United Kingdom's fishing fleet. [94178]

Mr. Morley: We do not expect the forthcoming accession of new member states to affect the economic viability of the UK fishing fleet.

Flooding (Insurance)

22. Sir Michael Spicer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to use money allocated to flood defence for self-help schemes aimed at securing insurance at reasonable rates against flooding. [94179]

Mr. Morley: The Government currently have no plans to draw on flood defence budgets to award money to individual householders to install flood protection measures at their homes. Individuals are, however, encouraged to consider with their insurers whether investment in such devices will enable them to secure a reduction in their premiums. The development of standards for these devices has been supported by the Government.

Hunting

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the International Fund for Animal Welfare regarding hunting; and if she will make a statement. [92998]

Alun Michael: The International Fund for Animal welfare is one of three organisations which comprise the organisation Campaign for the Protection of Hunted Animals (the other two being the League Against Cruel Sports and RSPCA). I met representatives of IFAW and the other campaigning organisations on a number of occasions, particularly in connection with the public hearings held in Portcullis House in September. I was meeting the Countryside Alliance and the Middle Way Group in parallel or at the same meetings. A representative of IFAW was present at the hearings examining the evidence put by expert witnesses.

Advertising

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much her Department has spent on advertising since its creation; and if she will make a statement. [93677]

Alun Michael: Defra was formed as a Department in June 2001.

The Department does not maintain records of its expenditure on advertising separately. Our expenditure for publicity, which includes advertising, publications, events, shows and direct information literature mailings, in financial year 2001–02 was £6.64 million. The allocation for publicity in 2002–03 is £4.1 million.

Alternative Fuels

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what research has been carried out on the replacement of diesel with fuels based on sunflower or rapeseed; and what plans the Government have to encourage the recycling of cooking oil as fuel for motor engines. [93476]

Mr. Meacher: This Department has funded a small number of projects evaluating the environmental and socio-economic impacts of using oilseed rape for biodiesel. DEFRA does not fund research and development work on liquid biofuels which is largely covered by the programmes of the Department of Trade and Industry and the Department for Transport. The Chancellor introduced a duty cut of 20 pence per litre for biodiesel compared to Ultra Low Sulphur Diesel in 2002. This has stimulated the recycling of used vegetable oil to produce biodiesel, which is now available to the public as a blend with fossil diesel. Over 60 filling stations are currently retailing high quality biofuels made from recovered vegetable oil.

Animal Welfare Research

Mr. Tynan: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the priorities are of her Department's research into animal welfare issues; and if she will make a statement. [94171]

Mr. Morley: The Government are committed to promoting the welfare of all animals kept by man and to eliminate cruelty. The animal welfare research portfolio is wide-ranging and has projects covering important areas concerning welfare on farm, during transport, at markets and slaughter.

Early Retirement

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much she expects her Department to spend on early retirement packages over the next five years; and how much her Department has spent on retirement packages since its creation. [93675]

Alun Michael: The expected costs of early retirement over the next five years are as follows:

£ million

	2003–04	2004–05	2005–06	2006–07	2007–08
Core DEFRA	3	7	7	—	—
Rural Payments Agency	12.3	16.5	1.3	1.2	1
Total	15.3	23.5	8.3	1.2	1

Historic information on the expenditure since DEFRA was created is not immediately available. I will write to the hon. Member with the information as soon as possible.

Farm Incomes

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the current levels of farming incomes. [94177]

Alun Michael: As reported to the House this morning, revised estimates of farm income, output and productivity of agriculture during 2002 were published today. These confirm the increase in farm incomes forecast last November, and indicate a rise of 15 per cent. (14 in real terms) compared to 2001. Details have been placed in the Library of the House.

Leadership Review

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will list the tests being applied to civil servants to evaluate them in the leadership review in her Department. [93674]

Alun Michael: The assessments made on participants in the Senior Managers' Development Programme will be based on DEFRA's Leadership Profile, which describes the skills and behaviour required to be an effective leader. We are awaiting detailed proposals from the consultants recently appointed to design and deliver the Programme, which will include how the assessments will be made. A copy of the Leadership Profile has been placed in the Library of the House.

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what cost savings she expects to make from the leadership review of her Department; and if she will make a statement. [93679]

Alun Michael: The purpose of the Senior Managers' Development Programme is to achieve a qualitative improvement in the performance of the participants and to strengthen the leadership capability of the Department. We plan to evaluate the impact of the Programme through the performance management systems within which DEFRA staff work, and through customer and staff surveys, rather than through the attainment of targeted cost savings.

Network Rail

Mrs Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what discussions she has had with the Chief Executive of Network Rail about the environmental and health hazards posed by the deposit of litter and human excrement on railway lines; and if she will make a statement. [88718]

Mr. Meacher: We have had no meetings with the Chief Executive of Network Rail regarding the environmental health hazards posed by litter and human excrement on railway lines.

However, I understand that Network Rail continues to work closely with its maintenance contractors to ensure the lineside is clear from surplus litter, excrement and to prevent the future build-up of such material.

The discharge onto a railway track from a sanitary convenience or sink forming part of a vehicle used for carrying passengers on a railway, where the discharge is less than 25 litres, is exempt from waste management licensing. These exemptions are specific activities and are defined in Schedule 3 of the Waste Management Licensing Regualtions 1994. Exemptions are prescribed so as to meet the terms set out in Article 11 of the Waste Framework Directive. Under the terms of Article 11, exemptions must ensure protection of the environment and human health.

Since 1995 all newly-constructed trains are required to be fitted with retention tanks which obviate the need for such discharge. There is no finance available to make the alterations to pre-1995 carriages.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much (a) her Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by her Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if she will make a statement. [92249]

Alun Michael: DEFRA as a Department did not exist prior to June 2001.

The Department's centralised publicity expenditure is not recorded in the format requested. Our expenditure for publicity, which includes advertising, publications, events, shows and direct information literature mailings, in financial year 2001–02 was £6.64 million. The allocation for publicity in 2002–03 is £4.1 million.

A breakdown of the expenditure for each agency and non-departmental body sponsored by the Department could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sewage Treatment Works

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs when she expects conclusions to be reached following the consultation on the control of odour nuisance from sewage treatment works. [94161]

Alun Michael: I expect to be able to make a decision on the way forward in the coming months following consideration of the responses.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was for her Department, its predecessors and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for her Department; and if she will make a statement. [93497]

Alun Michael: The information requested in respect of absenteeism is not available, and may be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Records are not yet available for the number of days lost due to sickness absence in 2002, but these will be announced in due course. Sickness absence figures for previous calendar years are published in the Cabinet Office annual report "Analysis of Sickness Absence in the Civil Service", copies of which are placed in House Libraries.

Figures for the most recently available years for the former Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the former DETR are shown as an average per staff year. These are:

Days

	MAFF	DETR
1990	7.5	9.4
1991	8.7	10.3
1992	8.0	10.2
1993	8.4	10.7
1994	7.4	9.4
1995	9.1	11.2
1996	7.8	10.4
1997	7.8	9.7
1998	8.7	8.7
1999	9.3	8.7
2000	9	9
2001	7.2	10.5

Figures for sickness absence in the Department's non-departmental public bodies are not held centrally, and may be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

The Department is committed to the effective management of sickness absence, and to meeting its Service Delivery Agreement of reducing sickness absence to 6.9 days for 2003.

Staff Numbers

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what assessment she has made of the need to change the staffing complement in her Department working on (a) climate change, (b) energy efficiency, (c) renewable energy and (d) radioactive waste policy. [93901]

Alun Michael: Defra is currently discussing its budget for the coming financial year, and decisions on this annual process will be taken by the end of February. No decisions have yet been taken. Public spending is constrained and it is inevitable that choices and options are aired.

We have set out our clear objectives, in "Working for the Essentials of Life". Like other Government Departments, we continually look for efficiency and effectiveness in delivery and to ensure that taxpayers' funding is allocated to support priority areas.

Transport (Environmental Impacts)

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what recent discussions she has had with the Department for Transport with regard to environmental impacts from transport. [94180]

Mr. Meacher: Ministers and officials from the Department have frequent discussions with the Department for Transport about issues which might have environmental impacts. Recent discussions have covered consultation on airports capacity in the South East, the development of policy on aviation, the 10-year Transport Plan progress report, the Government's public service agreement targets for reducing carbon dioxide emissions and to improve air quality, and the Multi Modal Studies.

Water Framework Directive

Diana Organ: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what steps she is taking to ensure that the water framework directive is implemented to meet its deadlines. [94160]

Mr. Morley: The Government published detailed proposals last October in a second consultation paper.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

Human Trafficking

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps the Government are taking to address human trafficking in (a) Europe and (b) throughout the world. [93145]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Organised immigration crime is on of the Government's highest priorities in the fight against organised and international crime. A multi-agency task force, known as 'Reflex', co-ordinates UK action against organised immigration crime. Since April 2002, 17 organised crime groups have been disrupted and a further 69 investigations are on-going. In addition to contributing to the work of the UN, OSCE, IOM and others on this issue, the UK has contributed over £600,000 in the last three years to assist partners worldwide in tackling this criminal trade.

Iraq

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have indicated that they will make a military contribution to the UN to enforce Resolution 1441, should the UN require military force. [93597]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We are not aware that the UN has made any such request. Nor would we expect it to in advance of a Security Council decision. No decision has been taken to launch military action against Iraq and military action is not inevitable. We hope that the Iraqi regime will choose to resolve this conflict peacefully, by complying fully with UN resolutions.

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have been invited to join a military coalition to deal with the problem of Iraq. [93614]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No decision has been taken to launch military action against Iraq and military action is not inevitable. We hope that the Iraqi regime will choose to resolve this conflict peacefully, by complying fully with UN resolutions.

Kosovo

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what evidence he has received of (a) drug trafficking and (b) white slavery in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [93618]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 29 January 2003]: Her Majesty's Government estimate that about 80 per cent. of the heroin received in the United Kingdom is trafficked through the Balkans from Afghanistan. The available information on trafficking routes suggests that a large majority of this heroin transits other Balkan and central European countries (for example, Bulgaria, over 2,000 kilograms seized in 2000) rather than Kosovo.

We remain concerned at the trafficking of women and children through the region, including Kosovo. The United Kingdom's law enforcement agencies work closely with regional partners, including in Kosovo, to identify, disrupt and dismantle criminal networks targeting the UK. In 2002, the Trafficking and Prostitution Investigation Unit of the UNMIK Police conducted 353 raids on premises where people trafficking was suspected of taking place. 61 premises were closed down, 234 arrests were made and 92 persons were charged with trafficking offences. 89 victims were repatriated and 1,727 people were added to a database used to help target efforts to tackle trafficking from major source countries.

The United Kingdom has supported a number of counter-narcotics and anti-organised crime projects in the Balkans and central Europe (over £700,000 this financial year).

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what his estimate is of the number of Serbs who have fled Kosovo since KFOR forces entered the province; and what his estimate is of the numbers who have returned. [93619]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 29 January 2003]: According to the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (UNHCR), 159,000 Serbs have left Kosovo and, according to the United Nations Office for Returns and Communities, nearly 3,500 Serbs have chosen to return to the province since KFOR forces entered Kosovo.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many Orthodox churches in Kosovo have been destroyed since KFOR forces have been present in the Serbian province; and what steps are being taken to bring the perpetrators to justice. [93620]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 29 January 2003]: Figures for the number of churches destroyed in Kosovo vary. Following extensive inquiries, UNMIK, KFOR, OSCE and UNHCR believe that 110 churches have been destroyed since KFOR entered Kosovo in June 1999.

I told Kosovo Albanian leaders during my visits to the province that the destruction of churches and all religious sites were acts of barbarism which bring shame and dishonour to all concerned. KFOR and UNMIK continue to take action against extremists. In support of combating extremism, UNMIK also conduct programmes promoting multi-ethnicity.

Pakistan

Adam Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the risk to the security of the UK posed by terrorist organisations based in Pakistan. [93434]

Mr. Blunkett: I have been asked to reply.

Advice on any terrorist threat to the UK is the responsibility of the Security Service. Strategic assessments about terrorist threats to the UK are provided to the Government by the Joint Intelligence Committee. All threats are a matter that the Government continue to take seriously and are kept under constant review.

Roma People

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Governments of (a) the Czech Republic, (b) Hungary, (c) Romania and (d) Slovakia, on the living standards of their Roma citizens. [93467]

Mr. MacShane [holding answer 28 January 2003]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Foreign Ministers of the Czech Republic, Hungary and Romania in 2002. He raised the question of Roma minorities with all three. He also plans to meet the Slovak Foreign Minister in February 2003. The UK's programmes of pre-accession support for candidate countries puts a high priority on improving the quality of life of Roma minorities.

All four states have been found to meet the Copenhagen criteria, which require a state to uphold the basic human rights of all its citizens.

Saudi Arabia

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures are being taken to secure the release of the detainees: Sandy Mitchell, Les Walker, James Lee and James Cottel, arrested in Saudi Arabia. [93703]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, and ministerial colleagues have raised the cases of the British men detained in Saudi Arabia at the highest levels with the Saudi authorities. We remain deeply concerned about these cases. The men's welfare is a key concern. We continue to work to resolve the cases. We are in close contact with the Saudi authorities and the men's lawyers. We also continue to make consular visits to the men.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Afghanistan

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, columns 14–15W, on Afghanistan, what consideration has been given to the use of security forces to assist in the dispersal of humanitarian aid; and what steps are being taken to address the security situation in Zabul province. [93909]

Clare Short: Since my last answer of 20 January 2003, the UN in Kabul have spoken to the Governor of Zabul province and have agreed improvements in security for those aid agencies operating in Zabul. Most of the hijacked cars, together with the equipment on board, have also been recovered.

It is not the primary role of the security forces in Afghanistan to assist with the distribution of humanitarian aid, although they have been involved in a limited number of successful small projects in and around Kabul. The main purpose of security forces is to improve the security conditions to allow humanitarian and development organisations to provide assistance themselves.

New joint civil-military provincial reconstruction teams are being deployed over the next few months to help provide greater security outside Kabul.

Africa

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of the effectiveness of (a) the New Partnership for African Development and (b) the Africa Union in promoting democracy in Zimbabwe. [93858]

Clare Short: The New Partnership for African Development (NEPAD) commits African leaders to the promotion of good governance, human rights and democracy. It is a new process and obviously cannot overnight correct all governance problems in Africa such as those in Zimbabwe. The African Union has to reflect the views of all African states. It has traditionally been reluctant to comment on the internal affairs of a member state, although there are encouraging indications that this attitude is changing. The UK government continues to work with African governments and regional initiatives and institutions to promote good governance, human rights and democracy. We should not of course punish all of Africa for the situation in Zimbabwe.

Angola

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what progress is being made with collection of data on the state of health in Angola. [93801]

Clare Short: The need for more effective information management systems in the health and education systems in Angola, including improved collection and analysis of data, has been identified as a key issue for future progress in the 2002 UN Common Country Assessment. This need is likely to be highlighted in the Interim Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper, on which the Government are presently working, which will provide the framework for future donor support to Angola.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of people in Angola are suffering from (a) HIV/Aids and (b) malaria; and if she will make a statement. [93802]

Clare Short: According to the UNAIDS office in Angola, very few accurate statistics are available on HIV/AIDS outside the capital Luanda, where HIV infection rose sharply from 3.4 per cent. in 1999 to 8.6 per cent. in 2001. Overall, it is estimated that over 520,000 adults in Angola (out of an adult population of just over six million) were living with HIV in 2001. With regard to malaria, the UNDP Human Development Report 2002 states that there were 8,796 cases per 100,000 in 2000.

The Government of Angola is currently drafting an Interim Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (I-PRSP) which includes an assessment of the country's health needs. This will state how donors can support work on HIV/AIDS and malaria. My Department will consider the implications for our development support to Angola, once the I-PRSP strategy becomes available.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps she is taking in the development of local government in Angola; and if she will make a statement. [93803]

Clare Short: Local government in Angola is relatively weak due to a lack of consistent funding from the centre and because it is appointed rather than elected. This has created a distance between local government and Angola's citizens.

My Department has been providing some £7.5 million of support to the Luanda Urban Poverty Programme (LUPP). One of the main objectives of the programme is to build local government capacity so that it can provide improved services to the communities for which it is responsible. Using participatory methods, the programme is assisting local government to work in partnership with community associations to achieve tangible outcomes such as clean water, sanitation and waste disposal. This process will contribute to strengthening local democracy as government and communities learn to work together. We are presently considering a second phase of support to LUPP.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what percentage of children in Angola are being educated to primary school standard; and if she will make a statement. [93804]

Clare Short: UNICEF has estimated that 51.2 per cent. of Angolan children attended primary school in 2001. However, the 2003 UN Inter-Agency Consolidated Appeal (CAP) estimates that at least 80 per cent. of all Angolan children do not have access to adequate education and more than one million children are outside the formal school system. In newly accessible areas, seven out of ten children do not attend school.

Primary education is only one of several key tasks that confront the Government of Angola. The Ministry of Education recognises the need to address this situation and has set itself a target of achieving two thirds enrolment by 2005.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps are being taken to retrain former military personnel in Angola. [93805]

Clare Short: The proposed Angolan demobilisation and reintegration programme is currently being negotiated between the Government of Angola and the World bank. The programme will include sub-projects to provide ex-combatants with a wide range of educational opportunities from basic literacy to apprenticeships and professional qualifications. Agricultural extension services and support for the self-employed and micro enterprise are also envisaged.

Over 5,000 ex-UNITA fighters are being integrated into the Angolan armed forces, as part of the disarmament, demobilisation and reintegration process in Angola. They are receiving up to three months training depending on their rank and existing skills.

John Barrett: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what action is being taken to ensure that revenue raised from the exploitation of natural resources in Angola is used for the development of the country. [93806]

Clare Short: Since the end of the civil war, we and other donors have been impressing on the Government of Angola the need for transparency over the collection and allocation of resources, and the need to increase levels of spending in the social sectors and for national reconstruction. Last year, the United Nations, in partnership with the Angolan Government, carried out an assessment of public financing of the social sectors in Angola. The objective of the study was to make practical recommendations regarding the distribution of resources and budget management mechanisms. More recently, my Department has provided consultancy support toward the preparation of Angola's Interim Poverty Reduction Strategy Paper (I-PRSP), specifically in clarifying details of the Government budget including a breakdown of revenues.

Child Soldiers

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) European, (b) British and (c) UN regulations prohibit the use of child soldiers in military forces. [93492]

Clare Short: International humanitarian law, as embodied in the Geneva Conventions of 1949 and their Additional Protocols, prohibits the recruitment or use of children under 15 in armed conflict and provides for the protection of children, particularly those separated from their families. The Statute of the International Criminal Court, to which the UK is a state party and which has been incorporated into national law, makes the recruitment and/or use of children under 15 a war crime.

The European Convention for the Protection of Human Rights and Fundamental Freedoms, now enshrined in the Human Rights Act 1998, forbids the use of torture, inhuman or degrading treatment which may include the forcing of children to take part in hostilities.

The UK is a Party to the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, which makes particular provision for the protection of all children under 18 years. It prescribes that the best interests of the child should be a primary consideration, severely restricts the circumstances in which children may be removed from their parents and protects children against arbitrary interference with their privacy and liberty. This Convention, along with International Labour Organisation Convention 182 (which the UK has ratified), prohibits the use of children in the worst forms of labour; and Convention 182 specifically prohibits the forced or compulsory recruitment of children for use in armed conflict.

The UK expects to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention on the Rights of the Child on the Involvement of Children in Armed Conflict later this year. This provides that states parties must take all feasible measures to ensure that members of their armed forces who have not attained the age of 18 years do not take a direct part in hostilities, and that children under 18 years are not compulsorily recruited into their armed forces. Non-state actors, such as insurgent groups, are prohibited from ever recruiting or using in hostilities children under 18. We take the Protocol seriously. That is why before we ratify, we need to be clear that the detailed procedures and administrative guidelines for the armed forces are finalised. These will give concrete form to our commitment. MOD officials, in consultation with the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, are in the final stages of drafting an Explanatory Memorandum which will explain the steps being taken to meet that commitment. As part of the ratification process, we will lay the Explanatory Memorandum (EM) before Parliament. This does not require any changes to UK legislation.

The UK has many laws that prohibit the activities usually associated with the use of child soldiers, such as assault, forcing a child to perform illegal acts, deprivation of their liberty and making children take harmful drugs and alcohol.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what (a) discussions she has held and (b) action she has taken jointly with her counterparts in other countries to combat (i) the use of children as soldiers in conflicts and (ii) their recruitment into the armed forces of (A) governments, (B) paramilitary groups, (C) civil militia and (D) non-state armed groups. [93493]

Clare Short: The most effective way of tackling the use of child soldiers is to prevent, reduce and resolve armed conflicts. This is part of the wider issue of the impact of armed conflict on children generally, their families and communities. In addressing this, my Department is working with other UK Government Departments and other governments through appropriate regional mechanisms, the non-governmental community and the multilateral system to this end. UNICEF, with the support of my Department and other governments, works to effect the disarmament, demobilisation and rehabilitation of child soldiers, particularly back into the community and prevent their re-recruitment. Through a multi-year capacity building programme supported by my Department, UNICEF are collecting data on the situation of children affected by armed conflict globally, to better inform policy, guidance and programming on the wide range of issues involved.

My Department has also been supporting the work of the United Nations Secretary-General's Special Representative on Children and Armed Conflict, whose work (primarily of advocacy and raising awareness of the issues at all levels) features prominently in the Secretary-General's report of 26 November 2002 to the Security Council on this issue.

Through its representation on the Security Council, the Government have been closely involved in the passing of eight resolutions since August 1999 addressing the issue of child soldiers and other children affected by armed conflict, and are currently involved in negotiations for a further resolution to strengthen the ability of the international community to take action to prevent the recruitment and use of children in armed conflicts. Along with the vast majority of other states, the Government have also ratified the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child, and is taking steps to ratify the Optional Protocol to the Convention preventing the use of children in armed conflict.

Europe Development Council

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the abolition of the Europe Development Council. [94563]

Clare Short: I was not in favour of the abolition of the Development Council, which had been useful in promoting reforms of EC development co-operation, in adopting a more coherent development policy framework and in pressing the case for an increase in the poverty focus of EC aid. The June 2002 Seville European Council decided to streamline the functioning of the Council in the run-up to enlargement and reduced Council groupings from 16 to 9 and thus abolished the development Council. There are opportunities with the new General Affairs and External Relations Council (GAERC) for more discussions on development at monthly meetings.

I have been working to maintain a strategic approach to development issues as established by the Development Council. In particular, I have been pushing for at least two strategic GAERC meetings per year focusing on development—one forward looking and one to assess progress. I will continue to press hard to ensure development is given due weight in the new configuration and will seek to ensure appropriate UK ministerial attendance to debate development issues.

Grants

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the grants funded by her Department for which individual members of the public and organisations may apply; and if she will make a statement as to (a) the total of such funding in the last financial year, (b) the total number of awards and (c) their administrative costs. [82185]

Clare Short: The numbers and values of grants made in FY 2001–02 by the various DFID funds open to members of the public and organisations in UK are listed as follows. Information on the administrative costs of these funds is not held centrally and could not be gathered without incurring disproportionate cost. The number and value of grants refers to new grants made in the period.

Fund	Number of grants	Value (£ million)
Civil Society Challenge Fund	62	30.2
Renewable Natural Resources Knowledge Strategy	43	22.6
Engineering Knowledge and Research Programme	54	13.4
Business Linkages Challenge Fund	9	13.3
Social Science Research	42	8.1
Financial Deepening Challenge Fund	7	6.0
Development Awareness Fund	38	5.5
Education Research Programme	46	1.9
Asia Regional Poverty Fund	22	1.9
Tourism Challenge Fund	6	1.3
Enterprise Development Innovation Fund	6	1.0
Total	335	105.2

In addition, the UK Small Grants Scheme allows UK Heads of Mission to provide funding for small-scale development projects in the countries where they work—up to a value of £100,000 per year. As responsibility for their administration is delegated to Heads of Mission, data on the number and value of new grants made in FY 2001–02 are not held centrally and could not be collected without incurring disproportionate cost.

Total expenditure through UK non-governmental organisations (NGOs) in FY 2001–02 was £190.5 million. This included Partnership Programme Agreements with 11 NGOs, which provided funding in support of jointly agreed strategic programmes with NGOs with proven experience and impact, and contracts with NGOs to carry out specific development projects and humanitarian interventions on DFID's behalf.

HIV/AIDS

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what measures her Department is taking to ensure child participation in the development of policies and programmes on HIV/AIDS is in line with the recent UNICEF report; and if she will make a statement. [93599]

Clare Short: Over half of all new HIV/AIDS infections are in young people (15–24 age group). We believe, therefore, that HIV prevention programmes must give a high priority to informing young people about the risk of HIV/AIDS, and that young people are encouraged to participate in the development of programmes to prevent the spread of HIV/AIDS. We support young people's HIV/AIDS prevention through our bilateral programmes and in partnership with UNICEF.

In South Africa, for example, young people have been actively engaged in the review and monitoring of our adolescent sexual health programmes. In Mozambique we have committed £2.6 million over five years to support UNICEF's HIV/AIDS programme for young people. In China, we are currently developing an HIV/AIDS prevention and care programme that includes young people in a range of design activities. In Kenya, we have supported various focus group discussions with young people and trained peer HIV/AIDS educators.

Maternal Mortality

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the main causes of maternal mortality in developing countries. [93862]

Clare Short: 99 per cent. of the 510,000 maternal deaths and most of the widespread disability caused by complications in childbirth worldwide are in developing countries. Up to 80 per cent. of these deaths result from five relatively common obstetric complications: haemorrhage, infection, complications of abortion, eclampsia and obstructed labour. Almost all of these deaths could be avoided by timely, effective interventions by skilled attendants at delivery, backed up by a functioning referral system and access to emergency obstetric care. This requires effective care and functioning health systems. To this end my Department have committed over £1 billion since 1997 to health systems strengthening. We are also working to improve access to quality reproductive and sexual health services in order to avoid unwanted pregnancies.

Mozambique

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development, pursuant to her answer of 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 313W, on Mozambique, what the response has been to the Mozambiquan Government's request for help from UN agencies; and what the nature has been of her Department's support. [93644]

Clare Short: The World Food Programme (WFP) has responded to the Government's request for assistance by implementing a food distribution programme focusing on six provinces and 38 districts considered worst affected by the drought. Between July and December WFP distributed some 14,301 metric tonnes of food aid. As the operation gradually expanded over the six-month period, WFP's beneficiary caseload gradually increased. In December food rations were distributed to 247,130 people.

The programme is carried out through implementing partners representing a mix of international and national non-governmental organisations, and the Mozambique Red Cross. In 11 areas of operation the programme is implemented directly through local authorities. Implementing partners help to identify vulnerable households eligible to receive food aid, and organise physical distribution of food at the community level. The main focus of the programme to date has been on implementing food-for-work schemes. Given that Mozambique is now entering the hungry period, a programme shift, with greater emphasis on meeting the needs of vulnerable people who cannot work is planned.

UNICEF has extended its regular country programme to include the implementation of drought response projects in areas that are considered to be particularly vulnerable. With support from DFID (£973, 000), UNICEF is implementing a blanket supplementary feeding programme for children aged 6–59 months and for pregnant and lactating mothers. The project will focus on the six provinces considered most vulnerable and aims to reach 141,000 children and 71,000 women. The programme also includes follow-up treatment and care for severely malnourished children through support to the existing therapeutic feeding centre network. UNICEF will implement activities through a network of partners comprising local and international NGOs and the Mozambique Red Cross.

In addition, UNICEF has also responded to the Government's request for assistance by supporting the creation of thirty sentinel sites for nutritional surveillance in order to measure acute malnutrition trends. This programme focuses on three drought-affected provinces. Planning work is under way to expand the programme and increase geographical coverage of the sites. UNICEF has also been working on strengthening epidemiological preparedness and providing additional support to measles vaccination campaigns. Furthermore, UNICEF has increased its focus on the provision of clean water at health centres in the districts worst affected by the drought. UNICEF is also pre-positioning school kits as an incentive for children to attend school, given indications that both the drought and the HIV/AIDS pandemic is resulting in increased drop-out rates.

DFID has provided £1 million for a cash for work programme, providing an income source in the short term and increasing access to markets in the longer term. DFID is providing £973,000 in support of UNICEF's supplementary feeding programme. DFID is looking at providing up to £500,000 to support agricultural input fairs given poor crop forecasts in many areas of southern Mozambique.

Mugabe

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with the French Government regarding the renewal of the EU travel ban on (a) Robert Mugabe and (b) other Zimbabwean Government officials. [93971]

Clare Short [holding answer 29 January 2003]: I have not discussed the renewal of the EU travel ban with the French Government. The Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary has had regular discussions with his French and other counterparts on this issue, including at the General Affairs and External Relations Council in Brussels on 27 January. I have discussed the urgent humanitarian needs in Zimbabwe with the French and other Development Ministers, and reiterated the importance for the Zimbabwean people, especially the poor, of reversing the disastrous policies of the present Zimbabwean government.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions she has had with the Foreign Office regarding the renewal of the EU travel ban on (a) Robert Mugabe and (b) other Zimbabwean Government officials; [93972]

(2) what discussions she has had with the Foreign Office regarding the attendance of President Mugabe at a Franco-African Summit in February. [93970]

Clare Short [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Secretary and I have not discussed the renewal of the EU travel ban on Robert Mugabe and other Zimbabwean Government officials nor the Franco-African Summit. We have regular and extensive discussions on the urgent humanitarian needs in Zimbabwe and the importance for the Zimbabwean people, especially the poor, of reversing the disastrous policies of the present Zimbabwean government.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in her Department and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for her Department; and if she will make a statement. [93510]

Clare Short: We are unable to provide details of rates of staff absenteeism as unauthorised absence is recorded as unpaid leave along with properly authorised absence (such as additional maternity leave or career breaks) and cannot be disaggregated.

My Department will announce the rates of sick absence recorded in 2002 in due course. The rates of sick absence recorded in DFID per calendar year from 1997 to 2001 are as follows:

Year	Number of absences	Average number of days per staff year
1997	9,250	8.1
1998	8,643	7.3
1999	9,263	7.3
2000	8,426	6.2
2001	11,545	8.3

Staff numbers on which these are based have risen from 1,142 in 1997 to 1,391 in 2001.

Figures on rates of sick absence before 1997 are not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

DFID is working towards reducing its sickness absence rate.

Sierra Leone

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what steps her Department has taken in response to the UN Secretary General's report to the Security Council on the UN mission in Sierra Leone, with particular reference to the transfer of responsibilities to the Government of Sierra Leone. [93407]

Clare Short: We are playing a key role in assisting the Government of Sierra Leone to prepare for the withdrawal of UNAMSIL. Through joint action between my Department, the Ministry of Defence and the FCO, and using funds from the Africa Conflict Prevention Pool, the UK is leading the international military assistance training team; we are providing technical assistance for capacity-building in the Ministry of Defence, including the working relationship between civilian and military staff; we have funded the renovation and equipping of a new headquarters for the Ministry of Defence; and we are providing technical assistance to help the Office of National Security to operate effective, non-political, intelligence services. We are also providing a major programme to support the reform and strengthening of the Sierra Leone police.

The Secretary-General has emphasised that the timing and phasing of UNAMSIL drawdown will be carried out with close regard to the rate of development of the capacity of the Sierra Leone security sector. We are closely in touch with the UN on this issue.

Uganda

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of reports by UNICEF of the number of children unaccounted for in Northern Uganda. [83980]

Clare Short: The LRA have for many years made a practice of making children a main target of their war. Until security improves in northern Uganda, however, UNICEF will not be able to collect precise data on the number of unaccounted children. Renewed LRA activity last year led to a dramatic increase, and it is estimated that 4,500 children were abducted in 2002 (compared to 100 in 2001). It is unclear how many of these children have returned home and how many are still being held by the LRA inside Uganda or Sudan. Unfortunately, many of these children will have been killed. DFID is supporting Save the Children's efforts to rehabilitate and reintegrate those fortunate enough to escape, and will continue to do so as long as it is required.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the humanitarian situation in Northern Uganda; and if she will make a statement. [93848]

Clare Short: The circumstances faced by people in Northern Uganda are of grave concern. Humanitarian consequences of the continuing conflict are high, with an estimated 600,000 internally displaced persons and declining levels of food security due to disruption of harvesting and planting seasons. DFID has made available £1.6 million for food supplies to be distributed by the World Food Programme. The total support from the UK government for humanitarian needs in northern Uganda is £2.5 million this financial year.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development (1) what discussions she had with President Museveni on her recent trip to Uganda concerning Northern Uganda; [93981]

(2) if she will make a statement on (a) the nature of her recent trip to Uganda, (b) who she met; and what discussions she had. [93982]

Clare Short: I met with President Museveni briefly on transit through Uganda. We discussed his request for increased military spending focused on the need to defeat the Lords Resistance Army. I fully support the need to end the suffering inflicted by the Lords Resistance Army, however our assessment is that this objective does not justify all the additional defence expenditure. In response to the Government of Uganda's breaching of the agreed process for government resource allocations and the consequent increase of defence spending, the UK is to withhold £5 million of its general budget support this financial year.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she has had with President Museveni concerning possible peace talks with the Lord's Resistance Army. [93983]

Clare Short: I am in close contact with President Museveni on the possible responses to the conflict in northern Uganda. This was one of the subjects of our meeting last week at Entebbe airport. The levels of violence perpetrated by the Lord's Resistance Army are terrible, and I support the efforts of the Ugandan government to protect the lives and property of its citizens. The complex nature of the conflict means that dialogue is crucial if a sustainable end to the suffering faced by the Acholi people is to be realised. I have been encouraged by the passing of the Amnesty Act, the appointment of the Government Peace team and the work of the Acholi religious leaders as offering real potential for dialogue.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions her Department has had with the Government of South Africa regarding food imports to Zimbabwe. [93859]

Clare Short: My Department has regular discussions with South African officials on the humanitarian crisis in Zimbabwe. We have also been monitoring the progress of negotiations between the World Food Programme (WFP) and the Government of South Africa. WFP is at an advanced stage of negotiation with the Government of South Africa regarding a gift of £100,000 metric tons of maize from South Africa to countries in the region suffering food shortages. The amount for distribution to individual countries is still to be determined, but WFP would wish to distribute over 50 per cent. of the total to Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what discussions she is having with the Government of South Africa regarding the political situation in Zimbabwe. [93861]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave her on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 317W).

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what her latest assessment is of the number of people facing food shortages in Zimbabwe. [93973]

Clare Short [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The SADC Vulnerability Assessment Committee report of December 2002 estimated that the total number of people in need of food assistance in Zimbabwe had risen to 7.2 million. Of these, the World Food Programme (WFP) aims to reach 5.8 million. Other humanitarian assistance is provided through the Government of Zimbabwe, and bilateral support direct to non-governmental organisations in addition to donor help through the WFP. The UK bilateral programme alone is reaching 1.5 million people; 1 million of these are children receiving supplementary feeling in schools, with the remainder comprising particularly vulnerable adults (for example people in the district of Binga), pregnant women, and the elderly.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Departmental Expenditure (Newsprint)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor General what the total expenditure of her Department was on newspapers, magazines and periodicals in 2002. [90526]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 16 January 2003]: The Departments for which I hold ministerial responsibility account for expenditure on these items differently. In particular, accounting for periodicals in Treasury Solicitor's Department include subscriptions to legal journals and updates on loose-leaf specialist legal publications.

The expenditure of my own Department, the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers, for the financial year 2001–02 was £3,335.30.

The total expenditure for the Crown Prosecution Service on newspapers, magazines and periodicals from January to December 2002 was £148,582.

The expenditure by the Serious Fraud Office for the financial year 2001–02 was £10,143.85.

The expenditure by the Treasury Solicitor's Department for the period April to December 2002 was £2,200 on newspapers and magazines and £112,175 on subscriptions—making a total of £114,375.

HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate for the same period was £3,350. This was on periodicals and professional journals; there was no expenditure on newspapers.

Eurobank

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Solicitor-General what costs have been incurred by her Department during and arising from the collapse of the Eurobank case; and if she will make a statement. [94407]

The Solicitor-General: None. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

R v. McKay

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Solicitor-General when she will provide a substantive reply to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight concerning R v. McKay. [93705]

The Solicitor-General: The Attorney General provided a substantive reply to the hon. Member for the Isle of Wight concerning R v. McKay, on 29 January 2003.

Theft/Fraud

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Solicitor-General what her estimate is of the cost of theft and fraud to (a) her Department, (b) its agencies and (c) non-departmental public bodies in 2002. [89863]

The Solicitor-General [holding answer 13 January 2003]: The figures for the Departments for which I hold ministerial responsibility account are as follows:

The Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers—nil;

HM Crown Prosecution Service Inspectorate—£516;

Treasury Solicitor's Department—nil;

Crown Prosecution Service—£3,217; and Serious Fraud Office—£85.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Agency Workers Directive

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions she has had with her European counterparts concerning the agency workers directive; and if she will make a statement on her Department's policy on the proposed legislation in its present form. [93395]

Alan Johnson: The proposed directive was recently discussed in the European Union Employment, Social Policy, Health and Consumer Affairs Council on 3 December 2002, where I represented the United Kingdom. The Department of Trade and Industry has published an explanatory memorandum about the European Commission's revised proposal which sets out the Government's policy on the proposed directive. I have placed a copy of this in the Libraries of the House.

Alenia Marconi Systems

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what export control licence applications were received from Alenia Marconi Systems in the last five years; and what was the outcome of each of these applications. [93459]

Nigel Griffiths [holding answer 27 January 2003]: Details of all relevant export licences issued and refused since 2 May 1997 are published by destination in the Government's Annual Report on Strategic Export Controls, copies of which are placed in the Libraries of the House.

Call Centre Scripts

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to her answer to the hon. Member for North-East Derbyshire (Mr. Barnes), of 16 January, Official Report, column 806, if she will list the call centre scripts that she has gone through. [93857]

Ms Hewitt: The Minister of State for E-Commerce and Competitiveness and I have seen the original DWP and Inland Revenue call centre scripts.

Construction Industry

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations she has received about the practice of retentions in the construction industry; and if she will make a statement. [94221]

Mr. Wilson: The hon. Member may be aware that the Trade and Industry Select Committee has recently published the findings of its inquiry into the use of retentions in the construction industry.

I welcome these and I am pleased that the committee has broadly supported the Government's approach to improving UK construction performance through "Rethinking Construction" and "Accelerating Change". Issues of fair payment and quality, defect-free work are fundamental to the continued success of the UK construction industry.

The Department of Trade and Industry intends to respond to the Select Committee's recommendations on behalf of the Government by Tuesday 4 February. It would not be appropriate for me to comment on the Select Committee's recommendations before the Committee has had the opportunity to consider my response.

Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation)

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals there are to extend anti-discrimination law to cover discrimination in employment and training on grounds of sexual orientation. [93485]

Alan Johnson: The Government are committed to introduce new legislation (implementing the Article 13 Employment Directive) to outlaw unfair discrimination at work and in training on grounds of sexual orientation by December 2003.

Our plans were published on 23 October 2002 in the consultation document 'Equality and Diversity: The Way Ahead'. Consultation ended on 24 January. We will consider responses before laying regulations before Parliament later in the year.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proposals she has under the Employment Equality (Sexual Orientation) Regulations 2003 to allow unmarried partners to leave their pensions to their surviving partner of either sex when they die. [93484]

Alan Johnson: We consulted on proposals to implement the employment directive in the document 'Equality and Diversity: The Way Ahead'. In our view, rules which restrict benefits to opposite sex partners—whether or not they are married to the pension holder—are likely to constitute unlawful discrimination.

Because the directive is 'without prejudice to national laws on marital status and the benefits dependent thereon' however, we proposed that benefits aimed exclusively at married couples would continue to be allowable.

The consultation ended on 24 January. We will consider responses before laying the regulations before Parliament later in the year.

Job Sharing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the extent of job sharing in her Department. [90874]

Ms Hewitt: Currently in DTI, there are around 28 job shares, including three job shares at senior civil service level; two people work school term times only and the staff survey shows that 78 per cent. of staff state that their managers allow working patterns to help them balance work and home life.

The Department launched a new flexible working policy including guidance for managers and staff in April 2002, to ensure that new ways of working are available to all individuals and the benefits to stakeholders, customers, managers and staff are fully maximised. Emerging results reflect great success with an increase in take up of flexible patterns, including compressed hours. Further evaluation will be carried out in April this year. In February this year, we will be launching a more comprehensive toolkit for managers and staff to provide on-going support and advice.

North Sea Oil

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the (a) size and (b) lifespan of the North Sea oil reserves. [94126]

Mr. Wilson: The Department publishes annually estimates of oil reserves on the UK Continental Shelf. The latest estimates are that, as at the end of 2001, remaining proven and probable discovered recoverable reserves amounted to 955 million tonnes. A further 475 million tonnes are classified as possible reserves. It is also estimated that, as of that date, additional reserves of between 205 and 1,930 million tonnes existed in fields that had not yet been discovered. How long these reserves will last will depend on whether the additional and possible reserves are brought into production and the rate at which they are extracted, but production is expected to continue beyond 2020.

Nurse Co-ordinators

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance will be given to the proposed nurse co-ordinators on seeking consent from potential embryo donors under the new MRC initiative. [93392]

Ms Hewitt: The regulatory agencies have agreed that there should be standard donor information and consent forms for the donation of embryos. These have been developed by a committee comprising the Medical Research Council (MRC), Department of Health, Human Fertilisation and Embryology Authority (HFEA), and Medicines Control Agency and chaired by Professor Richardson (a lawyer and member of the MRC Council). The documentation is being reviewed by the MRC Stem Cell Steering Committee, chaired by Lord Patel. It will then be reviewed by HFEA committees, and once the final draft has been approved, it will be piloted in a selection of IVF clinics. It will then be finalised and distributed to all IVF clinics.

Post Office Closures

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) urban and (b) rural post offices have closed in Hull and the East Riding since 1 May 1997. [93822]

Mr. Timms: I am informed by Post Office Ltd. that historic data on the post office network are not available in the form requested as the company does not require these data for operational reasons. I further understand from the company that it compiled a list of post offices by parliamentary constituency as of 20 April 2002, showing their classification as urban or rural offices. A copy of this list is held in the Libraries of the House.

Postage Costs

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on recent consultations by Postcomm of a possible rise in the cost of postage. [94097]

Mr. Timms: Postcomm is responsible for setting the price control for Royal Mail services. It issued a consultation on the future price control on 3 October 2002. My Department responded with a written submission, now publicly available on the Postcomm website, so that Postcomm could, in reaching a decision, take into account the context and rationale for the commercially based financial package for Royal Mail, the details of which I announced to the House on 16 January 2003. Postcomm has not yet announced its final decision.

Renewable Energy Exporters

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many applications have been received by potential renewable energy exporters for the £50 million in ECGD cover to be available from April 2003; and what extra resources have been allocated within the DTI to encourage applications from the renewable energy sector in the UK. [94149]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 January 2003]: ECGD has received three applications and one preliminary inquiry for renewable energy projects that could qualify for support under the renewable energy initiative. Contracts for these projects have still to be agreed, and no guarantees have yet been issued.

The DTI's Renewables UK team, with two Renewable Energy Trade Promoters, are now encouraging applications from the UK renewable energy sector as part of their on-going trade promotion activities.

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the £50 million of ECGD cover to be allocated to renewable energy exporters from April 2003 will be available to exporters of energy from waste technology to the developing world, including municipal mass burn incineration. [94150]

Ms Hewitt [holding answer 29 January 2003]: Waste to power projects are generally considered to be a source of renewable energy. Such projects will be eligible for support, provided all other environmental impacts, such as air emissions and impacts on local populations etc, are acceptable.

UK Economy

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry pursuant to the answer of the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Nigel Griffiths) to the hon. Member for Castle Point (Bob Spink), of 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 809, by which method the Department determines that the United Kingdom is the fastest growing economy in the world. [93851]

Ms Hewitt: The best measures of economic activity is GDP. In 2001, the latest year for which data are available, the UK economy grew by 2.0 per cent. This growth rate was higher than that for the other major economies (G7 countries), according to the latest data published by the OECD.

TRANSPORT

Jones Act

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the effects on (a) UK and (b) EU shipping of the United States Jones Act] [93946]

Mr. Jamieson: The US Merchant Marine Act of 1920, otherwise known as the "Jones Act", restricts the carriage of sea borne cargo between ports in the United States to vessels constructed and registered in the United States, owned by a United States citizen and manned by United States seafarers. The Act has the effect of denying the opportunity to foreign shipping, including ships registered in the UK and other EU Member States, to compete for coastal trade in the United States. It also affects adversely the ability of foreign shipping companies to move their international cargoes and empty containers more efficiently between US ports using their own vessels on existing international services.

A14

Mr. Djanogly: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when the major A14 improvements included in the preferred plan of the Cambridge to Huntingdon multi-modal study will be entered into the trunk road targeted programme of improvements; [94565]

(2) whether the funding required for the major A14 improvements included in the preferred plan of the Cambridge to Huntingdon multi-modal study has been reserved within the 10-Year Plan; [94564] s

(3) what stage the preparatory work on the major A14 improvements included in the preferred plan of the Cambridge to Huntingdon multi-modal study has reached; and when the preparatory work is expected to be completed; [94567]

(4) for what reasons a timetable to carry out the major A14 improvements was not included in the Department for Transport, "Delivering Better Transport: Progress Report" of December 2002. [94566]

Mr. Jamieson: Preparatory work on the major improvements to the A14 between Huntingdon and Cambridge, which came out of the Cambridge to Huntingdon multi-modal study, are at an advanced stage. The Secretary of State will shortly be receiving the Highways Agency's recommendations after which he will announce his decision. Sufficient funds are available from those set aside for strategic roads in the Government's 10-Year Plan for Transport to pay for this scheme.

A timetable for this scheme was not included in our progress report on the 10-Year Plan entitled "Delivering Better Transport: Progress Report" published in December as it has yet to be added to the TPI. Such information will be made available when the Secretary of State announces his decision.

External Consultants

Mr. Laurence Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much his Department has spent on external consultants since its creation; what percentage this sum represents of (a) his Department's total expenditure and (b) the cost of running the Department; and if he will make a statement. [93955]

Mr. Jamieson [holding answer 28 January 2003]: My Department came into being in May 2002. Expenditure on external consultants by my Department up to the end of December 2002 was £93.1 million. This represents 1 per cent. of my departmental expenditure limit. Of this £93.1 million, £1.7 million relates to the cost of running my Department and this represents 0.4 per cent. of my Department's administration costs limit.

London Underground PPP

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much the (a) Tube Lines and (b) Metronet consortia have spent on bid costs as part of their PPP bids for London Underground projects. [93397]

Mr. Jamieson: The total costs of all of the bidders, successful and unsuccessful, are estimated to be around £270 million. As my reply of 13 January 2003 Official Report, column 398 W to the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Osborne) explained, the PPP amounts to modernisation of the entire underground network over the next 30-years. The level of bid costs reflects this and also the lengthy duration of the bidding process, which commenced in October 1999. Nonetheless, the level of bid costs represents only an extremely small proportion of the value of investment that will be delivered over the life of the contracts.

Motorway Tolls

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the likely impact of the introduction of motorway tolls, other than on the M6, on (a) reduction of congestion and (b) encouragement of use of public transport. [93103]

Mr. Jamieson holding answer 23 January 2003: The 'Background Analysis' published in July 2000 as part of the Ten Year Plan For Transport contained an illustrative scenario for charges on the trunk road network by 2010 at times and places where congestion was highest. That indicated an overall reduction of 9 per cent. in congestion compared with levels in 2000, though with variations between areas, including increases of congestion in some places. The effect on public transport was not calculated.

The Government's report on 'Modernising the Taxation of the Haulage Industry: Progress Report One' published in April 2002 reported analysis of a distance-based lorry road-user charge applying only to motorways, which suggested a reduction of lorry traffic of 25 per cent. on motorways but increases in congestion elsewhere.

Network Rail

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Network Rail has lost since its establishment. [93607]

Mr. Spellar: As with any other private company, Network Rail will publish accounts in accordance with the requirements of the Companies Acts. These will show the profit or loss for the relevant reporting period.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92247]

Mr. Jamieson: For details of how much my department has spent on publicity and advertising in each year since 1995/96 to 2002/03,1 refer the hon. Member to replies to the hon.Members for:-

1. Isle Of Wight (Mr. Turner) on 21March 2002, Official Report, column 484 W which gives annual expenditure from 1997/98 to 2001/02,

2. Buckingham (Mr. Bercow) on 28 February 2002 Official Report, column 1516–1517W, which requested details of publicity and advertising campaigns and

3. Twickenham (Dr. Cable) on 9 November 2001 Official Report, column 453–454W, which details the advertising spend from 1995/96 to 2000/2001.

Figures provided in these replies refer to expenditure by the Department for Transport, Local Government and the Regions (DTLR) and the Department for Environment, Transport and the Regions (DETR). Breaking out the transport element for the years 1995/96 to 2000/01 could only be done at disproportionate cost.

In 2001/02, the Department for Transport spent £15 million on publicity of which £9.85 million was spent on advertising.

For the current year, 2002/2003 the Department for Transport's estimated spend for publicity and advertising is £17.9 million of which approximately £10.6 million is currently allocated to advertising.

My Department's main publicity relates to Think! which promotes road safety messages to adults and children and is a vital part of the Government's strategy to reduce road deaths and injuries.

Figures for Department Agencies and NDPDs are not held centrally and could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

Publicity Campaigns

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what promotional and public information campaigns his Department is (a) running and (b) planning to run during the next six months; and for each campaign, (i) how much it will cost, (A) in total and (B) to his Department, (ii) what agencies or bodies are undertaking the work and (iii) what is its planned duration. [93807]

Mr. Jamieson: My Department is currently running three publicity campaigns:

Think! road safety:

My Department's main publicity campaign, where we intend over the next six/12 months to concentrate on messages covering child road safety, child restraints, teenage road safety, speed, seatbelts, fatigue, mobile phones, drink drive and motorcycle safety. Details of the Think! campaign calendar are regularly updated and can be viewed at www.thinkroadsafetv.gov.uk. The Think! advertising and publicity budget for 2003–04 should be just over £14 million, £6 million of which should be spent in the next six months.

Traveline:

Promotion of a public transport information service where expenditure of £570k is anticipated between December 2002 and July 2003 covering advertising in directories, merchandising material and posters/leaflets.

Airports Consultation:

Publicity to raise awareness of the current national consultation on the future development of air transport in the United Kingdom. The latest consultation will run from February to May at an estimated cost of £260,000.

In developing these campaigns we use a range of external agencies to help take our campaign strategies forward. The creative work for the Think! campaign is currently provided by two advertising agencies—Leo Burnett and AMV with media planning/buying arranged through Carat. Two external agencies—QBO and Fishburn Hedges are also employed to extend campaign messages to lifestyle magazines and other media; while on traveline, Grasshopper have been employed to secure wider promotional opportunities.

In addition the Department uses a range of companies on frameworks covering research, design, typesetting, paper and print, and storage/distribution. Details of fees paid to each company are commercial in confidence.

Railtrack (Administration)

Mr. Redwood:: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how much the Administration for Railtrack claimed in fees and expenses. [93605]

(2) what the total cost was of administration for Railtrack. [93608]

Mr. Spellar: To date, total costs incurred are £49.5 million. Under the Railway Administration Order Rules 2001, the administrators intend to apply the High Court to seek approval for their fees and expenses. Network Rail will then reimburse the Department for Transport for those costs that were properly an expense of the administration. Only when the High Court has made a decision on the application will the total costs of administration be known.

Regional Air Services

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport from which organisations and corporate entities he has received representations on the South East and East of England Regional Air Services study and future airport policy in the South East, since 30 November 2002. [94447]

Mr. Jamieson: The following information lists responses to "The Future Development of Air Transport in the United Kingdom (South East)" received from the main organisations and corporate entities dated 30 November 2002 or later. It includes responses submitted both in hard and electronic copy, but does not include responses to the NOP questionnaire.

The consultation period throughout the UK remains open until we have consulted on Gatwick runway options. We hope to issue a revised South East consultation paper next month. The consultation period will then run for four months after the date of publication of the new material. Those who have already responded to the consultation will be able to amend, add to, or replace their response having considered the new material, if they wish to do so.

All responses to the consultation will be considered and analysed carefully before final decisions are taken. These will be set out in an air transport White Paper, which we aim to publish towards the end of the year.

Road Building (Stonehenge)

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to publish the draft orders relating to road construction at Stonehenge. [94084]

Mr Jamieson: The current programme is for draft orders to be published in May 2003.

Rolling Stock

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the estimated cost is of upgrading the power supply in Railtrack's southern zones to enable the comprehensive overhaul of current trains and rolling stock. [93817]

Mr. Jamieson: The scope, scale and cost of the power supply upgrade is still emerging but the current estimate is £915 million including a contingency.

Strategic Rail Authority (Consultants)

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 7 January, Official Report, column 108W, on Strategic Rail Authority (Consultants), (1) if he will make a statement on the work conducted for the Strategic Rail Authority (a) by Booz Allen and Hamilton on the Virgin trains franchise negotiation, (b) by KPMG on financial advisers for Virgin Rail Group Negotiations and (c) by KPMG on the Virgin Rail Ltd scope review and the financial advisers for Virgin Rail Group Negotiations. [93234]

(2) if he will make a statement on (a) the PLANET models, (b) the work by Nichols on Mark 1 rolling-stock, (c) the work by MDS Transmodal on innovation competition, (d) Project Tide, (e) the WARM(E) project and (f) Project Radar. [93233]

(3) if he will place in the Library copies of the (a) review of international rail services conducted by Steer Davies and Gleave, (b) study into why operational performance has failed to revert to pre-Hatfield levels, conducted by AEA Technology, (c) studies of Project Ariel, SPVs and enhancements, conducted by Lazards, (d) study of the financial adviser to Scottish passenger rail franchise relet conducted by KPMG, (e) study of Mark 1, strategic reserve vehicles conducted by Jacobs Gibb, (f) studies on due diligence of Railtrack and CLG bus plan, conducted by Booz Allen and Hamilton and (g) ELL provision of timetable validation study conducted by AEA Technology. [93232]

Mr. Jamieson: These are matters for the Strategic Rail Authority. I have asked the Authority to contact the hon. Member directly about the information he seeks.

Terrorism

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many incidents of (a) terrorist activity and (b) suspected terrorist activity were recorded by (i) the Marine Accident Investigation Branch Transport

Police and (ii) other organisations relating to marine and port activities, in each year since 1997; and if he will make a statement. [93243]

Mr. Jamieson: No incidents of terrorist activity targeted against ports in the UK have been recorded since 1997. Similarly, in the same period, we have no record of any incidents of suspected terrorist activity targeted against UK ports or the ships serving them. However, the hon.Member will recall the successful boarding of the MV Nisha on 21December 2001 in response to a potential terrorist threat. Our suspicions proved on that occasion to be unfounded, as the ship was wholly innocent.

Wapping Tube Station

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of Wapping tube station. [93730]

Mr. Jamieson: Preparatory work to enable a northern extension to London Underground's East London Line is under way. It is clearly crucial that stations on any extended line comply with modern safety standards, given the increased number of passengers expected. I understand that Wapping presents particular challenges in ensuring safety compliance, given its age and restricted space. Studies are under way to explore the options for addressing these issues and no final decision has been taken on the station's future.

TREASURY

Euro

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has had with the governments of (a) Gibraltar, (b) Jersey, (c) Guernsey and (d) the Isle of Man regarding the Single European Currency. [94200]

Ruth Kelly: Government officials meet often with representatives of Gibraltar, the Channel Islands and the Isle of Man to discuss a range of issues.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what target he has for the proportion of businesses which will be prepared for euro entry at the time of his Department's assessment on whether Britain meets the five economic tests for euro entry. [94344]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are committed to completing an assessment of the five tests within two years of the start of this Parliament. While the Treasury has not set any targets for the proportion of businesses to make preparations it has published two outline National Changeover Plans and regular euro preparation updates containing practical information. Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House. It is up to individual businesses to decide whether to make preparations for possible UK entry.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when his Department next intends to conduct a survey of the proportion of businesses prepared for membership of the euro. [94345]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answers I gave to the hon. Member for Truro and St. Austell (Matthew Taylor) on 13 January 2003, Official Report, columns 414W-15W, and 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 54W.

Savings and Pensions

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what incentives he is putting in place to encourage young people to invest in (a) individual pension schemes and (b) individual savings accounts; and if he will make a statement. [94250]

Ruth Kelly: The Government recognise the value of saving and asset-ownership in providing people with security, comfort in retirement and long-term independence and security. To address the problems that may have discouraged people of all ages from saving in the past the Government are implementing a strategy designed to:

create the right environment for saving;

provide incentives to save through favourable tax treatment; and ensure everyone has access to the financial information they need to make informed savings decisions.

Young people will, in particular, benefit from pension rules allowing annual contributions of £3,600 irrespective of earnings and already benefit from the ISA rules which allow 16 and 17-year-olds to open a cash ISA. These measures provide the opportunity to begin saving tax-free at an early stage.

Textile Industry

Keith Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of staff made redundant in the textile industry between 1990 and 2000 found new employment; and in what sectors. [92099]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. Keith Vaz, dated 30 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question on redundancies in the textile industry. (92099)

The available information from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) of households is that a total of 151,000 people were made redundant from the textiles and textile products industry (Standard Industrial Classification 1992 subsection DB) between March 1997 and November 2002. Of these, 32 per cent had found new employment by the time they were interviewed in the LFS up to three months after being made redundant. Of the 151,000 people made redundant, 13 per cent found new employment in the textiles and textile products industry, 19 per cent found new employment in the manufacturing sector as a whole and 13 per cent in the services sector.

Unemployment (Haltemprice and Howden)

David Davis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were unemployed in Haltemprice and Howden in the last 13 months for which figures are available. [93783]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. David Davis, dated 30 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent question regarding the number of people who were unemployed in Haltemprice and Howden in (a) the last month for which figures are available and (b) the preceding 12 months.

The Office for National Statistics (ONS) compiles statistics of unemployment from surveys following the international standard International Labour Organisation definition. However the survey sample size is too small to provide estimates for the Haltemprice and Howden Parliamentary Constituency. ONS also compiles claimant count statistics of those claiming Jobseeker's Allowance.

Information on the level of claimants for the Haltemprice and Howden Parliamentary Constituency between December 2001 and December 2002 can be obtained from the Nomis(r) database at the House of Commons Library.

Working Tax Credit

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many claim forms for (a) child tax credit and (b) working tax credit have so far (i) been issued and (ii) been returned. [94023]

Dawn Primarolo: There is a single claim form for these tax credits.

By 29 December 2002 about 4.7 million claim forms had been-issuedand just over 2 million claims received (including 165,000 on-line).

Accounting Practices

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to increase the powers and resources of the Financial Services Authority to investigate the accounting practices of companies. [94520]

Ruth Kelly: The powers of the Financial Services Authority are set out in the Financial Services and Markets Act 2000 and the secondary legislation under it. In respect of the accounting practices of companies, my RHF the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced yesterday, in response to the recommendation of the Co-ordinating Group on Audit and Accounting Issues, that the FSA will play a greater role, in partnership with the Financial Reporting Review Panel, in the enforcement of accounting standards, particularly in identifying the risks to be investigated and the selection of company accounts for investigation.

Annuities

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether the Financial Services Authority will add income drawdown schemes to the comparative tables that it plans to publish on annuities. [93878]

Ruth Kelly: The Financial Services Authority (FSA) tell me that they do not propose to include income drawdown arrangements in their comparative tables.

The FSA annuity Comparative Tables will provide annuity rates for what are generally referred to as 'standards annuities' joint and single life, escalating and non-escalating, smoker and non-smoker rates. These are the annuities purchased by over 80 per cent. of annuitants.

Baby Expenses

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provision is available for poorer families to assist with expenses incurred in the arrival of a new baby, with particular reference to the purchase of new mattresses. [93475]

Ruth Kelly: The sure start maternity grant, worth £500, is available to people receiving income support, income-based jobseekers allowance, working families tax credit or disabled person's tax credit, to help cover the costs of a new baby. Claims can be made at any time from 11 weeks before a baby is due until three months after birth, or up to three months after the date of adoption or parental order. Those claiming must submit a certificate signed by a health professional confirming that health and welfare advice has been received.

From April 2003, the child tax credit will create a seamless system of income-related support for families with children. Paid on top of child benefit, the child tax credit will provide a family element of £545 a year for all families with incomes of less than £50,000, plus a child element of £1,445 for each child or young person in families with incomes of up to around £13,000 a year. In the first year of a child's birth the family element is doubled, to £1,090.

From April 2003, the sure start maternity grant will be available to all parents who receive more than the family element of child tax credit.

Budget Changes

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the principal components of the changes in the budget of HM Treasury from 2002–03 to 2005–06; and if he will make a statement. [92791]

Ruth Kelly: The largest components are a £34 million anticipated decrease in the utilisation of accounting provisions by the Office of Government Commerce relating to the vacant civil estate; and a £15 million reduction in expected OGC income from other Departments.

Business Investment

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the level of business investment was in each quarter since 1997. [94396]

Ruth Kelly: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Len Cook to Mr. Stephen O'Brien, dated 30 January 2003:

As National Statistician I have been asked to reply to your recent question concerning what the level of business investment was in each quarter since 1997. (94396)

The information is available in the January 2003 edition of Economic Trends (No. 590). This is a National Statistics publication and is available in the House of Commons Library. The data required are contained in "Table 2.7 Gross fixed capital formation" on page T10. The series identifier for seasonally adjusted constant price business investment is NPEL.

The most recent business investment data are also available from the business investment First Release which is available in the Library or from the National Statistics website "www.statistics.gov.uk" under "more releases".

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned into the long-term effect of a drop in business investment on the (a) competitiveness, (b) productivity and (c) purchasing power parity of the UK economy. [94399]

Ruth Kelly: There is ample evidence that business investment is one of the essential drivers rising productivity and living standards. The Government's approach to raising competitiveness and productivity centres: on maintaining a stable macroeconomic environment conducive to individuals and firms investing for the long term; and implementing microeconomic reforms to remove any barriers that prevent markets from functioning effectively.

Business Property Refit

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will estimate the change in Government revenues from the abolition of Business Property Refit and Agricultural Property Refit; and if he will make a statement. [93718]

(2) if he will estimate the change in Government revenues from imposing a ceiling of £250,000 on assets that receive relief under Business Property Refit and Agricultural Property Refit; and if he will make a statement. [93719]

Dawn Primarolo: The costs of inheritance tax business property and agricultural property relief in 2002–2003 are forecast to be £110 million and £130 million respectively.

Capping each relief at £250,000 would reduce these costs to £50 million and £70 million respectively.

Capital Gains Tax

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the change in Government revenues from changing the capital gains tax regime simultaneously to abolish taper relief, reintroduce retirement relief and abolish the exemption of capital gains accrued but unrealised at death. [93717]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year yield, including the effect of likely taxpayer reaction, from simultaneously abolishing taper relief and reintroducing retirement relief is estimated to be £200 million in 2002–03 and £400 million in 2003–04.

The latest available estimate of the current cost of Capital Gains Tax relief for gains accrued but unrealised at death is £500 million for 2002–03. However this takes no account of taxpayers reaction to such a major change. The yield from abolition of this relief may be significantly different due to changes in taxpayers' behaviour.

A reliable estimate of the total yield from all measures is only available at disproportionate cost.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he last met the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss progress on county court judgments, committal proceedings and the withdrawal of driving licences for non-payment of maintenance; and if he will make a statement. [89764]

Malcolm Wicks: Ministers have regular meetings with the Chief Executive of the Child Support Agency to discuss, among other topics, the current performance of the Agency.

Civil Servants (Bonus Payments)

Mr. Lyons: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was paid in bonus payments to civil servants in 2001–02 related to performance in his Department. [92950]

Ruth Kelly: During the financial year 2001–02 a total of £274,980 in performance bonus payments was paid to staff.

Clearing Banks

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to open (a) the banking money transmission service and (b) central clearing to all major clearing banks. [94380]

Ruth Kelly: The Government are closely monitoring developments in money transmission systems—otherwise known as payment systems—and will introduce legislation to give the Office of Fair Trading (OFT) new powers to promote effective competition in payment systems as soon as parliamentary time allows. It is envisaged that these new powers will include provisions designed to tackle potential restrictions on access to payment systems.

Progress has already been made through, for example, reforms to the governance structures of the main UK payment systems. The Government welcome these moves by payment system participants to address the competition issues identified by the Cruickshank report and urges the industry to continue with these reforms.

To promote its understanding of how payment systems operate, and to help pave the way for its prospective powers, the OFT announced on 27 November that it will conduct an empirical study into recent payment system developments, starting early in 2003.

Climate Change Levy

Sue Doughty: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what receipts he received during the fiscal year 2001–02 from companies subject to negotiated agreements under the Climate Change Levy. [94144]

John Healey: Information is not available on the levy receipts the Exchequer received during 2001–02 from those companies covered by negotiated climate change agreements.

Construction Industry

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates the Inland Revenue has made of the costs of administering the Construction Industry Scheme (a) for the construction industry and (b) for the Inland Revenue in the last financial year. [91953]

Dawn Primarolo: The information is as follows:

(a) Construction businesses are not required to report the costs they incur in administering CIS and consequently information on compliance costs is limited. Any estimates are therefore tentative but for the year 2001–02 the Inland Revenue estimate that they could have been in the region of £75 million.

(b) The annual cost to the Inland Revenue of administering the IT system that supports CIS is in the order of £8 million. This figure does not include the costs of people working in our Network Offices and who support the system through processing work, customer support, and tax compliance activity. Generally speaking, these people carry out a wider range of activities and it would not be practical to apportion their costs between the time spent on CIS and on other activities.

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when a decision will be taken on the future of the Construction Industry Scheme. [94849]

Dawn Primarolo: A decision on the future of the Scheme will be taken following analysis of the responses to the consultation document, "The Inland Revenue and the Construction Industry: Working Together for a New Scheme".

Contingent Liabilities

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the [illegible]hequer (1) if he will list the Government's contingent liabilities; [94342]

(2) if he intends to list the Government's contingent liabilities in his forthcoming Budget statement; [9434[illegible]]

(3) if he will list the criteria which Government liabilities must meet if they are not to be included in estimates of public borrowing. [94341]

Mr. Boateng: Under UK accounting standards, a liability is treated as contingent if it is dependent on uncertain future events, cannot be estimated with sufficient reliability, or is not likely to be called. By definition, contingent liabilities may never result in actual expenditure. Therefore they are not included in estimates of public expenditure or borrowing unless or until there is a reasonable expectation that expenditure will be incurred.

The Government does not need to publish separate details of contingent liabilities in the forthcoming Budget statement because these are published in the Supplementary Statement to the Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts. This lists all outstanding contingent liabilities during the financial year where they are reportable to Parliament using the criteria set out in Government Accounting. The Supplementary Statement for 2001–02 was published on 19 December 2002 (HC 381). In addition, departments must follow accounting standards when disclosing contingent liabilities by way of notes to their accounts.

Cooking Oil Fuels

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on paying duty on fuels made from cooking oil. [93474]

John Healey: Any substance, whether or not it is a mineral oil, is subject to excise duty where it is used as a road fuel. This duty is normally charged at the rate of the fuel for which that substance is substituting. Where cooking oil is used in diesel-engined cars, it will normally be liable at the rate set for ultra-low sulphur diesel, which is 45.82p per litre. Some cooking oil, however, may meet the specification for biodiesel for duty purposes. The duty rate for biodiesel used as a road fuel is 25.82p per litre.

Currency Instability

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the effect on the UK economy of the current relative instability of major international currencies. [94851]

Ruth Kelly: The Paper for the Treasury Committee on the Treasury's approach to the preliminary and technical work, published on 6 September 2002, set out a number of supporting studies that will be published alongside the assessment of the five economic tests. Further detail can be found in the 6 September Paper. Analysis of international currency movements and their effects will form part of this work.

Earnings

Andrew George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the house price to earnings ratio was for each year since 1978 in (a) England, (b) local authorities defined as rural and (c) by region. [90830]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

Only some of the data requested are available because earnings data at local authority level cannot easily be obtained within a reasonable time period.

The house price to earnings ratio has been determined from 1990 to 2001 (a) for England and (b) for each of the Government office regions. It is important to note that the average earnings used to produce this table are based on the region where the individual worked—which is not necessarily the region in which they lived. Comparisons with house prices within the same region may therefore be inappropriate.

EU (Economic Reform)

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 23 January 2003, Official Report, column 428W, on EU (economic reform), what discussions his Department has had with its European counterparts regarding (a) the steps for economic reform in the EU, detailed in the Government's White Paper on European economic reform, "Realising Europe's Potential: Economic Reform in Europe", February 2002 and (b) general economic reform in the EU. [94429]

Ruth Kelly: The Department has had numerous discussions with its European counterparts on the economic reform issues detailed in the Government's White Paper, and on European economic reform in general, within ECOFIN (and its associated committees), and in the context of the annual spring European Council on economic reform.

EU Financial Market Liberalisation

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether his Department's plans for liberalisation of financial markets in the European Union, as set out in the Government's White Paper on European economic reform, "Realising Europe's Potential: Economic Reform in Europe", February 2002, depend on (a) wider membership of European economic and monetary union among all EU states and (b) British membership of EMU. [94394]

Ruth Kelly: Liberalisation of financial markets does not depend on membership of European economic and monetary union.

Exempt Transfers

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of (a) the number and (b) the value of potentially exempt transfers in the last year for which data is available; and if he will make a statement. [93710]

Dawn Primarolo: Insufficient data is available on which to base such estimates.

HIPC Initiative

John Barrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, columns 54–55W, on the HIPC initiative, for what reasons figures for 2001 and 2002 on external debt outstanding for countries between decision point and completion point are not available. [93912]

John Healey: There are various sources of data for the external debt of developing countries. However, the most authoritative and complete source is "Global Development Finance" published by the World Bank. The last edition published in March 2002 provides figures on external debt for all these countries up until 2000, figures for 2001 will be published in the 2003 edition.

HM Customs

Mr. Kilfoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether it is the policy of HM Customs to withhold from the media details of seizures, arrests, and subsequent charges. [92997]

(2) what gun and other ordnance seizures were made by HM Customs in (a) 2000, (b) 2001 and (c) 2002, identifying (i) the weaponry seized, (ii) where it was seized, (iii) where the weaponry was hidden and (iv) subsequent arrests and charges; and what estimate he has made of the number of seizures where the weaponry was destined for organised crime gangs. [93006]

(3) how many gun seizures there were at British ports by HM Customs between April 2002 and November 2002; how many arrests were made; and how many people were charged in connection with these seizures. [92979]

John Healey: Up to 31 March 2002, the period for which information is available, most seizures of firearms were regulatory breaches with little to suggest they were being imported for criminal purposes. Number of illegal firearms seized by Customs and Excise

Number of illegal firearms seized by Customs and Excise

Year ended 31 March	Hand guns	Rifles	Shotguns	Self defence sprays	Stun guns	Total
2000	417	95	129	1,169	101	1,911
2001	163	48	44	2,428	114	2,697
2002	304	111	219	1,237	144	2,015

The majority of seizures were made in various ports, airports and international parcel postal depots. No centrally held and readily accessible information is available on where the weapons were hidden or whether any detection involved criminal proceedings being instituted.

Figures for illegal firearms seized are not yet available for the period between April and November 2002, but within the overall totals since April 2002 Customs have made four significant seizures of consignments of guns believed to be destined for criminal use. Firearms seized total some 20 hand guns and 35 sub machine guns plus a quantity of ammunition and explosive. The cases are subject to continuing investigation by Police and Customs. Customs do not release information if there is a risk of prejudicing ongoing or future enquiries, as provided for by Exemptions 4 (Law enforcement and legal proceedings) and 7 (Effective management and operations of the public service) of the Code of Practice on Access toGovernment Information.

House Prices

Andrew George: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the average price of a house was in real terms in (a) England and (b) local authorities defined as rural, by region, in each year since 1978. [90834]

Mr. McNulty: I have been asked to reply.

Although the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's Survey of Mortgage Lenders has been a valuable source of information on house prices back to 1968, data from the survey are reliable only down to regional level. Reliable house price information at local authority level has only been available since 1996 when the Land Registry constructed its database of all property transactions in England and Wales. Consequently the data presented in the following tables cover only the period 1996 to 2002 (Ql to Q3).

Income Drawdown Policies

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many investors have taken out income drawdown policies in each year since their inception in 1995; [93877]

(2) how many people in each of the last five years who previously had an income drawdown scheme bought an annuity before they were 75-years-old. [93876]

Ruth Kelly: Available estimates of the number of new income drawdown plans purchased are contained in the following table .

New Income Drawdown Plans[1]

Income Tax

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the revenue gain from an income tax rate of (a) 42 per cent., (b) 44 per cent., (c) 45 per cent., (d) 48 per cent., (e) 50 per cent., (f) 52 per cent., (g) 54 per cent. and (h) 55 per cent. on taxable incomes exceeding (i) £60,000 pa, (ii) £70,000 pa, (iii) £80,000 pa, (iv) £90,000 pa, (v) £100,000 pa, (vi) £120,000 pa, (vii) £140,000 pa, (viii) £150,000 pa, (ix) £175,000 pa, (x) £200,000 pa, (xi) £220,000 pa and (xii) £250,000 pa. [93478]

Dawn Primarolo: The full year revenue gain in 2003–04 from making the changes is set out in the table.

The estimates are based on the Survey of Personal Incomes and are consistent with the November 2002 pre-Budget report. These estimates exclude any behavioural response to the tax change.

Income Tax/National Insurance

Richard Burden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the average lifetime contributions in (a) Income Tax and (b) National Insurance of (i) university graduates and (ii) non-graduates. [94125]

Dawn Primarolo: The Inland Revenue does not hold information about the qualifications of taxpayers or people paying National Insurance Contributions,

Industrial Action/Illness

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many working days have been lost in his Department and its predecessors due to (a) industrial action and (b) illness in each year since 1997. [93166]

Ruth Kelly (holding answer 27 January 2003): No working days have been lost due to industrial action since 1997. On sick absence I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ribble Valley (Mr. Nigel Evans) on 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 753W.

Landfill Tax Credit Scheme

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of unpaid volunteers involved in schemes funded by the landfill tax credit scheme. [94085]

John Healey: No estimate has been made of the number of unpaid volunteers involved in projects funded by the Landfill Tax Credit Scheme. However, the Government are conscious of the good work they do, and is committed to promoting volunteering, as outlined in the discussion document "Next Steps on Volunteering and Giving in the UK", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Volunteers can make an enormous contribution to our society, in helping to meet social and environmental challenges.

Mr. Flook: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of private funds attracted by the public funds provided by the landfill tax credit scheme in each year since its inception. [94086]

John Healey: No precise figures are held on the quantity of match funding obtained by projects funded through the landfill tax credit scheme. However, a study by Glasgow Caledonian University for Entrust, the scheme's regulator, has estimated that on average waste management and recycling projects have levered in approximately 34 per cent. additional funding in addition to landfill tax credit scheme funding.

Ministerial Travel

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the (a) international and (b) domestic travel costs were of each Treasury Minister in each year since 2000. [94377]

Ruth Kelly: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the answer given by the Minister of State, Cabinet Office, on 22 January 2003, Official Report, column 334W.

Mortgage Equity

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the level of mortgage equity withdrawal was in each quarter since 1997. [94395]

Ruth Kelly: Figures on mortgage equity withdrawal are produced by the Bank of England and can be found on their website at www.bankofengland.co.uk/mew.xls.

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what research he has commissioned into the effect mortgage equity withdrawal has on the UK economy; and if he will make a statement. [94410]

Ruth Kelly: Full consideration is given to such effects in the assessments of economic developments and prospects published by the Treasury in Pre-Budget and Budget Reports.

Public-Private Partnerships

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 21 November 2002, Official Report, column 280W, on PPP and PFI, what plans he has to review the system of assessing whether a PFI deal is on or off balance sheet. [94423]

Mr. Boateng: None. The Government's policy when accounting for PFI contracts is to follow Generally Accepted Accounting Practice (GAAP). In particular, Application Note F to Financial Reporting Standard 5—Private Finance Initiatives and Similar Contract complemented by the Treasury Taskforce Technical Note No. 1 (Revised) 'How to Account for PFI Transactions'.

The balance sheet treatment of particular assets procured through PFI is audited by the National Audit Office or, where applicable, the Audit Commission, not the Government.

Rebated Gas Oil

John Barrett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 16 January 2003, Official Report, column 752W, on rebated gas oil, what criteria are used in determining whether red diesel can be used by a vehicle. [94028]

John Healey: The Hydrocarbon Oil Duties Act 1979 sets out the circumstances in which rebated (or "red") diesel can be used in vehicles.

HM Customs and Excise Notice 75—"Fuel for road vehicles"—explains this and is available from either the Customs National Advice Service (tel: 0845 010900) or from the Customs website (www.hmce.gov.uk).

Stock Market

Mr. Stephen O'Brien: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions his Department has had with representatives of (a) business, (b) the insurance sector and (c) the pension fund sector on the value of the FTSE 100 share index. [94390]

Ruth Kelly: Ministers and officials regularly meet representatives from business and the financial sector and discuss a range of issues.

Tax Harmonisation

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he (a) has had and (b) intends to have with his European counterparts concerning harmonisation of VAT and corporation tax levels as a result of Franco-German agreement concerning the future of the European Union. [92768]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government have made it quite clear that the harmonisation of VAT and corporation tax levels is not the way forward for Europe.

Tobacco Smuggling

Norman Lamb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 48W, on tobacco smuggling, when the Government expect to publish their response to the Committee of Public Accounts' report on tobacco smuggling. [94018]

John Healey: The Government will publish their response to the Committee of Public Accounts' report on tobacco smuggling in the normal way by Treasury Minute.

Diversity Programme

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the cost of the HM Treasury (a) diversity action plan and (b) diversity programme in each year since 1997–98. [93447]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury's diversity awareness programme was introduced in spring 2001. The cost of the awareness programme is met from within the Treasury's existing DEL.

Feedback Programme

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost was of the HM Treasury 360 degree feedback programme in each of the last three years; how many HM Treasury staff went on this programme; what its purpose is; and if he will make a statement. [93446]

Ruth Kelly: The Treasury has in place a 360 feedback programme as part of its drive to improve leadership skills and in response to the Cabinet Office target that all of the Senior Civil Service should go through a 360 feedback and personal development programme. To date, 115 people have taken part in the programme, including 42 people below the Senior Civil Service. The cost of the programme was met from within the Treasury's existing DEL.

Staff (Pay)

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the highest percentage pay rises were among HM Treasury staff in each year from 1997; which staff received these pay rises; and if he will make a statement. [93442]

Ruth Kelly: The information is as follows:

Year	Percentage increase	Reason
1999–2000	7.4	Increase due to exceptional performance and relatively low existing salary
2000–01	15.1	Increase due to exceptional performance and relatively low existing salary
2001–02	15.0	Increase in the range minimum
2002–03	7.6	Increase due to exceptional performance and relatively low existing salary

To provide the percentage pay rises for the years 1997 and 1998 the cost would be disproportionate.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of the average percentage pay rise in (a) 2001–02 and (b) 2002–03 for HM Treasury staff, broken down to show (i) all staff and (ii) Senior Civil Service staff; and if he will make a statement. [93444]

Ruth Kelly: The information is as follows:

	2001–02	2002–03
Below Senior Civil Service (%)	4.4	4.2
Senior Civil Service (%)	5.0	8.4

WORK AND PENSIONS

Family Incomes

Mr. Keith Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many families had an income below £10,000 a year in each of the last five years. [94439]

Malcolm Wicks: The information is in the table:

Proportion of families with children with total income below £10,000 a year at 2001–02 prices

	Percentage
1997–98	16
1998–99	15
1999–2000	13
2000–01	12
2001–02	11

Notes:

1. Figures are based on a total income of £10,000 at 2001–02 prices. Constant prices are worked out on the basis of survey year, for instance, April 2001 to March 2002.
2. The estimates are based on sample counts that have been adjusted for non-response using multi-purpose grossing factors that control for tenure type, council tax band and a number of demographic variables. Estimates are subject to sampling error and remaining response bias.
3. Total income is income from all sources for all adults and children, including tax credits.
4. Total income has not been adjusted for family size.

Family Resources Survey (Great Britain).

Family Incomes (Warrington, North)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what estimate he has made of the number of families in Warrington, North whose family income is (a) less than £10,000, (b) between £10,000 and £20,000 and (c) between £20,000 and £30,000 per annum. [94374]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is not available.

Child Benefit Claims

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many child benefit claims have been received in (a) total and (b) via the electronic claim process since the launch of the child benefit electronic claim form; and how many claims proved to be successful. [93054]

Malcolm Wicks: The Child Benefit electronic claims process was introduced on 28 October 2002. The total number of Child Benefit claims received in the Child Benefit Centre during the period 28 October 2002 to 13 January 2003 was 156,852. Of these, 1,797 claims were received electronically, 1.1 per cent. of overall total. During the same period around 11,000 claims were disallowed in total, although this will include some claims made before 28 October. No information is available on the proportion of disallowed claims that were received electronically.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what changes he plans to make to the operation of the Child Support Agency; when those changes will come into effect; and if he will make a statement. [94010]

Malcolm Wicks: I refer the hon. Member to the oral statement given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions to the House on 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 567–68.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what evaluation has been undertaken of the changes in the single room rent regulations of housing benefit; what the conclusion of that evaluation were; and if he will make a statement. [89410]

Malcolm Wicks: To help promote work incentives, we broadened the definition of the Single Room Rent (SRR) from 2 July 2001 to reflect better the type of accommodation available in the market to young single people. Our aim is both to ease the problems faced by young people in getting and maintaining accommodation, and encourage landlords to rent to young adults.

This year we will be testing out the Standard Local Housing Allowances (SLHA) in around 10 pathfinder local authorities. Private sector tenants will be paid according to average local rents rather than rents charged. This will allow people to know in advance what housing benefit support they will receive, promote choice and personal responsibility and bridge the gap between benefit and work by allowing tenants to budget for their own rent. The evaluation of the pathfinders will include tracking the effects of the SLHA on people under 25 years of age, and the results will inform consideration of whether any changes to the younger person rent restrictions are necessary.

As part of a wider project examining the options for simplification of housing benefit in the private rent sector, "Housing Benefit Simplification in the Private Rented Sector" by Pettigrew N and Thomas A (DWP in-house research report No.107), looked at the SRR. This report was published in December 2002 and a copy is available in the Library.

Income Support

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what assessment he has made of the impact of reducing or withdrawing income support from lone parent students prior to receipt of student loans at the start of term. [92103]

Malcolm Wicks: The Government are encouraging everyone with the necessary qualifications, including lone parents, to enter further and higher education. For further education institutions in England[1], we have increased the ring-fenced budget for child care funds by 20 per cent. to £36 million in 2002–03. In higher education in England and Wales[1], lone parents already pay no tuition fees if their income is less than £20,480, and have access to a range of support including grants for child care, school meals and travel, books and equipment. These grants are being simplified from next September, as all lone parents (including students) will now be eligible for the new child tax credit being introduced from April 2003. This will make it even easier for lone parents to make the transition from benefits to higher education.

Student loans are paid in three instalments and are taken into account in income-related benefits for the period they are intended to cover i.e. September to June. The Department for Education and Skills has made arrangements to ensure that students who need financial help in the period before their first loan instalment arrives, can receive a payment from the Access and Hardship Funds held by their university to tide them over. This payment is disregarded in assessing entitlement to income-related benefits.

[1] Further and higher education arrangements in Scotland may differ from those in England.

Minimum Wage

Pete Wishart: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions (1) if he will estimate the impact on the level of benefit payments of setting the minimum wage for young people at (a) £4.17 per hour and (b) £4.87 per hour; [90640]

(2) if he will estimate the impact on each benefit payable to those in paid employment of a national minimum wage of (a) £4.17 and (b) £4.87 for the next financial year; [90641]

(3) what estimate he has made of benefit savings which would result from an increase in the national minimum wage from (a) £4.20 to £4.87 and (b) £3.60 to £4.17 in (i) Scotland, (ii) England, (iii) Wales, and (iv) Northern Ireland; [90651]

(4) if he will estimate the impact on benefit payments in the next financial year of a single minimum wage for all age groups of (a) £4.17 per hour, (b) £4.20 per hour, (c) £4.87, (d) £5 per hour and (e) £5.30 per hour. [90652]

Malcolm Wicks: The information requested is in the table:

Set at £5.00 per hour for all age groups	82,000,000
Set at £5.30 per hour for all age groups	117,600,000

[1] The benefits included in the savings estimates are Pensioners Credit, Income Support, Jobseekers Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Rebate. Tax Credits administered by Inland Revenue have not been included.

[2] The model does not estimate changes in employment and therefore the results do not account for any changes that may occur in the supply and demand of labour as a result of changing the national minimum wage.

[3] Estimates cannot be broken down by benefit due to small sample sizes. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £100,000.

[4] The results show the impact of raising the adult minimum wage and the young persons minimum wage simultaneously.

Prisoners

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what steps are being taken to ensure that prisoners have immediate access to benefits and services provided by the Department on the point of release. [91369]

Malcolm Wicks: Ex-offenders have particular difficulties in returning to the labour market. We also know that those without accommodation or employment are twice as likely to re-offend. In recognition of this we are introducing a number of initiatives to help ex-offenders move into work.

£3 million has been allocated over three years to the development of Freshstart, launched in October 2001. Freshstart aims to improve the transition from custody to work through improving the links between prisons and jobcentres. It also provides prisoners who have not already secured a job with an appointment for a new jobseeker interview on release, providing direct access to jobs and the new deal, as well as speeding up their claim for jobseeker's allowance. By the end of November 2002, over 23,000 new jobseeker interviews had been booked.

In July 2002 we launched a pilot scheme to place touch-screen jobpoints in prisons. There are two trials currently running; computer access to the Department's Worktrain site in Durham, Onley, Askham Grange and Moorland prisons; and jobpoints in Lewes, Swansea, Hollesley Bay and Featherstone prisons.

We are also currently developing an Employment and Benefit Surgeries in Prisons project to meet the recommendations made in the Home Office Social Exclusion Unit report "Reducing re-offending by ex-prisoners". We aim to start national roll out later in 2003. The project will offer all prisoners aged 18 and over one-to-one guidance on access to the full range of benefits and services offered by the Department.Typically this will cover:

Job search activity

Training and education opportunities

Support programmes such as new deal and progress2workLinkUp

Procedures to follow and steps to take in making a claim to benefit

This new work will build upon and complement existing provision for ex-offenders.

We have also developed a number of pilot programmes called Progress2work-LinkUP which focus on providing support for those at greatest disadvantage within the labour market, including ex-offenders. This initiative extends existing provision to tackle the issues that represent significant barriers to employment. The pilots support people by:

providing specialist advice away from the normal New Deal and other mainstream measures and offering access and referral to appropriate specialists

Nine pilots were launched in autumn 2002 in Avon and Somerset, Merseyside and Metropolitan and West Yorkshire. Up to 10 further pilots are planned for 2003–04 focusing on the Greater Manchester, Lancashire, Nottinghamshire, West Midlands and Thames Valley areas.

Private Pension Annuities

Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what representations he has received about allowing people with an occupational pension as well as a private pension not to have to purchase an annuity for their private pension; and if he will make a statement. [94051]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

I am not aware of any such representations.

On 17 December 2002, the Government published, for consultation, simplification proposals for the pensions tax rules. The consultation paper, "Simplifying the Taxation of Pensions: Increasing Choice and Flexibility", is available in the House of Commons Library. The consultation is to allow people the opportunity to put forward their views before final decisions are taken.

HEALTH

Ambulance Service (East Riding)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many fully operational ambulances were stationed at each of the ambulance stations in the East Riding of Yorkshire in each year since 1997. [92904]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is shown in the table.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list by postcode area in Haltemprice and Howden the response times for ambulances reacting to (a) Category A and (b) Category B calls, excluding the response times of first responder vehicles, in the last 12 months for which figures are available. [92905]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Population Statistics (East Riding)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate how many children whose third birthday fell between 1 September 2002 and 31 December 2002 migrated into the East Riding of Yorkshire authority in each month since 1 April 2001. [93840]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mr. David Davis, dated 30 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your question on the migration of children to the East Riding of Yorkshire authority whose third birthday fell between 1 September 2002 and 31 December 2002. (93840)

The attached table shows the number of children born between 1 September 1999 and 31 December 1999 who moved into the East Riding Health Authority from other areas of the UK. The figures are shown by month from April 2001 to March 2002 and exclude any children who migrated from countries outside the UK. It should be noted that these statistics are subject to revision in light of the 2001 Census results.

Information for April 2002 onwards is not yet available; data for April to June 2002 will be available in March 2003, with data for the third and fourth quarters of 2002 becoming available in June and September 2003 respectively.

These estimates of internal migration have been taken from data provided to the Migration Statistics Unit at the Office for National Statistics by the National Health Service Central Register (NHSCR). The NHSCR is notified when a patient in England and Wales transfers to a new NHS doctor in a different health authority, or health board in Scotland or Northern Ireland.

Migrant moves of children born between 1 September and 31 December, 1999 into the East Riding Health Authority—moves taking place by month since 1st April, 2001

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 11 December 2002 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to Mr. and Mrs. A Wild; [92525]

(2) why he has not replied to the letter to him dated 11 December 2002 from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. A. Wild. [94693]

Mr. Milburn: A reply was sent to the right hon. Member on 29 January 2003.

CT Scanner (Blackpool)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the steps that need to be taken before an additional CT scanner can be installed at the Blackpool Victoria Hospital. [93374]

Jacqui Smith: Before any computed tomography (CT) scanner can be installed in the national health service, European Union legislation requires that a formal procurement process must be undertaken. This consists of an advert in the Official Journal of the European Community, followed by an evaluation of interested suppliers and an invitation to offer via tender. Once contracts have been signed, the successful supplier will agree a suitable delivery date with the NHS trust concerned.

Blackpool, Fylde and Wyre NHS trust has made a bid for central funding from the Department of Health to allow the capital purchase of an additional CT scanner, as part of the NHS Cancer Plan programme. The final stages of a consultation process with strategic health authorities, cancer networks and local commissioners will shortly confirm whether the trust has been successful in securing such funding.

Dental Services (East Lincolnshire)

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dental practices are taking on new NHS patients in the constituencies of (a) Cleethorpes, (b) Grimsby, (c) Scunthorpe, (d) Brigg and Goole, (e) Hull West and Hessle, (f) Hull East, (g) Hull North, (h) Haltemprice and Howden, (i) Gainsborough and (j) Louth and Horncastle. [93311]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is shown in the table.

Constituency	Practices accepting new patients
Cleethorpes	8
Grimsby	7
Scunthorpe	7
Brigg and Goole	4
Hull West and Hessle	9
Hull East	5
Hull North	4
Haltemprice and Howden	3
Gainsborough	3
Louth and Horncastle	4

Notes:

1. General Dental Service: dental practices accepting new patients, November 2002.

2. These numbers are estimated using information from expenditure claims made to the Dental Practice Board (DPB).

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many dentists have retired in the past year in the constituencies of (a) Cleethorpes and (b) Grimsby. [93312]

Jacqui Smith: No dentists from the constituencies of Cleethorpes and Grimsby retired during 2002.

Source:

Dental Practice Board

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many new dental practices taking NHS patients have opened in the constituencies of (a) Cleethorpes and (b) Grimsby since 1 January 2002. [93313]

Jacqui Smith: Since 1 January 2002, no new dental practices have opened in the Cleethorpes or Grimsby constituencies.

Shona McIsaac: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with North East Lincolnshire Primary Care Trust about the provision of NHS dental treatment in (a) Grimsby and (b) Cleethorpes constituencies. [93340]

Jacqui Smith: Responsibility for National Health Service dental care in Grimsby and Cleethorpes is the responsibility of North East Lincolnshire Primary Care Trust. The consultant in dental public health at the North East Primary Care Trust has been discussing access to NHS dentistry in North East Lincolnshire with officials at the Department of Health.

Public Health Laboratory Service

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reference to 'key staff meltdown', experienced in PHLS in the report to the Steering Group of the HPA. [90056]

Ms Blears: Records of staff turnover are not held centrally. However, information from each of the component organisations indicate that there have been no dramatic increases in the overall number of staff resignations.

The Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS) has indicated that there are above average resignations in a small number of management posts, potentially directly affected by the proposed changes. The Department will be working with the PHLS board to address any business continuity issues that may arise as a consequence.

Hull and East Riding Hospitals

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been allocated to each of the Hull and East Riding hospitals for ward environment budgets each year since 1 October 2000; how much was spent in each year; and for what other purposes was the money used. [89316]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 9 January 2003]: Ward environment budgets are provided to be spent at the discretion of the charge nurse or ward sister. The purpose of these funds are to cater for items such as decoration, furniture and carpets to help improve the facilities for patients. Expenditure relating to ward environment budgets for the Hull and East Yorkshire National Health Service Hospitals Trust is summarised as follows:

In 2000–01, the trust received £185,000 from the Department. This amount was allocated to ward staff and £177,000 was spent by them.

In 2001–02, no specific allocation was received by local primary care trusts or hospitals. However the trust allocated an additional £59,000 to its ward environment budget.

In 2002–03, no specific allocation was received by local primary care trusts or hospitals. However the trust allocated an additional £227,000 to its ward environment budget.

Neurological Services

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the transitional issues between child and adult and adult and older people's neurological services will be handled within the national service framework for long-term medical conditions. [93481]

Jacqui Smith: The national service framework (NSF) for long-term medical conditions will focus on services and support for adults, but will consider the handling of transitional issues with children's and older people's services in its working groups.

This could include building on existing NSF standards, National Institute for Clinical Excellence clinical guidance and making links with other strategies and policies both within the Department and across Government.

Congenital Anomalies

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the incidence of osteoglophonic dysplasia per thousand live births was (a) nationally, (b) in Solihull and (c) in the south of Solihull in each of the last three decades; [93856]

(2) how many cases of osteoglophonic dysplasia were recorded (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in Solihull and (c) in the south of Solihull in each of the last three decades. [93855]

Ruth Kelly: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mrs. Caroline Spelman, dated 30 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent questions asking for the incidence number and rate for osteoglophonic dysplasia reported nationally, in Solihull and in the south of Solihull in each of the last three decades. (93855, 93856)

The National Congenital Anomaly System (NCAS), based at the Office for National Statistics (ONS), codes all anomalies using the International Classification of Diseases (ICD). Between 1968 and 1988, using the 8th and 9th revisions of ICD, osteoglophonic dysplasia was assigned to a code that also included a number of other anomalies of the skull and face bones. Therefore it is not possible to identify number of babies born with osteoglophonic dysplasia prior to 1988. However from 1989, notifications held on NCAS contained descriptive text of the anomalies present. It is therefore possible to identify cases of osteoglophonic dysplasia from 1989. With the introduction of the 10th revision of ICD in 1995, osteoglophonic dysplasia has been separately coded.

Prior to 1995, ONS collected all notifications of congenital anomalies that were identified within ten days of birth. From 1995, ONS has collected all notifications of congenital anomalies whenever they are identified.

The attached table shows the number of babies in England and Wales notified to the National Congenital Anomaly System with osteoglophonic dysplasia and rate per 10,000 live births for the years 1989 to 2001. During this period there was only one case of osteoglophonic dysplasia reported to the NCAS in Solihull health authority in 1994. Figures from NCAS are not routinely published below health authority level.

[1] During 1989–1994, under the 9th revision of the International Classification of Diseases, cases coded as 756.0 were searched for the term osteoglophonic dysplasia or its synonyms craniofacial dysostosis and Crouzon's disease.

During 1995–2001, under the 10th revision of the International Classification of Diseases, any cases with code Q75.1 were selected.

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what the incidence of severe hypoplastic left heart syndrome per thousand live births was (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in Solihull and (c) in the south of Solihull in each of the last three decades; [93854]

(2) how many cases of severe hypoplastic left heart syndrome were recorded (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) in Solihull and (c) in the south of Solihull in each of the last three decades. [93853]

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the National Statistician. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from L. Cook to Mrs. Caroline Spelman, dated 30 January 2003:

As National Statistician, I have been asked to reply to your recent questions asking for the incidence number and rate (per thousand live births) of severe hypoplastic left heart syndrome reported nationally, in Solihull and in the south of Solihull in each of the last three decades. (93854, 93853)

The National Congenital Anomaly System (NCAS), based at Office for National Statistics (ONS), codes all anomalies using the International Classification of Diseases (ICD). Between 1968 and 1978, when the 8th revision of ICD was used, hypoplastic left heart syndrome was assigned to a code that also includes a number of other specific anomalies of the heart. Therefore it is not possible to identify number of babies born with hypoplastic left heart syndrome prior to 1979.

Since the introduction of the 9th revision of ICD in 1979, hypoplastic left heart syndrome has been separately coded. It is therefore possible to provide the information requested from 1979 onwards. Prior to 1995, ONS collected all notifications of congenital anomalies that were identified within ten days of birth. Parkinson's Disease

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Scottish Executive about reducing waiting times to see a consultant about Parkinson's Disease. [94019]

Jacqui Smith: Ministers have had no discussions with the Scottish Executive on this subject.

The national service framework (NSF) for long-term conditions will have a particular focus on the needs of people with neurological disease, brain and spinal injury, as well as some of the common issues faced by people with a long-term condition. It will include services for people with epilepsy, Multiple Sclerosis, Parkinson's Disease, Motor Neurone Disease and other similar conditions.

Publication of the NSF is currently planned for 2004, with implementation starting in 2005.

Protection of Children Act

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what actions he has taken to inform voluntary organisations of the scope of the Protection of Children Act 1999. [93394]

Jacqui Smith: Guidance on the Protection of Children Act 1999 was published in September 2000 and distributed to a large range of statutory and voluntary child care organisations. The guidance continues to be made available and is published on the Department of Health website for easy access.

Hospital Waiting Lists/Times

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals Trust area were waiting for in-patient treatment on the latest available date. [92067]

Jacqui Smith: As at 10 January 2003, the number of patients waiting for in-patient and day case treatment at the Lancashire Teaching Hospitals National Health Service Trust was 9,322.

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people waited 13 weeks or more for an out-patient appointment in Hull and the East Riding in each of the last three quarters for which figures are available. [92912]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is shown in the table.

PRIVY COUNCIL

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Council what representations he has received about bringing forward proposals for making the rise of the House the time for the shuffle for oral questions; and if he will make a statement. [94583]

Mr. Robin Cook: I have only received one such representation, and that was from my hon. Friend. I have no plans to change the time for the shuffle.

Service Delivery Agreement

Tony Wright: To ask the President of the Council when the Privy Council Office's service delivery agreement for 2003 to 2006 will be published. [94209]

Mr. Robin Cook: The Privy Council Office is not required to have a service delivery agreement.

A new business plan is, however, being prepared, and will be published on the Privy Council Office website (www.privycouncil.gov.uk) later this year. The plan will include our main performance targets, and when it is published, I will write to my hon. Friend to let him know.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Betts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to expand the use of Arms Length Management Organisations. [93831]

Mr. McNulty: Arms Length Management Organisations (ALMOs) for local authority housing are one of the Government's key options for improving service delivery for tenants and achieving the decent homes target. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister's commitment to ALMOs is set to continue and we will be announcing the level of resources available for the next three years of the programme shortly.

Business Co-ordination Unit

Tim Loughton: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many staff work for the Business Co-ordination Unit; how many worked for the unit in each year since it was formed; and what the running costs of the unit are in 2002–03. [92576]

Mr. Leslie: There are currently three staff employed in the Business Co-ordination Unit, with two vacant posts. In 2000 when the unit was set up there were four members of staff, this increased to five in April 2002. The running costs budget for the unit in 2002–03 is £300,000.

Deprivation Indices

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what plans he has to ensure that the calculation of deprivation indices take account of local crime rates. [94521]

Mrs. Roche: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently engaged in a project to consider options for updating the Indices of Deprivation 2000 (ID 2000). As part of this project, the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is investigating the potential for constructing a Crime and Social Order domain, which would measure the deprivation people face as a result of crime or as a result of living in an area with high rates of crime and social disorder. Discussions are currently taking place with officials in the Home Office over the scope, availability and quality of data.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has always recognised that it would be important to include a crime/social order domain in [illegible] ID 2000 but were previously prevented from doing so because of a lack of robust data.

Development Grants

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the projected total sum is in the United Kingdom of the (a) approved development programme and (b) Challenge Fund for (i) 2002–03, (ii) 2003–04 and (iii) 2004–05. [94414]

Mr. McNulty: In 2002–03 the Housing Corporation's Approved Development Programme (ADP) in England is £921 million. There is no Challenge Fund for this year. The funding for 2003–04, announced on 18 September, is £1,286 million of which £200 million is for the Challenge Fund.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will be making a statement shortly about how the additional funding in the 2002 Spending Review will be used; it will include figures for 2004–05.

The ADP and Challenge Fund operate in England only.

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the proposed allocation within the regions of the UK is of the (a) Challenge Fund and (b) approved development programme for (i) 2002–03, (ii) 2003–04 and (iii) 2004–05. [94415]

Mr. McNulty: The published allocation between regions of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme in England for 2002–03 and 2003–04 is tabled as follows:

£ million

Region	2002–03 Actual	2003–04 Indicative
London	420.4	482.0
South East	113.9	134.1
South West	61.8	74.3
East Midlands	40.5	48.3
East of England	63.8	74.1
West Midlands	64.6	79.3
Yorks and Humberside	49.3	59.7
North East	22.9	33.8
North West	57.7	69.0
Merseyside	25.4	30.4
HQ	1.0	1.0
Challenge Fund	n/a	200.0
Total	921.2	1,286.2

The ADP and Challenge Fund operate in England only.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will be making a statement shortly about how the additional funding in the 2002 Spending Review will be used; it will include figures for 2004–05.

The allocation of Challenge Fund bids between regions is tabled as follows:

	£ million
London	109.6
South East	84.0
East of England	6.4

These allocations by the Housing Corporation are provisional and subject to confirmation of costs and timing.

Electronic Government

Margaret Moran: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he intends to introduce an e-participation component as a requirement of Implementing Electronic Government statements. [93865]

Mr. Leslie: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is currently considering the format of the third round of Implementing Electronic Government (IEG3) Statements. It is probable that we will be asking councils to provide information on specific components of the local e-government programme. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is also in the process of developing a proposal for a National Project on e-participation. If this project is approved a return in this area in the IEG3 statements could be included.

The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister hopes to publish draft guidelines on IEG3 before Easter and the final guidance in June.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Betts: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he will publish the results of the 2001 English House Condition Survey. [93830]

Mr. McNulty: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, North (Ms Walley) on 20 January 2003, Official Report, column 165W.

Affordable Housing (South-West)

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the aims are of the long-term housing allocation resource plans; what he estimates the effect will be on the division of resources for low-cost affordable housing within the South West Region; and if he will make a statement. [94413]

Mr. McNulty: In his statement to the house about sustainable communities on 18 July 2002, Official Report, column 438, my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister promised to return to the house with a comprehensive long term programme of action to achieve a step change in the Government's policies for building successful, thriving and inclusive communities in all regions. The statement, which will be made shortly, will set out how the additional funding announced in the 2002 spending review will be used. It will cover the provision of affordable housing in areas of shortage.

Right to Buy

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what consultations have been carried out in determining the objective data from which the Government has derived the high demand indicator for the purposes of reducing maximum right to buy discounts. [93993]

Mr. McNulty: None. Two measures were used: homelessness and house prices. The sources of the homelessness data were statistical surveys of local authority housing departments, routinely conducted by the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister:

2001–02 Housing Investment Programme Housing Strategy Statistical Appendix

Quarterly Housing Activity Return (PIE).

House prices were obtained from the Land Registry and can reasonably be assumed to reflect market prices since sales below market value were excluded.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will place in the Library the evidence he has collated that the Right to Buy has been abused in the borough of Christchurch. [93994]

Mr. McNulty: The report of the research by Heriot-Watt University into the scale, nature and impact of exploitation of the Right to Buy policy will be published shortly. It did not find any exploitation in the borough of Christchurch, but the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister is minded to reduce the maximum Right to Buy discount in this area because it is under great housing pressure as evidenced by a high local incidence of homelessness and high local house prices.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will extend beyond 5 February the deadline for responses from Christchurch Borough Council [illegible] his letter about right to buy discounts. [illegible]4441]

Mr. McNulty: The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister wrote on 22 January 2003 to all the local authorities affected by our announcement that day on Right to Buy discounts, giving them the opportunity to present a case for their areas to be excluded. All views and comments on the announcement received on or before 5 February 2003 will be given careful consideration.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the letters about reduction of right to buy discounts were despatched to (a) Christchurch Borough Council and (b) Twynham Housing Association. [94442]

Mr. McNulty: Letters informing Christchurch Borough Council and Twynham Housing Association of my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister's announcement about reducing right to buy discounts, and seeking their views, were despatched during the afternoon of Wednesday 22 January 2003.

Housing Stock Transfers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when he expects to receive the National Audit Office report on council stock transfers; and whether his review of council housing finances will be published before he has received the report. [93327]

Mr. McNulty: The timetable for the National Audit Office's report has yet to be finalised. However it is scheduled for consideration by the Public Accounts Committee of this House on 31 March.

The statement by my right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister on the Government's comprehensive long term programme for sustainable communities, including housing, will be made shortly.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what the annual Government funding to the Housing Corporation was in each year since 1991–92; what the projected annual Government funding for the Housing Corporation is for (a) 2002–03, (b) 200[illegible]–04 and (c) 2004–05; and what has been and will be the allocation of these moneys for these years for the South West Region. [94416]

Mr. McNulty: The Housing Corporation's total approved development programme (ADP) outturn for each year since 1991–92 is tabled as follows:

£ million

	ADP	Of which South West ADP
Outturn
1991–92	1,586	—
1992–93	2,350	—
1993–94	1,809	—
1994–95	1,483	—
1995–96	1,142	81.4
1996–97	1,044	76.9
1997–98	684	48.4
1998–99	606	40.8

	ADP	Of which South West ADP
		£ million
1999–2000	638	42.3
2000–01	717	48.3
2001–02	775	51.1
Forecast
2002–03	921	61.8
Planned
2003–04	1,286	74.3

Notes:

1. These figures exclude expenditure on all Housing Corporation revenue programme and administration and other capital programmes including Rough Sleepers Initiative, Major Repairs Initiative, Estate Renewal Challenge Fund.

2. Figures for South West Region prior to 1995–96 are not available. Prior to this date the South West region was not a separate entity within the Housing Corporation regional structure.

My right hon. Friend the Deputy Prime Minister will be making a statement shortly about how the additional funding in the 2002 Spending Review will be used; it will include figures for 2004–05.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will (a) list and (b) quantify those factors in the local government finance formula which determined the increase proposed for (i) Berwick-on-Tweed Borough and (ii) Teesdale District. [93263]

Mr. Raynsford: Berwick-on-Tweed received an increase of 5.6 per cent. in Formula Spending Share (FSS) in the provisional settlement compared to 2002–03, to £135 per head. For Teesdale, these figures were 15.6 per cent. and £136 respectively. After their ability to raise council tax is taken into account, this gives grant increases for Berwick of 3 per cent. (the floor) and Teesdale 12.5 per cent. (the ceiling).

Many indicators have been removed, replaced, or updated in the EPCS Formula Review, and it is difficult to quantify every impact of the formula changes on each district.

Teesdale gains significantly and Berwick loses from the formula no longer taking account of overnight visitors. Both districts lose FSS from the removal of the old housing deprivation indictors (less so for Teesdale) and the lower sparsity weighting. Teesdale gains from the lower weighting for numbers on income support, but loses slightly due to an estimated population decline after the 2001 Census.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many representations he has received from (a) individuals and (b) organisations in (i) East Sussex and (ii) Eastbourne relating to changes to grant distribution. [93495]

Mr. Leslie: The number of representations we have received since the Government published the consultation paper on the Formula Grant Review on 8 July 2002, is tabled as follows.

	Formal response to the Formula Grant Review	Formal response to the provisional local government finance settlement 2003–04	Other

East Sussex County Council	2	2	—
Eastbourne Borough Council	1	—	—
Hastings Borough Council	1	1	—

In addition a number of letters were received from schools in the above area concerning the funding of education which were passed to the Department for Education and Skills for reply.

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will list by local authority the funding per head of population for social services departments under the terms of the provisional settlement for 2003–04. [93975]

Mr. Raynsford: A table showing the Personal Social Services Formula Spending Share (PSS FSS), the mid-2001 population estimate and the PSS FSS per head by local authority has been placed in the Library of the House.

The FSS amounts are not cash. Instead they are used in the distribution of formula grant to local authorities. Formula grant is unhypothecated. FSSs are not spending targets, authorities are free to set their own budgets subject to local spending priorities.

Public Toilets

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will issue guidelines to local authorities on the closure of public lavatories; and if he will commission research into the change in the number of public lavatories over the last five years. [93695]

Mr. Leslie: Local authorities are free to determine the provision of public toilets according to local circumstances. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister has no plans to introduce guidelines on the closure of public toilets or commission research on their provision.

Ordnance Survey

Tony Wright: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister when the Ordnance Survey's service delivery agreement for 2003 to 2006 will be published. [94111]

Mr. McNulty: Ordnance Survey is a small non-ministerial Department and Executive Agency which operates as a Trading Fund. As such a service delivery agreement is no longer considered appropriate and there is no plan to publish another one. Agency Performance Targets are set by Ministers for each financial year and achievement against these targets is monitored regularly.

Travellers (Permanent Sites)

Bob Russell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what financial assistance will be given to local authorities for the remaining two months of the current financial year to establish permanent sites for travellers; what plans he has to continue such financial provision in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement. [93108]

Mr. McNulty: The gipsy sites refurbishment grant is a three-year programme announced in July 2000 by my right hon. Friend the Member for Greenwich and Woolwich (Mr. Raynsford) (the then Minister of Housing). As part of the Spending Review 2000, that £17 million grant was to be made available to local authorities for the refurbishment of authorised gipsy sites over the three year period 2001 to 2004.

The grant funding is approved and allocated annually for works to be carried out throughout the financial year. A total of £8.112 million was approved for the 2002–03 round of the gipsy site refurbishment grant. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister will pay a maximum of 75 per cent. of the total approved costs.

Applications for the 2003–04 round of the have were submitted on the 13 January 2003 and is now being assessed. Results are expected in mid March 2003.

EDUCATION

Access Regulator

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the (a) annual budget and (b) powers of the proposed Access Regulator for higher education institutions will be; and if he will make a statement. [93747]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The Access Regulator will work within the Higher Education Funding Council, as set out in "The Future of Higher Education" (Cm 5734), and will have the power to withdraw approval for variable fees, or impose financial penalties, where Access Agreements are not fulfilled.

Arts and Humanities Research Council

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what his estimate is of the (a) cost and (b) annual budget of the Arts and Humanities Research Council; and if he will make a statement. [93746]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 29 January 2003]: We announced in "The Future of Higher Education" that our aim is for the Arts and Humanities Research Board (AHRB) to become a full Research Council by 2005. Our estimate for AHRB expenditure on running costs in the current financial year is £3.4 million. Total support for the AHRB from the Government and the Devolved Administrations in 2002–03 will be £63.2 million.

School Bullying

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what requirement schools are under to record reported incidents of bullying. [93589]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: There is no statutory requirement to keep record of such incidents, although this is good practice.

Rather than set new legal requirements, we want to help schools stop bullying. We have made available on request our free pack and video for schools entitled "Bullying: Don't Suffer in Silence". In addition, Ofsted inspectors ask about the incidence of bullying in the schools they inspect, and the school's response to the bullying.

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what plans he has to collect centrally statistics on the rate of bullying in schools. [93590]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We have no such plans.

However, we take bullying very seriously, and I would urge schools that do not have it to obtain a copy of the Department's free anti-bullying pack, "Bullying: Don't Suffer in Silence".

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how much Government expenditure was directed towards reducing the rate of bullying in schools in each of the last three years. [93591]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The information is not available in the form requested.

In England, we provided over £600 million to schools and local education authorities between 1999–2000 and 2001–02 to raise behaviour standards. It is not known how much was used for anti-bullying work, as expenditure decisions were taken locally. We have also funded the Department's anti-bullying pack, published in December 2000. In addition, we are providing around £190,000 a year towards the Parentline Plus helpline for parents of pupils who have been bullied, and we are also funding anti-bullying research by ChildLine—£120,000 in total, including a conference—and an external evaluation of the usefulness of our anti-bullying pack to schools that have ordered it. The evaluation will enable us to review, and where appropriate, enhance the effectiveness of our support to schools in reducing bullying. The cost of the evaluation is £20,000.

Local Government Association

Mr. Damian Green: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills when (a) he and (b) his predecessor last met representatives of the Local Government Association's Education Executive; and when he next expects to meet them. [89368]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I regularly meet with members of the LGA.

Schools (Counselling)

Mr. Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what guidance is provided for head teachers and governors on counselling in schools. [93120]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: The Department provides guidance to schools and LEAs on the subject of counselling in the event of sudden death, serious incidents, or emergencies during educational visits. Our pack for schools, "Bullying: Don't Suffer in Silence", also deals with counselling as an anti-bullying strategy.

Schools (Formula-funded Allocations)

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills if he will list for each local education authority in England the amount of formula-funded allocations per pupil for (a) primary and (b) secondary education in the provisional settlement for 2003–04. [93976]

Mr. Miliband: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lichfield (Michael Fabricant) on 8 January 2003, Official Report, columns 231–33W.

Technical Craft Skills

Bob Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what action he is taking to increase the provision of technical craft skills training for (a) plumbing, (b) mechanics, (c) construction and (d) joinery. [92780]

Mr. Ivan Lewis: We are already doing much to improve the quality and availability of provision and the direct partnership between employers and the education and training system. By June we will have set out our national skills strategy and delivery plan setting out how we will further boost numbers of young people acquiring technical and craft skills across the economy and how we can get more adults to acquire vocational skills and qualifications.

I have set out as follows some examples of the important work already in train:

We have begun to make a start through our Success for All Strategy in bringing employers and training providers closer together to ensure that skills priorities and shortages are addressed. From August, colleges will be expected to agree three year development plans with their local Learning and Skills Council (LSC). This will ensure that funding is allocated on the basis of each college meeting headline targets, including targets for employer engagement. The targets will be specific to the role each college will play in responding to local skill needs and for many, these will clearly link to reducing skills shortages and gaps in their area.

The Learning and Skills Council is engaged in substantial adult skills pilots in each of the occupational areas mentioned. These pilots are nationally managed and locally delivered through a consortium of local LSCs, the development-phase Sector Skills Councils, employers and providers. The pilots are proving highly successful in identifying and overcoming barriers to employer-led training programmes, and when mainstreamed will enable large numbers of adults to train or re-train for technician skills which are currently in very high demand. The Council offers substantial support for adult trainees through its heavy subsidies (of between 50 per cent. and 75 per cent. of full cost) towards college and other provider fees. In all the Council provides several hundred million pounds of subsidy towards the training of technicians every year, and provides progression routes to high level skills and HE.

A new Standards Unit has also been established within my Department to focus specifically on improving the quality of teaching and learning. The Unit will concentrate on developing best practice materials in up to four curriculum areas in the spring and summer terms of 2002–03. Construction, which includes plumbing and joinery, has been identified as one of these priority areas.

We are currently setting up, through the new Sector Skills Development Agency, a network of Sector Skills Councils (SSCs) that will bring together employers, trade unions and professional bodies to work with government to meet the skills needs of their sector. SSCs covering plumbing, mechanics and construction (which includes joinery) sectors are in development phase.

We are wholly committed to Modern Apprenticeships (MA) as a quality work-based learning route for young people, increasing the supply of skills at craft, supervisory and technician level across industry. We have adopted a challenging target for MA entrants by 2004—28 per cent. of young people to begin an MA by the age of 22—and are working with the LSC to ensure all MAs meet the highest standards and to encourage take-up among employers and young people. A new Modern Apprenticeship Task Force will take a key role in promoting MA to employers and thereby contributing to increased take-up. Provisional figures for 2002–03 show that the number of young people engaged in Foundation Modern Apprenticeships in construction (which includes joinery) and plumbing has increased dramatically.

Our national skills strategy and delivery plan will set out how Government Departments, the Learning and Skills Council, Sector Skills Councils, Regional Development Agencies and other agencies will work even further together to deliver the economy's skill needs.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Justice Administration (Kent)

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department(1) if she will make a statement on the proposals to create three benches of nearly 300 magistrates in Kent; [93456]

(2) what consultations took place prior to the proposals to reorganise the administration of justice in Kent; and if she will make a statement; [93455]

(3) what assessment she has made of (a) travel distances and (b) costs for court users of the proposals to reorganise the administration of justice in Kent. [93457]

Yvette Cooper: The information is as follows.

1. By statute, the organisation of magistrates courts is a matter for the local magistrates courts committee, in this case, the Kent magistrates courts committee

2. The Kent magistrates courts committee issued consultation documents on their proposals to reorganise the administration of justice, in February 2001, April 2002, and December 2002. If any proposals are pursued, a further period of consultation will take place.

3. It is for the Kent magistrates courts committee to assess the travelling distances and costs for court users of their proposals. The Lord Chancellor is not required to make any such assessment on the proposals at this stage, but will take into account any objections to these proposals before making a decision on whether to approve the draft order for reorganisation.

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment she has made of the financial implications of the recent proposals to reorganise the administration of justice in Kent. [93458]

Yvette Cooper: By statute, the organisation of magistrates courts is a matter for the local magistrates courts committee. The Lord Chancellor is not required to make any such assessment. Kent magistrates courts committee has addressed the financial implications of their proposals in their consultation document entitled "2004 and Beyond" which was published to stakeholders in February 2001. The purpose of the reorganisation is to achieve more efficient utilisation of courtrooms in Kent.

PRIME MINISTER

Asylum Induction Centre

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 22 January 2003 to the right hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith), Official Report, column 294, what the correct consultation procedures are for the establishment of an asylum induction centre; and where they are published. [94508]

The Prime Minister: Procurement exercises undertaken by NASS are carried out in accordance with standard procurement procedures, which should include consultation with local authorities. However, we are undertaking a full, independent review of NASS operations and business procedures, including procurement processes, in order to ensure that full consultation with local communities takes place consistent with the need to preserve commercial confidences.

Gun Crime

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 22 January 2003 to the hon. Member for Fareham (Mr. Hoban), Official Report, column 299, if he will make a statement on the reasons for the increase in gun crime since 1997; and in which areas there is a culture of gun crime. [94510]

The Prime Minister: Armed crime accounts for a very small proportion of overall crime offences. However, the Government are determined to tackle the problem of gun crime. We have therefore announced our intention to bring forward a mandatory minimum sentence of five years for illegal possession of a firearm. New measures to tighten up the law on airguns and replica firearms will be included in the Anti-Social Behaviour Bill. Individual police forces have also introduced targeted initiatives for tackling gun crime, such as operations Trident in London and Ventara in Birmingham.

Port Controls

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister pursuant to his answer of 22 January 2003 to the right hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith), Official Report, column 295, what the evidential basis is for his statement that the Government has put juxtaposed controls across all ports; and what kind of controls are in place for ports on the Isle of Wight. [94507]

The Prime Minister: This Government introduced three formal juxtaposed frontier controls in France, to cover Eurostar services at Paris Gare du Nord, Lille Europe and Calais Frethun stations, in June 2001. These controls have had a dramatic impact on the number of inadequately documented arrivals at Waterloo and Ashford International stations. There had previously been a juxtaposed immigration control at the Eurotunnel site at Coquelles.

The establishment of juxtaposed controls in Calais and Dover is a priority and was agreed in principle by the Home Secretary and his French counterpart in July 2002. UK Immigration Officers have been working with their French counterparts in an advisory capacity at Calais since August 2002. We will sign a treaty soon to set the legal framework to provide for full immigration controls at Calais and subsequently at other channel ports. We will deploy immigration service resources on a targeted and flexible, intelligence led basis to ports other than Calais to counteract any displacement that may occur.

UK Immigration Officers operate in a similar capacity in Brussels. We are negotiating with the Belgian Government to introduce a formal juxtaposed immigration control at Gare du Midi in Brussels for Eurostar services to the UK.

The Immigration Office in Portsmouth deal with all arrivals at the Isle of Wight that require the attention of the Immigration Service.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2000–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92223]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office today.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Prime Minister what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Office in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93486]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Cabinet Office today.

Terrorist Suspects

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to [illegible]s answer of 22 January 2003 to the right hon. Member for Chingford and Woodford Green (Mr. Duncan Smith), Official Report, column 294, what the evidential basis is for his statement that members of the official opposition had said that the measures to detain without trial people suspected of terrorism were illegal and contrary to civil liberties. [94511]

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Member to the statements made by the right hon. Member for West Dorset (Mr. Letwin) on 19 November, 2001, Official Report.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Antisocial Behaviour Orders

Mrs Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the guidelines with regard to the protocols for attaching antisocial behaviour orders to criminal proceedings will be made available. [92173]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The Crown Prosecution Service is currently preparing guidelines, to be published next month, on the role of prosecutors in prompting orders on conviction. The Home Office and the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) are working with them on this.

Arrests

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he gives to the police about the publication of the names of persons arrested but not charged with criminal offences. [93033]

Mr. Denham: The Home Office does not issue guidance to the police about the publication of the names of persons arrested but not charged with criminal offences. The Media Advisory Group of the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) of England, Wales and Northern Ireland issued guidance in December 2000 on individuals under police investigation which is available on the ACPO website.

The guidance recommends that generally people under investigation should not be named but can with certain exceptions be identified once they have been charged. The guidance clearly advises that people who are under arrest should not be named, although general details may be given provided they do not identify the suspect.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether persons who fought against British and US troops in Afghanistan have (a) applied for and (b) been granted asylum; and if he will make a statement. [92877]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: Between 1 January and 30 September 2002 6,910 initial decisions were made on applications made by Afghan nationals. Of these 80 were grants of asylum.

All applications for asylum are considered on their merits in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. The UK is under no obligation whatsoever to give asylum to those who pose a threat to our security and national interest. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary requested a full examination of grants of asylum to Afghans as a result of recent press speculation. This process is on-going, but absolutely no evidence has so far been uncovered that anybody with a credible claim to have supported and fought for the Taliban has been granted asylum. All claims of links to the Taliban are investigated and security checks are made on those that give cause for concern.

Mr. Rosindell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he has introduced in order to improve the effectiveness of vetting asylum seekers for terrorist links. [92840]

Beverley Hughes: All asylum seekers are screened, in a three-tier process:

> The details of all asylum seekers are checked against the Warnings Index system.
> Their fingerprints are taken and checked against existing Home Office record and EURODAC and they are photographed. New asylum seekers are being issued with an Application Registration Card and we have established reporting centres to improve the contact management arrangements.
> The last step, the interview, has different levels of screening which allow for those with acceptable evidence of identity and nationality to be fed into the system while allowing for more in-depth screening interviews for those with little or no credible evidence. Should there be any indication given during any of the process that someone might be of security interest then the information is quickly passed onto the appropriate agencies.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what counties a search is being conducted by his Department or its agencies for (a) accommodation centres and (b) induction centres for asylum seekers; how many premises have been identified as suitable for such purposes; how many offers have been made; how many contracts have been exchanged; how many contracts have been completed of the purchase of such properties; and if he will list the last. [93091]

Beverley Hughes: We have submitted planning notifications for accommodation centres at DSDC (Defence Storage Distribution Centre) Bicester and Royal Air Force (RAF) Newton. A shortlist of three further sites remains under consideration. They are: Sully Hospital, Cardiff; AirWest, Edinburgh; Hemswell Cliff, Lincolnshire. Site searching continues, but details of sites will not be put into the public domain unless or until the site is considered to be a serious prospect for the siting of an accommodation centre.

To date the National Asylum Support Service (NASS) has entered into contracts for the use of hotel beds to support induction processes in Dover and Sittingbourne. NASS is currently considering options for other such accommodation throughout the UK. Details of these sites cannot be released because that information is commercially sensitive.

Mr. Hoban: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what mechanism is in place to track the place of residence in the UK of those who have sought asylum. [93204]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 23 January 2003]: As part of the initial screening process, asylum-seekers are required to provide proof of residence at a particular address. This address is recorded in their Home Office file and in the databases maintained by the Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND). Applicants and their representatives are told that they must notify the Home Office of any subsequent change of address, at which point the records are amended. For those subject to a reporting regime, verification of the place of residence is carried out during the reporting event.

Andrew Selous: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Home Office will be placing asylum seekers in Quadrant House in Dunstable, Bedforshire. [93663]

Beverley Hughes [holding answer 28 January 2003]: There are no current plans to use Quadrant House, Dunstable, Bedfordshire as accommodation for asylum seekers. This should not be taken to mean that the Home Office would not ever consider the property if it was put forward. The property has not been offered to us.

Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Afghan nationals claiming asylum in Britain have stated that they fought with the Taliban; and how many of these asylum claims have been accepted. [92983]

Beverley Hughes: (Between 1 January and 30 September 2002 6,910 initial decisions were made on applications made by Afghan nationals. Of these 80 were grants of asylum).

All applications for asylum are considered on their merits in accordance with our obligations under the 1951 UN Convention Relating to the Status of Refugees. The UK is under no obligation whatsoever to give asylum to those who pose a threat to our security and national interest. My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary requested a full examination of grants of asylum to Afghans as a result of recent press speculation. This process is on-going, but absolutely no evidence has so far been uncovered that anybody with a credible claim to have supported and fought for the Taliban has been granted asylum. All claims of links to the Taliban are investigated and security checks are made on those that give cause for concern.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Court of Appeal last set sentencing guidelines for benefit fraud; and if he will make a statement. [94009]

Hilary Benn: The Court of Appeal last issued sentencing guidelines for benefit fraud on 24 March 1987 in the case of Livingstone Stewart.

Bioterrorism

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration has been made for dealing with domestic pets in drawing up strategies to deal with bio-terrorist attacks. [92524]

Mr. Blunkett: In drawing up contingency plans, consideration has been given to the handling of pets following the deliberate release of biological agents, including infectious diseases. The handling of pets would depend very much on the particular circumstances of the incident. Whatever action is necessary, the authorities do their best to take account of the emotional attachment which all pet owners feel towards their animals.

Crime and Disorder Act

Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether section 17 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 will apply to (a) the Planning Bill, (b) the Licensing Bill and (c) the Local Government Bill; and if he will make a statement. [93880]

Mr. Denham: Section 17 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 applies without prejudice to any other obligation imposed on an authority to which it applies. Any new functions proposed under the (a) the Planning and Compulsory Purchase Bill (b) theLicensing Bill and (c) the Local Government Bill maintains the duty under section 17 for the relevant authority to have due regard to the likely effect of the exercise of those functions on, and the need to do all it reasonably can to prevent, crime and disorder in its area.

Cumbria Crime Squad

David Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police hours were lost as a result of the inquiry into the Cumbria force crime squad. [94027]

Mr. Denham: I am informed by Cumbria Constabulary that one police officer was suspended for a period of seven months from October 2000 to May 2001. This equates to approximately 1,104 working hours. Apart from this all officers under investigation have been assigned non-operational duties within the constabulary.

Domestic Violence (Merseyside)

Mrs. Curtis-Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of domestic assault have been reported to Merseyside police authority in each year since 1996; how many and what percentage of such cases were withdrawn by (a) the police complainant and (b) the victim complainant before the case was referred to the CPS; how many cases were pursued by the CPS after the victim complainant had withdrawn the complaint; and how many cases were accepted by the CPS where the only complainant was the police complainant. [92174]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 29 January 2003]: Domestic violence is not identified separately in recorded crime figures: crimes involving domestic violence are recorded in a range of offences, along with offences committed in other circumstances.

The British Crime Survey (BCS) produced data by region for 2001–02. For that year it estimated that there were 97 incidents of domestic violence per 10,000 adults in the north west region, compared with 149 incidents per 10,000 adults in England and Wales as a whole; and that 35 per cent. of domestic violence incidents were reported to the police. The BCS does not provide information on domestic violence for individual police force areas.

The 1996 BCS included a self-completion component on domestic violence to encourage disclosure. Results were published in Home Office Research Study No. 191, copies of which were deposited in the Library.

Crown Prosecution Service (CPS) case records begin when the police refer a file to the CPS, either for pre-charge advice or for prosecution. CPS records do not, therefore, show how many cases of domestic assault have been reported to the police, or how many were disposed of before referral to the prosecution.

The CPS does hold records of case outcomes, but at present these are held in aggregate form, and cannot be provided for particular offences or groups of offences.

Mr. Hepburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of domestic violence were reported and how many lives domestic violence claimed in (a) the Jarrow constituency, (b) South Tyneside, (c) the north-east and (d) the UK in each year since 1997. [86455]

Mr. Denham: Recorded crime figures are generally collected by legal definitions. Recorded crimes involving domestic violence will be recorded in a range of offences, along with offences which have been committed in other circumstances. Numbers of offences involving domestic violence are therefore not available from recorded crime data.

The British Crime Survey (BCS) produced data by region for 2001–02, on the number of crimes of domestic violence recorded by the survey. However, it does not provide information on domestic violence at a local level nor for individual police force areas.

The BCS estimates that there were 92 crimes of domestic violence per 10,000 adults in the north-east region for interviews conducted in the 2001–02 financial year. This compares with 149 incidents per 10,000 adults in England and Wales as a whole.

The BCS can also provide trend information on the number of incidents of domestic violence for England and Wales.

Number of BCS incidents of domestic violence, 1997 to 2001–02, BCS interviews, England and Wales (thousands)

	Domestic Violence
1997	826
1999	787
2000	514
2001–02	635

The BCS figures are estimates only. They are derived from a sample and so are subject to sampling error. Also, the context of the face-to-face BCS interview means the estimates are certain to be underestimates of the true extent because some respondents may be unwilling to reveal experience of domestic violence to interviewers. Results from the 1996 BCS self-completion module on domestic violence were published in Home Office Research Study No. 191, deposited in the Library. This more confidential approach to measurement revealed that the proportion of women that were victims in the last year of domestic assault was over three times higher than in the main BCS.

Details of homicides by constituency and for the United Kingdom are not held centrally. The available information relates to currently recorded offences of homicide (murder, manslaughter and infanticide) where the relationship of the victim to the suspect includes current or former spouse, cohabitant or lover. Information for England and Wales is as follows.

Number of homicides by current or former spouse, cohabitant or lover, England and Wales

Number

Number of homicides by current or former spouse, cohabitant or lover, England and Wales

	Number
1997–98	131
1998–99	104
1999–2000	112
2000–01	127

Note:

As at 8 October 2002, figures are subject to revision as cases are dealt with by the police and by the courts, or as further information becomes available.

Drink-driving

Mark Tami: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many first time convictions for drink-driving resulted in custodial sentences in the last three years, broken down by police authority. [91568]

Hilary Benn: Information on the number of first time convictions for drink-driving resulting in custodial sentences is not available.

The table provides information on the numbers of offenders that were sentenced for the first conviction of drink-driving in England and Wales from data samples in 1998, 1999 and 2000 and also the number who were given custodial or other sentences. Due to the small numbers in the samples sentenced to custody it is not possible to give a break down by Police Force Area.

Sentence	Number of offenders	Percentage
Number of first time drink-drivers sentenced in a four week sentencing sample for 1998
Immediate custody	307	2.7
Community penalty	1,539	13.5
Fine	9,445	83.0

Drug Abuse

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives are under way in Hull and the East Riding to tackle drug abuse. [93823]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: The area in question is served by two Drug Action Teams (DATs)—East Riding of Yorkshire and Kingston-upon-Hull. They work very closely and meet as a combined forum. The DATs are served by a comprehensive infrastructure including combined Joint Commissioning Groups, groups working across all sections of the National Drugs Strategy, Drug Reference Groups and 15 locality based Drug Forums. They are supported by senior and assistant DAT Coordinator posts.

Last year (2001–02) the DATs oversaw the allocation of a total budget approaching £15 million pounds, of which nearly 50 per cent. was allocated to treatment services, 25 per cent. on addressing the availability of drugs, 15 per cent. on community involvement and 12 per cent. on young people's initiatives.

The combined DATs have recently produced and published an Annual Report for 2001–02 and a Combined Strategic Plan for 2002–03, copies of which will be placed in the Library. These documents paint a comprehensive picture of initiatives already in place and those planned for the future. In particular, there has been an increase in investment in treatment services.

As part of the Prison Service Drug Strategy, Her Majesty's Prison Hull is actively working towards reducing the supply of, and demand for, illegal drugs among prisoners. Hull offers drug-misusing prisoners a range of drug interventions—including detoxification and counselling, assessment, referral, advice and through care (CARAT) services. The through care elements of the latter are aimed at establishing links to treatment services in the community to ensure that the progress made during custody is consolidated post-release. Prisoners are encouraged to remain drug-free, and to demonstrate this commitment, they can sign Voluntary Drug Testing compacts.

To help deter drug smuggling, the prison can enforce visits bans and closed visits and has access to a drug dog.

Emergency Contingency Planning

Tom Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the degree of preparedness of the Government for a chemical, biological, radiological or nuclear incident. [93525]

Mr. Blunkett [holding answer 28 January 2003]: The recent discovery of traces of ricin, followed by arrests in the United Kingdom and abroad, show there is a continuing interest in using chemical, biological or radiological agents as weapons of terror. While there is no credible, specific threat to targets in the United Kingdom, it is vital that the Government continue to protect the public from any possible threat from terrorism. That is why the Government are making substantial investment to ensure that the emergency services have the equipment and trained officers to enable them to respond to the release of CBRN material.

This is on-going work. My right hon. Friend the Minister for Policing, Crime Reduction and Community Safety was appointed Minister for CBRN co-ordination in 2001 supported by a Cabinet sub-committee and a dedicated team of officials at the Home Office. We are continually learning and developing the best way to protect the UK from terrorism and to manage the consequences of terrorism, in whatever form it comes. However the Government do not give detailed information on CBRN capabilities, as this information could be useful to terrorists.

Entitlement Card Consultation

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures have been taken to ensure that responses to the consultation that are against the entitlement card are accurately recorded; and if he will make a statement. [93491]

Beverley Hughes: Since the Government announced in February 2002 that it would be publishing a consultation paper, all correspondence received by e-mail and post has been filed according to the views expressed by the correspondent. Responses received from individuals and organisations have been recorded on a database.

I am aware that in a small number of cases (estimated to be less than 1 per cent. of the total volume of correspondence), the views of the correspondent were incorrectly recorded. These errors were pointed out by the correspondents when they received a reply. They received an apology and the database has been amended accordingly.

Eurobank

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what costs have been incurred by the (a) Home Office budget and (b) security services budget arising from the collapse of the Eurobank case; and if he will make a statement. [94409]

Mr. Blunkett: None. It is the longstanding policy of successive Governments neither to confirm nor to deny reports or allegations concerning the activities of the intelligence and security agencies.

Gwent Police

Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from Gwent Police concerning its funding allocations for 2003–04. [93249]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 27 January 2003]: I have received one representation made jointly by the Chief Constable of Gwent and the Chairman of Gwent Police Authority. I visited Gwent on 14 January 2003. During the visit the Chief Constable outlined his concerns to me. These concerns are being considered.

Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what the cost is of placing an offender on the Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme; [93359]

(2) whether the Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme is being evaluated; [93361]

(3) what funding is available to the Youth Justice Board for the Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme; and what funding will be available in (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06; [93358]

(4) what his estimate is of the number of young offenders who are eligible for the Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme. [93360]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 28 January 2003]: The Intensive Supervision and Surveillance Programme (ISSP) was launched in 2001 to provide the courts with a tough community based programme designed to tackle persistent young offenders. It was extended last year and now provides for approximately 3,500 young offenders a year at an annual cost of £21.5million.

I am pleased to announce that provision has now been made to complete full national coverage by January 2004, providing in total for 4,200 young people annually. The total cost of the programme over the next three years will be £23 million, £27 million, and £27million respectively.

The average cost for each six month placement including bail tagging, is £8,500. The total number of young offenders who could be eligible is difficult to calculate because of the combination of criteria which must be satisfied.

The programme is being fully evaluated by Oxford University: the final report with reconvictions is due in March 2004.

Internet Child Pornography

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to relieve the backlog of cases concerning internet child pornography. [93598]

Hilary Benn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave on 10 December 2002, Official Report, column 237W.

I have subsequently met with DAC Carole Hewlett of the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) to discuss these on-going investigations, and will continue to monitor progress closely.

Iraq

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to intern Iraqi citizens in the UK, including asylum seekers, in the event of armed conflict with Saddam Hussein's regime; and if he will make a statement. [91692]

Mr. Blunkett: As no decision has been taken on whether to take military action in Iraq, this is a hypothetical situation. I have no plans at this stage but plans for dealing with the full range of potential consequences of armed conflict overseas are kept constantly under review.

Landlords (Prosecutions)

Keith Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many landlords were prosecuted by their tenants for breach of contract in (a) 2002, (b) 2001 and (c) 2000. [90998]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally by the Home Department.

Lincolnshire Police Force

Mr. Mark Simmonds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convicted criminals in the Lincolnshire police authority area were re-offenders in each year from 1997 to 2002. [94224]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is not available.

Missing Persons

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial assistance his Department has given to the National Missing Persons Helpline in each year since 1997. [93113]

Mr. Denham: The National Missing Persons Helpline (NMPH) is a charitable organisation and does not receive any direct funding from the Home Office.

However, a joint bid by the police and the NMPH to the Invest to Save Budget, which has been led by the Home Office, has been successful. Funding of £810,000 has been secured for a missing persons project. The aim of the project is the establishment of joint working arrangements between the UK Police Service and the NMPH, together with improved recording and information sharing.

Murders

Stephen Hesford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many murders were committed between 1 April 1996 and 31 March 1999. [93565]

Mr. Denham: Information held centrally on the Homicide Index is in the form of homicides (murder, manslaughter and infanticide) recorded by the police in England and Wales. The number of homicides currently recorded by the police for the period 1 April 1996 to 31 March 1999 is 1,834.

The latest available homicide statistics were published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin No. 01/03, "Crime in England and Wales 2001–02: Supplementary Volume".

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been convicted of committing murders in each of the last 10 years. [94064]

Hilary Benn: The information requested is contained in the table.

Persons convicted of murder, England and Wales, 1992 to 2001

Year	Number
1992	182
1993	211
1994	192
1995	214
1996	257
1997	275
1998	256
1999	252
2000	261
2001	285

Figures for 2002 are not yet available.

Official Travel

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the total expenditure of (a) his Department and (b) its agencies was on official travelling in 2001–02. [84784]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 3 December 2003]: Total Home Office expenditure on official travelling in 2001–02 was £12,959,000. This includes a small element of subsistence allowance, which cannot be separately identified without disproportionate cost.

The expenditure on travel by the Home Office agencies, in 2001–02 was as follows:

Agency	Cost (£)
Forensic Science Service	1,924,000
Her Majesty's Prison Service	8,769,000
United Kingdom Passport Service	2,583,000

The Forensic Science Service and the United Kingdom Passport Service figures also include subsistence costs that could not be separately identified without disproportionate cost.

Overstayers

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications under the Regulation of Overstayers scheme have been (a) received and (b) approved in each year since its inception; and for migrants from which countries. [93088]

Beverley Hughes: (a) 15,315 applications were received by the closing date (revised figure following a full review).

(b) 255 (April 2001); 1,079 (April 2002) and 2,173 (as at September 2002—latest figures available).

Information about countries of origin is not available.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are taken to verify (a) the identity and (b) criminal record of applicants under the Regulation of Overstayers scheme. [93089]

Beverley Hughes: Documentary evidence of identity is required on all applications under this scheme. Those applicants who previously applied for asylum will have been through a rigorous screening process. Specially trained caseworkers assess all cases carefully to identify any indication of criminal activity. All such cases are referred to a senior caseworker. Cases where an extant Deportation Order may be evoked or other specifically identified categories will always involve a criminal record check and require clearance by a Senior Officer.

Additionally, applicants with potential security interest are security checked before being granted leave.

Police Authorities

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to change the membership and responsibilities of police authorities. [92689]

Mr. Denham: There are no plans to change the membership or responsibilities of police authorities.

Police Call-centres

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police forces in the United Kingdom rely on call-centres for handling telephone calls from the public; and if he will make a statement. [92686]

Mr. Denham: Detailed information is not available on this subject as differing systems are in place throughout the UK, using call-centres, switchboards and direct lines.

The recent National Policing Plan sets out the Government's commitment to improving the quality and efficiency of contact between the police and the public and call handling is an important aspect of this. We are working closely with the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and the Association of Police Authorities (APA) to improve standards.

Police Command Units

John Mann: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the 30 basic command units are; and which 30 police stations dealt with the highest levels of (a) acquisitive crime and (b) crime by drug addicts in the last year for which figures are available. [91132]

Mr. Denham: I refer my hon. Friend to the written statement my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department gave the House on 21 January 2003 about the additional funding being allocated to the 30 basic command units with the highest levels of acquisitive crime. Supporting information on the selection criteria has been placed in the Library.

National recorded crime statistics can be analysed to allow a ranking order at regional (basic command unit) level but no lower.

Police Funding

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers in North Yorkshire he estimates are paid out of police grants, with particular reference to rural funding for police officers; [92823]

(2) what plans he has to increase the amount of rural funding for police officers for the years (a) 2003–04, (b) 2004–05 and (c) 2005–06; [92822]

(3) how many police officers in North Yorkshire are paid from police grants paid by Government; and what specific provision was made in the police pay formula for additional funds to be made available to North Yorkshire to pay the increase. [illegible]821]

Mr. Denham: General gra[illegible]s not paid on th[illegible]asis of supporting a particular number of police officers, but on an overall assessment of relative authority needs and resources.

Specific grant from the Crime Fighting Fund is supporting the recruitment of officers over and above forces previous plans for the three years to March 2003.

Under the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) recruitment initiative North Yorkshire Police have been allocated an additional 68 recruits.

In 2000–01, the first year of the scheme, the force appointed 64 new recruits, of whom four were funded by the CFF. In 2001–02 the force appointed 100 new recruits, including 37 CFF funded recruits. North Yorkshire will be able to take on 27 CFF funded recruits this financial year.

For 2003–04 the Rural Policing Fund will allocate £30 million in additional funding between the 31 forces that have the most widespread population. North Yorkshire will receive £2,018,029 through the Rural Policing Fund in 2003–04.

It is for the Chief Officer to decide how best to spend this additional money to enhance policing in rural areas.

No decisions about the Rural Policing Fund have been taken for 2004–05 and 2005–06.

Police Helicopter Sorties

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police helicopter sorties were made in each of the last five years, broken down by police force; and what the annual cost was to each police force. [93306]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not held centrally and can be obtained only at disproportionate cost. 39 police forces in England and Wales currently operate an Air Support Unit and the Home Office allocates grant of £4 million a year between forces as a contribution towards the capital cost of this facility. The remaining capital and operating costs are met by the police forces themselves.

Police Numbers

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the numbers of police officers in North Yorkshire in (a) 2001–02, (b) 2002–03 and (c) 2003–04; [92824]

(2) if he will make a statement on policing in North Yorkshire, with particular reference to how many officers he forecasts in the authority for years (a) 2004, (b) 2005 and (c) 2006. [93011]

Mr. Denham: North Yorkshire Police had 1,417 officers on 31 March 2002. This was 112 more than March 2001 and was a record number of officers. Information on strength for 31 March 2003 will not be published until the summer.

Under the Crime Fighting Fund (CFF) recruitment initiative North Yorkshire Police have been allocated an additional 68 recruits over and above the force's previous recruitment plans for the three years to March 2003. Funding for these officers will continue in 2003–04. The CFF will continue in 2003–04 and we will fund 75 per cent. of the cost of new recruits through CFF rather than 100 per cent. as in the past three years. North Yorkshire Police Authority has been allocated £20,000 which on the basis of 75 per cent. funding should be sufficient for the force to recruit a further four police officers through this fund.

Apart from ring-fenced provision for a particular purpose, such as the Crime Fighting Fund, decisions about the police budget and the allocation of resources, including numbers of officers, are matters for the North Yorkshire Police Authority and the Chief Constable (Ms Della Cannings). It is therefore not possible to provide estimates of North Yorkshires police strength in future years.

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers (a) are in service and (b) were in service in (i) 1997 and (ii) 2001 in Devon. [93379]

Mr. Denham: Devon is part of the Devon & Cornwall Constabulary and information is not collected on a regular basis about the number of officers deployed to Basic Command Units within force areas. I would however refer the hon. Member to my reply of 2 December 2002, Official Report, column 589W to the hon. Member for North Southwark and Bermondsey (Simon Hughes) setting out police strength for each Basic Command Unit for each force in England and Wales as at 31 March 2002.

The deployment of resources between the four territorial divisions and other specialist operational and support units of the Devon & Cornwall Constabulary is an operational matter for the Chief Constable (Mrs. Maria Wallis QPM).

Police Officer Numbers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department issues to police forces on the supply of information on officer numbers, with particular reference to the inclusion of individuals (a) recruited but not yet receiving pay and (b) undergoing basic training. [93307]

Mr. Denham: Published Home Office statistics on police officer numbers include probationer officers who have joined the service and are being paid. The statistics do not include individuals who are recruited but not yet receiving pay. The figures include officers undergoing initial basic training, which is included within the two year probationary period.

Police Discipline

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers in each police force area were disciplined for unauthorised disclosure of information to the media in the last year for which figures are available. [94493]

Mr. Denham: This information is not held centrally and it could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Police Recruitment

Mr. David: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to review the recruitment procedure for the police; and if he will make it his policy to re-examine the rule within the recruitment procedure relating to epilepsy. [93264]

Mr. Denham: The Government are introducing national standards for police recruitment as part of the Police Reform Programme. We are reviewing the fitness, eyesight and medical standards and eligibility criteria, and introducing a national application form and selection process. The new procedures will be phased in during 2003–04.

The guidelines on medical standards for recruitment (which include epilepsy) are the subject of a study by QinetiQ which will report in the spring.

Police

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of police officers recruited in each year since 1990 were graduates. [93658]

Mr. Denham: Information has been collected by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary only from 1995. The numbers of graduates recruited against numbers of total police appointments is as follows.

Year	Graduate recruits	Total police appointments
1995–96	794	4,991
1996–97	944	6,410
1997–98	833	6,556
1998–99	673	5,560
1999–2000	767	4,683
2000–01	797	8,612
2001–02	1,306	11,647

Preston Prison

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will construct a hospital wing for Wymott and Garth, Preston prison. [93716]

Hilary Benn: We have no plans to construct hospital wings at either establishment.

Prison Estates

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) where maintenance of the streets, street-lighting, drainage and sewerage systems on the Parkhurst, Albany and Camp Hill prison estates remain the responsibility of the Prison Service of his Department, (a) what programmes of planned maintenance are in place, (b) how financial responsibility for maintenance is divided between his Department and householders and (c) which of his or the Prison Service's managers holds day-to-day responsibility for the delivery of essential maintenance; [91271]

(2) if he will list the residential streets on the Parkhurst, Albany and Camp Hill prison estates, showing for each (a) how many housing units have been sold and how many remain in the ownership of the Prison Service or his Department and (b) whether, where houses have been sold, (i) ownership and (ii) maintenance of the streets, street-lighting, drainage and sewerage systems remain the responsibility of the Prison Service or his Department. [91270]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service owns six houses within its former quarters estates adjacent to the prisons at Parkhurst, Camphill and Albany. There is a complex pattern of ownership of boundaries within these estates with the Prison Service also retaining ownership some roads and areas of open space, some with outline planning permission for further residential redevelopment. Responsibility for maintaining all highways, open space areas and services lies with current land owners, except where adopted by utility providers. Where land and premises have been sold by the Prison Service maintenance responsibilities are specified within the sale conveyances. There is no legal obligation on the Prison Service to maintain privately owned highways and services and there is no planned maintenance programme in place. Maintenance of Prison Service owned land and services is organised by the prisons' works departments.

The Prison Service retains the right under the terms of sale conveyances granted to directly recharge the cost of highway and services maintenance it does complete to all private owners, on these estates, benefiting from the works. The Prison Service contributes to such expenditure according to the benefit it derives, if any, from such works. Due to Prison Service funding priorities and strong opposition from many residents to the possibility of recharges being made, only limited maintenance works have been completed in recent years.

The Prison Service has been working closely with the Isle of Wight council and the residents associations to try to reach agreement on proposals for upgrading the highways and services on these estates, to a standard where they can be formally adopted and maintained by the Isle of Wight council and utility providers.

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the progress of his planning applications for the sites of the (a) Parkhurst, (b) Albany and (c) Camp Hill prison estates, stating for each what obstacles remain to the granting of planning permission. [91272]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service has obtained outline planning consents for residential development of six sites which have or may become surplus to operational requirements. Ecological surveys are being completed in respect of two other sites before further consideration of outstanding planning applications.

Prison Places

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of available prison places; and if he will make a statement. [94063]

Hilary Benn: In England and Wales, £60 million has already been made available to provide 740 additional places by March 2004. This is in addition to funding from the 2002 Budget that will provide 2,320 additional places by March of this year, together with 400 places at Birmingham prison, which are funded through the 2000 spending review and are scheduled to open in April 2004.

We have also recently approved Prison Service plans to build two new prisons at Ashford (near Heathrow) and Peterborough in Cambridgeshire. These two new prisons will together provide around 1, 300 places by 2004–05. In addition, a further £140 million has been agreed for the Prison Service, which will be used to build a further 800 places over the financial years 2004–05 and 2005–06.

Information on establishments in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for the Scottish Executive and the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

Life Imprisonment

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been sentenced to life imprisonment under section 109 of the Powers of the Criminal Courts (Sentencing) Act 2000 in each month during which the Act has been in force. [93965]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The available information is contained in the table.

Persons sentenced to a mandatory life sentence for a second serious offence under section 109 of the powers of the criminal court (sentencing) Act 2000, England and Wales, December 1999 to December 2001

Figures prior to December 1999 were not separately notified to the Home Office Court Proceedings Database. Figures for 2002 will be published in the Aututmn.

Racism Register

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if there is a register kept by (a) the Home Office and (b) the CRE of persons suspected of racism. [93583]

Beverley Hughes: Neither the Home Office nor the Commission for Racial Equality (CRE) keep such a register.

Reconviction Rates

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of prisoners released in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999 were reconvicted within two years; and what his assessment is of reconviction rates for prisoners released in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (ii) 2002. [92160]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 21 January 2003]: The two-year 'un-adjusted' reconviction rate for prisoners discharged from custody in 1997 was 58 per cent. The provisional figure for 1998 was also 58 per cent. These rates are published in "Prison Statistics—England and Wales 2000".

Reconviction rates for offenders discharged from custody in the first quarter of 1999 have also been calculated according to the requirements of the Governments Public Service Agreement (PSA) 10 target. These are adjusted to take out convictions for offences committed prior to discharge, giving a reconviction rate of 55.3 per cent. The equivalent figures for the first quarter of 1997 and 1998 are 56.8 per cent. and 55.7 per cent. respectively.

Reconviction rates for more recent periods are not yet available.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of offenders completing community sentences in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999 were reconvicted within two years; and what his assessment is of reconviction rates for offenders completing programmes in (i) 2000, (ii) 2001 and (iii) 2002. [92161]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 21 January 2003]: Reconviction rates for offenders commencing community penalties in the first quarter of 1997 have been calculated according to the requirements of the Government's Public Service Agreement (PSA) 10 target. These are adjusted to take out convictions for offences committed prior to commencement of the penalty and convictions for breach of the penalty where no further offence had been committed.

This gives a reconviction rate for the first quarter of 1997 of 45.7 per cent. The equivalent figure for the first quarters of 1998 and 1999 are 46.0 per cent. and 44.3 per cent. respectively.

Two-year reconviction rates are not available for offenders completing programmes in 2000, 2001 or 2002.

Schools (Crime)

Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent study he has made into the level of crime in proximity to schools. [90782]

Mr. Denham: Two recently published studies commissioned by the Home Office and Youth Justice Board provide an indication of the level of personal robbery and street crime in the vicinity of schools.

Recently published Home Office research ("The Nature of Personal Robbery", Home office Research Study 254, 2003) which looked at the nature of personal robbery, found that only 1 per cent. of personal robberies actually occurred on or around school or college premises, though this may be an underestimate. However, the study also found that the risk period for school age victims was late afternoon (2 p.m. to 6 p.m.) when more than half (54 per cent.) were targeted and when many were making their way home from school, or similarly socialising with friends.

Similarly, recently published research commissioned by the Youth Justice Board ("Young People and Street Crime: Research into young people's involvement in street crime"), which focuses on street crime in London boroughs in the main, found that offending peaks dramatically after school finishes on weekdays, often in the vicinity of schools or on the main routes taken home by pupils. The research suggested that even if the perpetrators had not attended school during the day, they may well gravitate back there if they have nothing else to do.

As part of the package of measures to tackle street crime and improve behaviour in schools, there are now 100 police officers based in selected schools in areas with high levels of street crime. This is a joint initiative between the Department for Education and Skills (DfES), the Youth Justice Board (YJB) and the Association of Chief Police Officers (ACPO) and is called Safer School Partnerships (SSP).

Safer School Partnerships build on previous police involvement in schools where police officers have tended to take an essentially teaching role; as part of an SSP their role is more operational. They provide a much fuller level of resource and will be able to develop a much closer relationship with the school and its community.

Police officers are working with school staff and other local agencies to reduce victimisation, criminality and anti-social behaviour within the school and its local community. SSPs aim to reduce crime in and around schools, so making cost-effective use of police time; helping schools improve, so parents keep sending their children to those schools; and reducing disorder, so heads can spend time improving their school, instead of dealing with behaviour problems.

The specific areas where SSPs are making a contribution to schools and their community include prevention and reduction of crime, anti-social behaviour and related incidents in and around the school, together with any bullying and violence experienced by pupils and staff, truancy and exclusion, damage to school buildings and drug related incidents.

Charity Commission

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Charity Commission's service delivery agreement for 2003 to 2006 will be published. [94114]

Beverley Hughes: This is a matter for the Charity Commission. The Charity Commission's service delivery agreement for 2003–06 is currently being finalised in discussion with Her Majesty's Treasury. The Chief Charity Commissioner will write to my hon. Friend and a copy of his reply will be placed in the Library.

Statistics (Publication)

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when (a) the British Crime Survey, (b) Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, (c) Prison Statistics, England and Wales, (d) Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System, (e) Control of Immigration Statistics and (f) the Home Office Annual Report were published in each year from 1992 to 2002. [93333]

Mr. Denham: Within the time frame specified, 1992–2002:

(a) British Crime Survey published November 1993, 24 September 1996, 13 October 1998, 17 October 2000, 25 October 2001.

(b) Criminal Statistics, E & W published December 1993 (1992), November 1994 (1993), November 1995 (1994), November 1996 (1995), November 1997 (1996), November 1998 (1997), March 2000 (1998), December 2000 (1999), December 2001 (2000), December 2002 (2001).

(c) Prison Statistics, E & W published 20 February 1992 (1990), 30 March 02 (1991), 23 June 1994 (1992), 29 June 1995 (1993), 9 February 1996 (1994), 30 August 1996 (1995), 31 July 1997 (1996), 30 July 1998 (1997), 18 October 1999 (1998), 31 July 2000 (1999), 15 August 2001 (2000).

(d) Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System published September 1992, July 1994, March 1996, December 1997, 8 December 1998, 9 December 1999, December 2000, 7 November 2002 on web and 15 November 2002 hardcopy.

(e) Control of Immigration Statistics published September 1992, October 1993, August 1994, August 1995, August 1996, August 1997, August 1998, August 1999, October 2000, November 2001, November 2002.

(f) Home Office Annual Report published 12 February 1992, 10 February 1993, 2 March 1994, 8 March 1995, 20 March 1996, 20 March 1997, 6 April 1998, 26 March 1999, 11 April 2000, 30 March 2001, 13 June 2002.

Terrorism

Mr. Swire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further measures have been put in place to protect potentially high-risk areas from terrorist attacks in the last 12 months. [93381]

Mr. Blunkett: Over the last 12 months the Government has enhanced the existing programme providing protective security advice to critical and high-risk sectors aimed at reducing the risks from a range of possible terrorist attack methods. The number of industrial operators receiving advice on counter-terrorism precautions has substantially increased, so as to cover operations critical to the national infrastructure and also a wide range of sites and sectors which could be considered attractive terrorist targets and, if successfully attacked, would potentially cause significant loss of life. Protective security advice is also made available to a broad range of contacts in the business and commercial community which includes the retail sector and operators of major public venues.

Thames Valley Police

Mr. Mackay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on retention in the Thames Valley police force. [91436]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 20 January 2003]: Thames Valley police has been recruiting strongly in recent years. However, the force has been experiencing retention difficulties including a net outflow of transfers.

I share the chief constable's concern about this. It is important to establish what is causing these difficulties. We are therefore working with the chief constable, police authority and staff associations, to look at all the associated issues and to develop practical solutions.

Tony Martin

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the findings of the recent Parole Board report on the case of Tony Martin, prisoner at HMP Highpoint. [92617]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 21 January 2003]: Decisions taken by the Parole Board in respect of individual cases are not published.

West Midlands Police Force

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the ethnic composition of the West Midlands Police Force was in each of the last five years. [93472]

Mr. Denham: The following tables are for police officers and all police staff and have been produced from figures supplied by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary (HMIC).

For the first four years, the figures were collected in four categories. For 2002, the 2001 Census categories of ethnic group were adopted and so there is a break in the series. Figures for 2002 have been affected by the low response rate from staff to self-classify ethnicity based on the 2001 Census classification. This resulted in a number of police staff being classified as 'Unspecified' ethnicity.

Women Prisoners

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women serving prison sentences gave birth (a) in prison and (b) in hospital in each of the last five years; and how many were allowed to keep their babies in prison. [93966]

Hilary Benn: [holding answer 29 January 2003]: All women prisoners who are pregnant are transferred to local hospitals to give birth where normal National Health Service (NHS) care applies. No figures are held centrally on the number of prisoners who have given birth or the number of women who have been in Mother and Baby Units in the last five years.

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women prisoners have children who are (a) under five years old and (b) under 18 months old. [93967]

Hilary Benn [holding answer 29 January 2003]: There is no routinely collected data on the number of women prisoners with children in these age ranges. However, a Chief Inspector's survey in 1994 found that over a third of the mothers had one or more children under five years old. Studies published in 1997 and 2000 found that 60 per cent. and 66 per cent. of women prisoners respectively had dependent children under the age of 18.

CABINET OFFICE

Terrorism

Mr. Swire: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what preparations have been made outside large urban conurbations for responses to a terrorist attack; and what procedures are in place to cope and assist with the likely exodus of people from large cities in the event of an attack taking place there. [93380]

Mr. Alexander: The UK has robust plans in place for the protection of the public and of national security interests. The Government's preparations include a series of classified contingency plans for responding to a wide range of terrorist threats. These plans are regularly tested, reviewed and updated as circumstances change. Much of the response is based on generic, multi-agency, local emergency arrangements, developed within the clear guidelines set out by the Home Office.

Evacuation planning is currently undertaken at local level, by the police and local authority emergency planners. This includes ensuring routes to and from the site of the incident remain viable, and planning for the reception and re-housing of evacuees. We are also taking steps to strengthen the regional level of co-ordination, to ensure compatibility and cohesion of local evacuation and reception plans for large-scale incidents.

Departmental Communications

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans he has to to improve the quality of English used by departments in their communications with the general public. [93390]

Mr. Alexander: The Cabinet Office has issued guidance for departments on the Handling of Ministerial and Other Correspondence which emphasises that appropriate arrangements should be in place to ensure that the quality of all replies is high. It has also issued guidance on Plain Written English.

In addition, the Centre for Management and Policy Studies (Civil Service College) located in my department offers a comprehensive suite of courses in writing. These aim to help civil servants to write clearly, concisely and correctly, and to tailor their writing to particular circumstances.

Fraud and Theft

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much money has been lost by his Department and its agencies and non-departmental public bodies through (a) fraud and (b) theft for each year since 1996–97. [92429]

Mr. Alexander: The cost of theft and fraud to my Department, its agencies, and non-departmental public bodies in each of the last five years, is shown in the table. Figures for 1996–97 can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

£000s

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–2000	2000–01	2001–02
Department	15	48	32	34	35
Agencies	—	—	—	—	—

Total	15	49	32	35	35

Government Car Service

Norman Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how much has been spent in each year since 1997 towards the running of a car for Lord Sainsbury. [94993]

Ms Hewitt: I have been asked to reply.

Lord Sainsbury runs and finances his own car. But on a few occasions he uses cars from the Government Car Service for official engagements.

Special Advisers and Press Officers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many (a) special advisers and (b) press officers have been employed by his Department in each year from 1994–95 to 2002–03; and at what cost in each year. [92428]

Mr. Alexander: As has been published on previous occasions, the overall number and cost for Special Advisers across all Departments is:

£ million

	Number	Cost
1995–96	38	1.5
1996–7	38	1.8
1997–8	70	2.6
1998–9	74	3.5
1999–2000	78	4.0
2000–01	79	4.1
2001–02	81	5.1

In order to protect the privacy of the individuals concerned it would not be appropriate to break down the cost by Department. As at 21 January 2003 there were 81 special advisers across all Departments. The cost for 2002–03 is not yet available.

The number of press officers employed from 1997–98 to 2001–02 and their costs in each of these years are as follows:

£000s

	Number of press officers[1]	Cost per financial year
1997–98	11	453,636
1998–99	14	512,255
1999–2000	20	752,560
2000–01	16	781,817
2001–02	18	798,015

[1] Employed in the Cabinet Office press office in January of each year.

Financial and Human Resource information for periods prior to, and including 1996–97 is not held on the Cabinet Office's new databases and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

The figure for 1999–2000 includes press officers specifically employed to manage the genetically modified foods communications unit which operated from the Cabinet Office from July 1999 to March/April 2000.

The Cabinet Office currently has nine press officers. The relocation of resource on reduction in numbers is due to the creation of the new Office of the Deputy Prime Minister. The cost for Cabinet Office press officers in 2002–03 is not yet available.

DEFENCE

Friendly Fire

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what techniques and procedures are in place to reduce friendly fire incidents among the allied forces currently being deployed; and if he will make a statement. [94607]

Mr. Ingram: Standard techniques and procedures have been developed in consultation with coalition partners and would be used by deployed forces to reduce the risk of friendly fire incidents. They include the management of friendly assets in both time and space and the widespread dissemination of orders, such as the Air Tasking Order, in order to ensure that all friendly assets are aware of the location and movement of own forces. As I stated in my answer to the hon Member on 18 December 2002 Official Report, column 807W, tactics, techniques and procedures complement situational awareness and target identification to form a triad of measures designed to achieve Combat Identification and minimise the risk of fratricide.

Gulf Task Force

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the task force sent to the Gulf includes a capability to help deal with (a) a major oil spill and (b) other environmental damage. [95025]

Mr. Ingram: All Royal Navy and Royal Fleet Auxiliary vessels have the capability to deal with small and localised oil spills. HM ships are not however, equipped to respond to major oil spills or after significant environmental damage.

Iraq

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the names of British-registered companies found by UNMOVIC or the IAEA inspection teams in Iraq to have provided proscribed military equipment and material to Iraq. [93906]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have been asked to reply.

I am advised neither UNMOVIC nor the IAEA have informed us of any such discoveries to date. It is up to UNMOVIC and the IAEA to decide on the level of detail to be provided publicly about any goods that they uncover.

Mr. Goodman: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what estimate he has made of the cost of military action against Iraq. [94427]

Mr. Hoon [holding answer 30 January 2003]: The information requested is not yet available. I shall write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House.

Royal Navy and Royal Marines Operational Welfare Package

Dr. Julian Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the facilities which will be available to Royal Navy and Royal Marines personnel on deployment to the Gulf as part of the Operational Welfare Package. [94538]

Mr. Ingram: The facilities which form the Operational Welfare Package available to Royal Navy and Royal Marine personnel deployed to the Gulf are as follows:

Personnel will be entitled to 20 minutes worth of free phone calls each week.

All units will have access to satellite TV in port.

Ships have been fitted with as much operational fitness equipment as economically feasible.

Ships have a selection of magazines which will be delivered on stopovers.

Ships have a selection of videos and DVDs.

E-mail facilities will be available to personnel at sea.

Personnel will receive double the usual laundry allowance.

Personnel will be entitled to free airmail during the deployment.

A combined services entertainment show will be arranged for as many personnel as possible if the deployment lasts longer than four months, and if operationally feasible.

NAAFI services will be provided by the naval canteen services.

Books are being provided by the Fleet Libraries Office.

The availability of some of these facilities will vary depending on the type and role of ship.

HEALTH

Ambulance Services

Dr. Evan Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his Answer of 7 January 2002, Official Report, column 180W, on ambulance turnaround times, what information he collates on ambulance turnaround times. [93195]

Mr. Lammy: The Department collects some fast track management information on aspects of emergency care performance. This data is unvalidated and not necessarily accurate or complete and as such is not suitable for publication.

Chernobyl

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health pursuant to his answer of 4 December 2002, Official Report, column 896W, on Chernobyl, if he will place in the Library copies of the Eclis and Eurocas studies to which reference is made. [87560]

Ms Blears: The European Childhood Leukaemia-Lymphoma Study (ECLIS) has produced two publications. Copies will be placed in the Library. The European Childhood Abnormality Study (EUROCAS) has yet to report.

Child Protection

Ms Shipley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many children who died of (a) abuse and (b) neglect in each of the last 10 years had been removed from the local authority child protection register within 12 months prior to their death; [94031]

(2) how many children who died of (a) abuse and (b) neglect in each of the last 10 years were named on the local authority child protection register. [94030]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally.

However, in April 2002, the Department of Health introduced an enhanced computerised database of serious case notifications. The database records information such as details of the incident, the child and family concerned, any criminal proceedings, whether a serious case review has been, is being or is expected to be conducted into the incident, and whether the child was on the child protection register at the time of the incident or had been at any time in the past.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the average length of time taken in the last five years to complete a Part 8 Review following the death of a child is; and how many have taken longer than (a) six months, (b) 12 months, (c) 18 months and (d) 24 months. [94088]

Jacqui Smith: The information requested is not held centrally.

Reviews will vary widely in their breadth and complexity, but in all cases lessons should be learned and acted upon as quickly as possible. They are expected to be carried out in accordance with "Working Together to Safeguard Children (1999)" guidance. This expects that the area child protection committee will determine, within one month of a case coming to light, whether to conduct a review. The review should be undertaken and completed within a further four months. Exceptionally, the complexity of the case or other factors may necessitate a longer timescale, which should be discussed and agreed with the Social Services Inspectorate.

Clive Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the purpose is of undertaking a Part 8 Review following the death of a child. [94089]

Jacqui Smith: The purpose of serious case reviews carried out in accordance with "Working Together to Safeguard Children" (1999), the Government's child protection guidance (known widely as part 8 reviews') is to:

> establish whether there are lessons to be learned from the case about the way in which local professionals and agencies work together to safeguard children;
> identify clearly what those lessons are, how they will be acted upon, and what is expected to change as a result; and as a consequence, > to improve inter-agency working and better safeguard children.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what care arrangements are made for children who are victims of child prostitution to ensure they are placed in a safe care environment and receive treatment. [93553]

Jacqui Smith: Children involved in prostitution and other forms of commercial sexual exploitation are likely to be in need of welfare services and—in many cases—protection under the Children Act 1989.

Where there is a risk to the life of a child or a likelihood of serious harm, an agency with statutory child protection powers, for example, the police or councils with social services responsibilities, should act quickly to secure the immediate initial safety of the child. In some cases, it may be necessary to ensure either that the child remains in, or is removed to, a safe place. Under section 20 of the Children Act 1989, a local authority may provide accommodation for any child within their area if they consider that to do so would safeguard or promote the child's welfare.

When a child is identified as involved in prostitution or other commercial sexual exploitation, or at risk of being drawn into it, an assessment of the child's needs will be undertaken in accordance with "Safeguarding Children Involved in Prostitution" (2000), "Working Together to Safeguard Children" (1999), the Government's child protection guidance, and the "Framework for the Assessment of Children in Need and their Families" (2000). This assessment should be followed by consideration of how best to address the identified needs of the child and development of a care plan for the child who is in need. The plan could include a range of services, for example, mentoring to assist a return to education or employment, and help to secure appropriate health services.

Delayed Discharge

Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on the distribution of delayed discharge funding, with particular reference to those local authorities which are affected by the ceiling on grant increase for services spending. [93099]

Jacqui Smith: The Access and Systems Capacity Grant 2003–04 is being distributed according to the new older people's formula for social services. We have not yet made any decisions on the distribution of the additional £100 million per full year, related to the Community Care (Delayed Discharges etc.) Bill. The distribution formula is not affected by the system of general grant expenditure increases.

Diagnostic and Treatment Centre, Yeovil

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans are being drawn up by (a) East Somerset NHS trust and (b) Dorset and Somerset health authority to establish a new diagnostic and treatment centre in Yeovil; and if he will make a statement. [92559]

Ms Blears: Dorset and Somerset strategic health authority in their capacity plan have set out a range of proposals to meet local targets for access.

Among their proposals was a development at Yeatman hospital in Sherbourne, which sought to expand capacity in the area served by east Somerset national health service trust. This scheme has many of the features of the national diagnostic treatment centre (DTC) programme as it seeks to create dedicated elective capacity for a modern, patient focused, high productivity clinical service. The trust is currently producing a business case for this development, which will require approval by local primary care trusts and the StHA before it proceeds.

A proposal to create a new provider DTC in Somerset delivered through the local procurement route has been agreed. It is not currently envisaged that this DTC will be in Yeovil. A further proposal was to explore whether a new provider DTC may be required to serve an area in eastern Dorset and western Hampshire. It is not currently envisaged that this DTC will be in Yeovil.

Maternity Units

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many proposals there are (a) to convert and (b) to establish maternity units as midwife-only centres. [85789]

Jacqui Smith: This information is not collected centrally.

Mental Disorders (Children)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of children with a mental disorder in (a) Haltemprice and Howden and (b) the UK; and if he will make a statement. [93841]

Jacqui Smith: Information is not collected centrally in the format requested. However a survey of the mental health of children and adolescents in Great Britain was carried out in 1999 by the Office of National Statistics on behalf of the Department of Health, Scottish National Executive and National Assembly for Wales. Prevalence rates were produced for five to 15 year olds in the three main categories of mental disorder, i.e. conduct disorder, hyperactivity and emotional disorder.

The key findings on prevalence were:

about ten per cent, of children aged five to 15 years in Great Britain had a mental disorder in 1999 five per cent., had conduct disorders (e.g. aggressive and antisocial behaviour), four per cent., had emoional disorders (e.g. anxiety, depression) and one per cent, were hyperkinetic (inattention, overactivity) mental disorders were significantly more common in boys than girls in both the five to ten year and the 11–15 year old age groups.

Recruitment of Ambulance Staff

Chris Grayling: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS ambulance trusts have stopped recruitment of ambulance staff. [85787]

Mr. Hutton: The recruitment of ambulance staff is a local matter and, as such, the Department does not hold this information centrally.

The Department does, however, collect data on the total numbers of ambulance staff recruited. There has been an increase in the total numbers of ambulance staff from 15,280, or 14,480 whole time equivalents employed in 1995, to 16,920 or 16,320 whole time equivalents, employed in 2001.

Residential Care (Children)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children there were in residential care in (a) England and (b) Haltemprice and Howden in each year since 1997 for which figures are available. [93839]

Jacqui Smith: The information available on looked after children in residential care is shown in the table. Figures for East Riding of Yorkshire council have been provided, as data for Haltemprice and Howden are not available.

Number of children in residential care[1] in England and East Riding of Yorkshire at 31 March 1997–2002

	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001	2002
England	7,900	8,500	8,300	8,900	8,500	8,600
East Riding of Yorkshire	25	45	35	45	35	[2]—

[1] Includes children in secure units, children's homes and hostels, residential schools and other residential settings.

[2] 2002 figures for East Riding of Yorkshire are not yet available.

Note:

All figures are rounded—national figures to the nearest 100 and local authority figures to the nearest 5.

Waiting Lists (Hull Royal Infirmary and Castle Hill Hospital)

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were on in-patient waiting lists for (a) Hull Royal Infirmary and (b) Castle Hill hospital in the last month for which figures are available. [92851]

Jacqui Smith: At the end of November 2002 there were 9,913 patients waiting for in-patient treatment at Hull and east Yorkshire hospitals national health service trust.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

International Atomic Energy Agency

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will increase the United Kingdom's donation to the International Atomic Energy Agency to assist the international inspection and safeguards regime. [93886]

Nigel Griffiths: In addition to its assessed contributions to the regular budget of the IAEA, the UK makes a number of voluntary contributions to it for specific activities, including those carried out by the Agency's Safeguards Department.

The agency is now discussing with member states proposals that it has put forward for the regular budget for 2004 and 2005. These proposals include a significant increase in funding for safeguards. The UK has welcomed the proposal that the budget be increased to enable the agency to better carry out its statutory and other obligations. We believe that, if a convincing case is made for an increase in the safeguards budget, member states must ensure that the extra resources are made available.

Ammunition Manufacturing

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether her Department regulates the manufacture of ammunition. [93584]

Nigel Griffiths: DTI has no specific responsibility for regulating the manufacture of ammunition.

BNFL

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list assets and liabilities of BNFL which will be (a) transferred to the Liabilities Management Authority, (b) retained by BNFL and (c) shared between each. [94973]

Mr. Wilson: Paragraph 5.5 of The White Paper 'Managing the Nuclear Legacy—A Strategy for Action' (Cm5552) sets out the aims and basic framework for restructuring BNFL and transferring assets and liabilities to the LMA. Those aims remain unchanged. Details of the restructuring will be finalised in due course.

Business Link

Mr. Prisk: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many telephone inquiries the Business Link national 0845 telephone number received per week in (a) September 2002 and (b) December 2002; how many inquiries per week led to appointments for Business Link advisers; and if he will make a statement about the different categories of enquiries received between September and December 2002. [93106]

Nigel Griffiths: The information requested is as follows:

(a) September Weekly Telephone Inquiries to Business Link 0845 number

Date	Total
1—7 September 2002	1,061
8—14 September 2002	1,120
15—21 September 2002	2,053
22—30 September 2002	1,924
September	6,158

Note:

Active Publicity campaign in progress throughout September, hence higher call volume.

(b) December Weekly Telephone Inquiries to Business Link 0845 number

Date	Total
1—8 December 2002	1,061
9—15 December 2002	1,159
16—22 December 2002	909
23—31 December 2002	267
December	3,570

Callers are directed via the 0845 link to their local Business Link Operator (BLO) who then treats each case individually. Adviser support is provided where the BLO judge that course best fits customer need. SBS does not require BLOs to retain detailed, constant monitoring information on such referrals.

Call Centres

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many call centres are contracted or operated by her Department and its agencies. [93798]

Ms Hewitt: My Department and its agencies have a number of call centre operations in place as well as specific inquiry number helplines which will vary in number at any given time to reflect particular initiatives we are engaged in.

The number of call centres currently in use across the Department and its agencies is 11. These involve a mix of 0800, 0870, 0845 and STD (e.g. 020) numbers and are either operated direct by the Department or its agencies or as a managed service on our behalf.

Information is not available centrally on the current number of inquiry helplines but at the last review in 2001 some 33 departmental and 25 agency helplines existed. These generally utilise STD numbers but some 0800 and 0845 numbers are also used.

Car Sales

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1)what recent study she has made of new car prices in (a) the UK and (b) other EU countries; [92814]

(2) whether her Department monitors the regulations designed to ensure that private buyers receive the same level of discounts on new car purchases as fleet buyers; and what research she has undertaken as to whether the regulations are ensuring that private car buyers do not subsidise fleet buyers. [92756]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Office of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring the effectiveness of the Supply of New Cars Order 2000. The Order is one of several factors influencing car prices. These include a renegotiated block exemption from EU competition rules for vehicle supply and servicing introduced on 1 October 2002.

The EC publishes a six-monthly study of list prices of new cars, across a range of countries and across a range of models. In the UK, the Alliance & Leicester in conjunction with What Car?, publishes a monthly survey of new car prices.

The DGFT has a statutory duty to keep the Order under review. At the beginning of last year the DGFT published a report on an investigation into alleged breaches of the Order by three major car suppliers following a complaint from the National Franchised Dealer Association and the Consumers Association. This concluded that the anti-discrimination rules of the Order covering sales to fleet customers and sales to dealers had not been broken.

Debt Taskforce

Norman Lamb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much the Task Force on Tackling Over-Indebtedness cost (a) to establish and (b) to run in each year since its establishment. [92713]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 22 January 2003]: The members of the Task Force have not been remunerated. DTI staffing costs, have amounted to a total of 119,900. (October 2000 to January 2003).

Energy White Paper

Mr. Burnett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Energy White Paper will be deposited in the Libraries of both Houses. [94412]

Mr. Wilson [holding answer 30 January 2003]: The White Paper will be published shortly.

Estate Agents

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will take measures to establish an independent regulator of estate agents; and if she will make a statement. [94055]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The conduct of estate agents is independently regulated by the Director General of Fair Trading, who has powers under the Estate Agents Act 1979 to ban persons he considers unfit to carry out estate agency work.

The Office of Fair Trading is currently investigating the market for estate agents in England and Wales, including the effectiveness of the Act. I will consider carefully any recommendations the Director General of Fair Trading makes about future regulation of this market.

Financial Advice

Paul Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures she plans to take to improve the availability of independent, free financial advice to consumers. [91835]

Miss Melanie Johnson: There are currently a number of providers of independent, free financial advice to consumers including that provided by the Citizens Advice, Citizens Advice Scotland (CAS), and the Federation of Information and Advice Centres (FIAC). In addition there is a large amount of information available on the internet, including through the Financial Services Authority's website.

There are also a number of organisations such as National Debtline, Consumer Credit Counselling Services and Payplan which, while primarily focused on providing independent, free debt advice, will offer consumers contacting them general financial advice where relevant.

We are reviewing Government policy on debt advice in response to recommendations in the PIU report "Lending Support: Improving Government's Use of Loans" published March 2002.

Fossil Fuel (Morecambe)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on fossil fuel reserves near Morecambe. [94127]

Mr. Wilson: The sea adjacent to Morecambe includes a number of gas fields that have significant remaining reserves which continue to provide a major source of swing gas during times of high demand. A small onshore gas field is in production to the south of Morecambe, and there is some possibility of further small gas developments.

MOD Spectrum

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment she has made of whether the spectrum allocated to the Ministry of Defence is being used in a manner which best serves the public interest. [94932]

Ms Hewitt: There are effective mechanisms in place to ensure effective use of MOD spectrum, which will be further strengthened as a result of the recommendations of the independent Review of Radio Spectrum Management.

My Department's Radiocommunications Agency has a close working relationship with the Ministry of Defence and the use of the spectrum allocated to defence is kept under constant review, balancing the needs of national defence against the requirements of other spectrum users, this process is overseen by the United Kingdom Spectrum Strategy Committee, a Cabinet Office committee, jointly chaired by the Radiocommunications Agency and the Ministry of Defence.

Over the years, much defence spectrum has been made available for commercial services, either on a shared or exclusive basis. The Ministry of Defence also pays an annual charge to the RA for its spectrum use. This is calculated on a comparable basis to civil users and provides an important incentive to efficient spectrum use.

The independent Review of Radio Spectrum Management has made a number of recommendations designed to promote the optimal use of defence spectrum. These include an audit of defence spectrum, the continued application of spectrum pricing in parallel with non-military users on a comparable basis and the introduction of trading to provide incentives for effective spectrum use. The Government have accepted these recommendations and their implementation is now being taken forward by the Radiocommunications Agency with the Ministry of Defence.

Nuclear Industry

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what the reactors of origin were of the plutonium used in the MOX fuel sent to Japan and Switzerland from Sellafield; and what safeguards arrangements apply to this plutonium. [93904]

Mr. Wilson: It is not possible to identify definitively the individual reactors in which specific batches of plutonium allocated to the ownership of specific customers might originally have been produced. Reprocessing customers receive back separated plutonium based on that contained in the fuel they originally supplied. This is assessed before the fuel is reprocessed. The nature of commercial reprocessing in large-scale bulk chemical processing facilities means that the plutonium contained in the fuel becomes blended with that contained in fuel from other reactors.

International safeguards arrangements for MOX fuel assemblies include measurement of the nuclear material content of the fuel before its shipment from the fabrication plant and then the application of seals to the transport flasks into which the assemblies have been loaded. On receipt at a reactor facility seals are checked and removed before the fuel is placed in storage or loaded into the reactor. Such fuel storage and reactor loading is monitored by safeguards inspections combined with the use of containment and surveillance equipment (e.g. cameras and seals). Safeguards measures continue to be applied after MOX fuel has been loaded in a reactor.

Street Traders

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many pedlar's licences were issued in each month since 2000; and if she will make a statement. [94560]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 30 January 2003]: This information is not held centrally by the Department.

Brian Cotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate she has made of the number of street traders who are operating illegally; and if she will make a statement. [94561]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 30 January 2003]: None.

Peru (UK Investment)

Angus Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what advice her Department issues on UK investment into Peru; when and for what reason this advice was last updated; and if she will make a statement. [94256]

Nigel Griffiths: Advice on direct investment into Peru, including reference to the legal framework governing foreign investment in the country, is available on the Trade Partners UK website www.tradepartners.gov.uk which is regularly updated.

For all markets, Trade Partners UK advises companies to base their decision on whether and where to invest on a sound knowledge and understanding of local conditions.

Trade Partners UK, a joint DTI/FCO body, has the objective of enhancing the competitiveness of companies in the UK through overseas sales and investments.

Plutonium

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which international agreements cover the arrangements permitting the swapping of plutonium batches between that material owned by British Nuclear Fuels, British Energy or the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and that owned by foreign customers as held at Sellafield. [92305]

Mr. Wilson: In the European Union, the ownership of nuclear materials is governed by the Euratom provisions that deal with the supply of nuclear materials (essentially Chapter 6 of the Euratom Treaty). These provide that exchanges of material—which are basically a commercial matter for the companies concerned—require the approval of the Euratom Supply Agency on a case-by-case basis.

External obligations, for example limiting the use of such material to peaceful, non-explosive purposes are, however, a feature of some international nuclear co-operation agreements, such as those between, Euratom and the United States, Euratom and Australia and Euratom and Canada. In some cases where there are no Euratom agreements in place, there are bilateral agreements which contain comparable provisions. The owners of nuclear material can request that external obligations attached to one batch of material can be exchanged or swapped for different obligations on another equivalent batch of material. Each such request for a swap involving material that is subject to Euratom co-operation agreements must be approved by the Services of the European Commission, whose assessment takes account of the characteristics of the nuclear material concerned, (i.e. to ensure that the swap would not diminish the obligations involved) and the reasoning behind the request.

Service Delivery Agreements

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when (a) the Postal Services Commission's, (b) Ofgem's and (c) the Office of Telecommunications' service delivery agreements for 2003 to 2006 will be published. [94211]

Ms Hewitt: None of these bodies is required to produce a service delivery agreement for the period 2003 to 2006. However, they all publish information on their targets and objectives and how they will aim to achieve them, elsewhere.

The Postal Services Commission produces a yearly business plan, which is published on its website (http://www.psc.gov.uk). The plan for 2003–04 is due to be published by mid-February 2003.

Each year Ofgem publishes a three-year corporate plan. The plan for 2002–05 is currently available on its website (http://www.ofgem.gov.uk/public/pubframe.htm) and the plan for 2003–06 is due to be published by April 2003 and a copy will be placed in the Libraries of the House.

The Office of Telecommunications produces an annual report and a management plan, both of which contain information on targets and delivery. The annual report for 2001 is currently available on its website (http://www.oftel.gov.uk/publications/about—oftel/index.htm) and the 2002 annual report is being drafted. The management plan for 2002–03 is published on the website and the management plan for 2003–04 is due to be published shortly.

Telephone Services

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will list the telephone services operated by her Department and its agencies; and how many calls have been made to each service in the last 12 months. [93800]

Ms Hewitt: My Department and its agencies operate a range of telephone services in support of their work, in particular:

> Direct Dialling In, which is used extensively throughout the Department and its agencies, giving direct access to customers to individual members of staff or to advertised call centres and inquiry points.
> Call Centres, with 11 currently in use, offering advice and guidance on a range of issues.
> General Inquiry Points, put in place to handle specific areas of help and information. Numbers will vary at any given time but at the last review these totalled some 33 DTI and 25 Agency Inquiry Points.

Numbers of calls made to each of these services are not held centrally but the numbers are significant. For example, ACAS, who run two call centres, received 750,000 calls in the last 12 months and the main DTI Inquiry Point received 304,800 calls during 2002.

UN Convention on International Sales

Ross Cranston: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if she will make a statement on the UN Convention on International Sales. [91088]

Nigel Griffiths: Primary legislation will be needed to implement United Nations Convention on Contracts for the International Sale of Goods. The United Kingdom intends to ratify the convention, subject to the availability of parliamentary time.

TRANSPORT

Central Railway

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish the recent SRA report on the Central Railway project that responded to the consultant report to the SRA of 23April 2002. [94133]

Mr. Jamieson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 11 December 2002 Official Report, column 351W to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling (Sir John Stanley).

A63

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) minor, (b) serious and (c) fatal injuries there were at the A63 Melton junction in each year since 1997. [94303]

Mr. Spellar: The number of (a) minor, (b) serious and (c) fatal injuries from road traffic accidents at the A63 Melton junction in each year since 1997, are shown in the table.

Casualties by severity at the A63 Melton junction, 1997 to 2001

Severity	1997	1998	1999	2000	2001
Fatal	0	1	3	0	0
Serious	0	3	1	0	0
Slight	2	27	16	10	9
All	2	31	20	10	9

David Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport for what reason his Department did not issue a definitive response to the inspector's report on the A63 Grade Separated Junction proposal from the Highways Agency. [94426]

Mr. Spellar: The Inspector's Report on the A63 Melton Public Inquiry contained conclusions that supported the Highways Agency's proposals in all respects apart from one element of the Side Roads Order. This related to an alternative proposal for a junction at Corby Park, submitted by East Riding of Yorkshire Council (ERYC). The Inspector concluded that further work should be carried out to check the feasibility of ERYC's alternative. That is why it was not possible for the Secretary of State to issue a definitive response on the outcome of the Public Inquiry.

The Highways Agency is currently working with ERYC to identify the optimum solution and reach agreement on the way forward. It is hoped that an announcement will be made soon.

Correspondence

Joyce Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department will reply to the letter of 22 July 2002 from the right hon. Member for Gateshead, East and Washington, West relating to Railtrack and CalSolutions Ltd. [94436]

Mr. Spellar: I wrote to my right hon. Friend on 30 January 2003.

Road Scheme Blight

Gregory Barker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list road schemes proposed by his Department which will have effects on (a) sites of special interest, (b) areas of outstanding natural beauty and (c) national parks; and if he will make a statement; [93816]

(2) which (a) sites of special scientific interest and (b) areas of outstanding natural beauty stand to be affected by trunk road and motorway schemes in England and Wales for which preferred routes have been announced. [93819]

Mr. Jamieson: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Tim Matthews, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Tim Matthews to Mr. Gregory Barker dated 31 January 2003:

I have been asked by the Transport Minister, David Jamieson, to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking him to list the road proposals which will affect sites of special interest, Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs) and National Parks, and which Sites of Special Scientific Interest (SSSIs) and AONBs are affected by trunk road and motorway schemes for which preferred routes have been announced.

Please see the attached table giving this information in respect of trunk roads and motorways in England. Roads in Wales are the responsibility of the National Assembly for Wales. We have interpreted sites of special interest to be the same as SSSI.

I am unable to comment on the effect of any potential schemes yet to come out of the Multi Modal or other studies that are currently in progress.

Road Schemes

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when decisions were made to approve each of the road schemes listed in the Targeted Programme of Improvements. [94845]

Mr. Jamieson: The dates on which schemes were added to the Targeted Programme of Improvements following decisions taken by Ministers are as follows:

Strategic Rail Authority (External Consultants)

Mr. Don Foster To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list the (a) technical consultants and (b) financial consultants used by the Strategic Rail Authority since 3 July 2001 on a call-off basis, the total amount paid to each consultant; and the nature of the projects; [93223]

(2) if he will list the technical and financial consultants awarded contracts by the Strategic Rail Authority between 3 July 2001 and 31 March 2002, the nature of the assignment for each consultant, and the value of each contract; [93224]

(3) pursuant to his answer, 7 January 2003, Official Report, column 108W, on Strategic Rail Authority (Consultants), if he will list (a) the total amount spent, (b) the technical and financial consultants awarded contracts of £25,000 and less by the Strategic Rail Authority since April 2002, (c) the nature of the assignment for each consultant, and (d) the value of each contract. [93225]

Mr. Jamieson: Information on contracts worth less than £25,000; and those awarded prior to April 2002 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The information on call-off contracts is in the table.

Consultant	Project	£ Value
Booz Allen and Hamilton	Rolling stock strategy definition	>25,000
EC Harris	Managing costs and estimates during infrastructure and development projects	>25,000
Franklin and Andrews	Managing costs and estimates during infrastructure and development projects	>25,000
Mott McDonald	Technical consultant for the specification and the measurement of project outputs	>25,000
Nichols	South Central replacement project	>25,000
Nichols	Felixstowe-Nuneaton gauge project	>25,000

Thames Valley Multi-modal Study

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the cost has been of the Thames Valley multi-modal study. [93613]

Mr. Spellar: The Thames Valley Multi-Modal Study is expected to cost £1,250,300.

EDUCATION AND SKILLS

Higher Education

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the evidential basis was for the description by the Minister for Lifelong Learning and Higher Eduction of some higher education courses as Mickey Mouse; and to which courses she was referring. [93942]

Margaret Hodge: I was referring to any course where the content is not intellectually rigorous and where there is not a clearly designed purpose. I made the comment in the context of ensuring that the expansion of higher education is both relevant and appropriate to meet the needs of learners and employers, particularly when we are seeking a contribution towards the cost of tuition from students.

Scottish Universities

Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what discussions he has had with (a) the Scottish Executive and (b) Scottish university representatives as to the possible implications for Scotland of the changes for English and Welsh universities announced in his statement of 22 January 2003, Official Report, columns 301–09. [93741]

Margaret Hodge [holding answer 28 January 2003]: My right hon. Friend meets members of the Scottish Executive from time to time in the course of normal business, as indeed do I. There have also been specific discussions during the higher education review, including the possible implications for Scotland.

The White Paper, "The Future of Higher Education", identified the need for further discussions with the Devolved Administrations to consider the impact of our proposals for student and institutional funding on flows of students between UK countries.

Training

Mr. Phil Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what the maximum values of Learning and Skills Council training allowance are (a) by region and (b) by sector within each region. [90918]

Margaret Hodge: We do not set a maximum value on training allowances paid by the Learning and Skills Council. The minimum training allowance is 40 per week, although even here, local Learning and Skills Councils have discretion to increase this minimum depending on local circumstances, such as wage rates for unskilled employment.

Mr. Phil Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills what research the Department has carried out on the relationship between the level of Learning and Skills Council training allowance and the rates of young people entering full-time training. [90920]

Margaret Hodge: We have not undertaken any specific research on the relationship between the level of the minimum training allowance and the numbers of young people entering full-time training. The majority of young people in full-time Modern Apprenticeships are employed and receive a wage rather than the allowance.

University Tuition Fees

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Skills how he defines the meaning of his phrase 'fair access' in higher education. [94072]

Margaret Hodge: As set out in "The Future of Higher Education" (Cm 5735), fair access means that the opportunities that higher education brings are available to all those who have the potential to benefit from them, regardless of their background.

ENVIRONMENT, FOOD AND RURAL AFFAIRS

Import Declarations

Sir Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs whether it is her Department's policy (a) to introduce manufacturer/importer declarations on products manufactured outside the European Union stating that an article does not contain and release chemicals restricted in the EU and (b) to increase the use of animal testing in order to produce the test information required by the European Union's chemicals management system REACH; and if she will make a statement.[Transferred] [87024]

Mr. Meacher: The Government supports the overall aim and approach set out in the Commission's White Paper of February 2001 on a Strategy for a Future Chemicals Policy. As part of the process of developing its position in preparation for negotiations on the resultant legislation (expected in 2003) the Government published a Position Statement on 9 December, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House. This is not a definitive statement of the Government's negotiating position, not least because the Commission has still to publish proposals for legislation. The Statement focuses on the main elements of the system itself and how it might function.

In negotiating the legislation when it emerges, the Government will have three overarching objectives:

Creating a fast, efficient and workable process of testing, screening and assessing chemical substances to provide the information necessary to control those substances of concern, starting with the most harmful, because of their impacts on human health or the environment;

Keeping animal testing to the minimum necessary to protect human health and the environment; and Maintaining or enhancing the competitiveness of the chemical industry.

In addition, we also want to see a system that is transparent to all interested parties in its operation and that provides consumers, workers and users of substances with the level of information they require about the substances with which they come into contact.

In practical terms we believe it would be difficult to enforce a requirement where every substance that had gone into the manufacture of an article was registered in accordance with the proposed new regulations. However, it may be possible to place a requirement on importers of articles to make a declaration that the imported article did not contain any labile substance of high concern which was likely to be released.

On animal testing, as stated above, the Government wishes to ensure that vertebrate animal testing is kept to the absolute minimum necessary to provide sufficient information for decision-making on health and environmental protection. For example, one early estimate of the number of extra animal tests necessary to meet the system described in the White Paper came to 12 million, whereas the ideas outlined in the Government's Position Statement would require far fewer (around 1.3 million).

The Government and Devolved Administrations position statement on the New European Chemical Strategy, a copy of this is in the House Library and can be found on the Defra web site at www.defra.aov.uk

Common Agricultural Policy

Tony Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what her policy is on the inclusion of a specific objective in the European Commission's Mid-Term Review that CAP reform should work in the interests of poverty reduction and food security. [87567]

Mr. Morley: We estimate that the Common Agricultural Policy costs the average family of four in the United Kingdom between 8 and 9 per week through higher food prices and taxes. We believe reform is necessary to reduce this cost and contribute towards our wider poverty reduction objectives. Similarly, reform of the CAP would assist objectives of poverty reduction in developing countries, by increasing access for their agricultural produce to EU and third country markets.

The CAP was originally introduced in 1962 to address a strategic need for food security in Europe. However, as production responded, surpluses became chronic and required increasingly heavy expenditure. Food security is now less of a policy driver, and we would prefer to see producers rewarded for delivering public benefits focussed on the environment and wider rural economy, rather than over-production.

Mr. James Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what reform of the Common Agricultural Policy has taken place since 1997; what recent discussions have taken place with European colleagues on this matter; what proposals she has for future reform; and when they will be submitted to the EU. [93577]

Mr. Morley: The Agenda 2000 reform package, agreed at the March 1999 Berlin European Council, brought EU cereal, milk and beef prices closer to world levels, and gave member states some flexibility to use CAP money for environmental schemes. It represented a significant shift from price support to direct payments and it reduced some of the economic distortions of the CAP, enabling the formulation of an integrated EU rural development policy.

On 22 January 2003 the Commission issued its draft legislative proposals for the 'Mid-term Review' of Agenda 2000. The Government has welcomed these proposals, believing further reform of the CAP to be necessary for both domestic and international reasons. In particular, we were pleased to see formal proposals to break the link between subsidy and production ('decoupling'), which will give producers greater flexibility to exploit market opportunities. However, we also have concerns over some elements of the proposals. For example, the proposed mechanism for transferring funds to support rural development is complex, would be hard to administer and would unfairly impact on larger farms; and we are disappointed at the proposed extension of milk quotas.

The first formal discussion of these proposals took place at the Agriculture and Fisheries Council meeting on 27 and 28 January. Further Council discussions are planned for the coming months. In addition, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State regularly meets her EU counterparts bilaterally to discuss this issue. Since the start of this year she has met both the French and Greek Agriculture Ministers.

Geraldine Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on the reform of CAP. [92003]

Mr. Morley: The Government welcomed publication on 22 January of the European Commission's formal legislative proposals for reform of the CAP. In particular, we were pleased to see formal proposals to break the link between subsidy and production (decoupling), which will give producers greater flexibility to exploit market opportunities. However, we have concerns with some elements of the proposals. For example, the proposed mechanism for transferring funds to support rural development is complex, would be hard to administer and would unfairly impact on larger farms; and we are disappointed at the proposed extension of milk quotas.

Environment Agency

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the Environment Agency budget has been in each year since 1994. [93680]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency became operational on 1 April 1996.

The total annual budget of the agency for each year since then, ending 31 March, is as follows:

Total annual budget for Environment Agency

	£ million
1997	581
1998	610
1999	612
2000	640
2001	655

Norman Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many (a) full-time and (b) part-time staff have been employed at the Environment Agency in each year since 1994. [93706]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency became operational on 1 April 1996.

The numbers of staff employed by the agency in each year since then, ending 31 March, are as follows:

Number of staff employed by Environment Agency

	(a) full-time	(b) part-time
1996	8,325	522

Farm Statistics

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the average annual direct subsidy receipts were for farmers in each EU member state from (a) 2000 to 2002, (b) 1997 to 1999 and (c) 1994 to 1996. [93571]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 January 2003]: Based on available data, the following table gives the average level of CAP direct subsidy paid by EU member state.

Average level of CAP direct subsidy paid by EU member state

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how many farms in each member state are (a) under 50 hectares, (b) between 51 and 150 hectares, (c) 151 to 250 hectares, (d) 251 to 350 hectares, (e) 351 to 450 hectares, (f) 451 to 550 hectares and (g) 551 hectares and over. [93572]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The most recent results available on farm sizes across member states are from the 1997 Farm Structure Survey, are shown in the table. Results from the 2000 survey are expected to be released by Eurostat later in 2003.

Flooding

Patrick Mercer: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what measures are in place to prevent the flooding of properties along the Trent in Nottinghamshire; and what financial provision has been made for flood defence in Nottinghamshire in 2003–04. [92858]

Mr. Morley: This Department provides grants for flood and coastal defence capital works, and associated studies, which meet essential technical, economic and environmental criteria and achieve an appropriate priority score Operational responsibility for flood management measures rests with the local operating authorities, normally the Environment Agency (EA) and local councils, who decide which projects to promote and their timing.

I understand that there are approximately 250 km of flood defences along the Trent and its tributaries which have been constructed by the Environment Agency and its predecessors. The Agency spends some £1.5million per year on the maintenance of these flood defence systems.

Defra encourages operating authorities to take a strategic approach to flood and coastal defence problems and to consider the need for schemes and develop proposals within an overall strategy for catchment areas so as not to create problems elsewhere. The Agency has commissioned consultants to prepare a strategy which will inform flood defence options for the River Trent between Stoke-on-Trent and Newark. Defra is providing grant aid for related studies. It is expected that the strategy will be published this Autumn. The Agency then plan to prepare a strategy for the tidal reach of the River between Newark and the Number Estuary. Defra will consider any capital works emerging from these strategies against the criteria above.

Fly-tipping

Mr. Lindsay Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs if she will make a statement on changes in the rate of fly-tipping in the last three years. [93709]

Mr. Meacher: Data on the level of fly-tipping is not currently collected centrally. Anecdotal evidence suggests that fly-tipping may have increased recently, but the Government have no firm evidence. We intend to carry out some further work in this area to ensure that we have a firm data base to inform future policy development.

Future of Farming and Food Report

Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what plans she has to review the recommendations laid out in the Report on the Future of Farming and Food and her Department's response to it in the light of the recent proposals for common agricultural policy reform. [93742]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 January 2003]: The European Commission's proposals for reform of the common agricultural policy (CAP), published on 22 January 2003, are based closely on proposals in their discussion document of 10 July 2002. Therefore, we see no need to review the Government response to the independent Policy Commission, published alongside the Strategy for Sustainable Farming and Food for England on 12 December 2002.

The Commission's proposals are a positive step towards reform and will benefit farming. The Government will engage positively in negotiations, working to ensure a fair package for the UK.

Recycling

Mr Ian Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs how much farm waste was used in recycling across the UK in 2002. [93126]

Mr. Meacher: Agricultural waste is currently excluded from waste management controls in Great Britain by section 75(7)(c) of the Environmental Protection Act 1990. No data are therefore held centrally of either the total amount of agricultural waste produced annually in the UK or the amount recycled. The same position applies under Northern Ireland legislation.

Waste Disposal Plants

Mr Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what control she has over the operation of waste disposal plants. [93121]

Mr. Meacher: The Department controls the regulation of waste disposal and recovery sites through a licensing system that is set out in legislation. The Environment Agency must have regard to the legislative framework and to any statutory guidance provided by my Department when discharging its functions as the Government's regulator and when fulfilling the requirements of the European Directives on waste.

The operation of waste disposal plants is largely in the hands of the private sector. The Environment Agency prescribes the nature of the operations through waste management licences and pollution prevention and control permits and it supervises compliance with the relevant terms and conditions.

Mr Ian Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what the maximum permitted levels of smell from a waste plant are. [93124]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency regulates odour emissions from waste facilities with the objective of achieving "no reasonable cause for annoyance". The level of odour from a waste facility that will result in annoyance will depend on factors such as the type, strength and duration of odour. Guidance for Environment Agency officers in determining unacceptable levels of odour from waste facilities is provided in "Internal Guidance for the Regulation of odour at waste management facilities" and "IPPC Horizontal guidance note H4—external consultation". Both of these documents are available on the Environment Agency's website at www.environment-agency.gov.uk.

Mr Ian Liddell-Grainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs what work has been done on assessing the effect of waste treatment plants on livestock. [93125]

Mr. Meacher: No work has been done specifically relating to the effects of waste treatment plants on livestock.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Council Housing Finance

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he plans to take into account the National Audit Office report, "Improving Social Housing Through Transfer", in his forthcoming statement on council housing finance; and whether he contributed to the NAO report during its preparation. [93694]

Mr. McNulty: The National Audit Office worked closely with the Office of the Deputy Prime Minister in researching their report on "Improving Social Housing Through Transfer". This has been helpful in the broader review of the vehicles for the delivery of the decent home target.

Firefighters' Dispute

Mr. Edward Davey: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister how many armed forces breathing apparatus rescue teams and rescue equipment support teams were on fire cover during the strike by members of the Fire Brigades Union on 21 January 2003. [94219]

Mr. Raynsford: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, West (John Barrett) on 30 January 2003, Official Report.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what measures he will take to lift the ceiling on local authority funding in order to allow more resources to be directed towards the police. [94868]

Mr. Raynsford: Local authorities are split into three groups for the purposes of the floor and ceiling calculations. These are:

authorities with responsibility for education and social services;

shire district councils; and police and metropolitan fire authorities, including the Greater London Authority.

The total amount of grant for each of these groups is unaltered by the application of floors and ceilings. Therefore, lifting the ceiling would not direct more resources to this group. In order to pay for the increased level of the ceiling, either the level of the floor would need to be lowered, or the authorities between the floor and the ceiling would need to contribute more money to help pay for the floor via the scaling factor. The Office of the Deputy Prime Minister believes that it has set the level of floors and ceilings at an appropriate level to ensure a reasonable increase in grant for all authorities.

Neighbourhood Renewal

Dr. Francis: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will make a statement on how the development of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy has been influenced by lessons from the Adult and Community Learning Fund. [94466]

Mrs. Roche: The development of the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy was influenced by the Adult and Community Learning Fund in that Department for Education and Skills officials provided the Neighbourhood Renewal Unit with the findings of the independent ACLF evaluations and impact studies as the Neighbourhood Renewal Strategy was being devised.

Waste Disposal

Harry Cohen: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will impose, as an additional requirement upon the City of London Corporation, as part of the local government grant allocation settlement, provision for the effective removal from forest and other open space land, for which it is responsible, rubbish which has been fly-tipped, obsolete tyres and refrigerators and abandoned cars, from its own resources; and if he will make a statement. [94518]

Mr. Raynsford: Under section 59 of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, the local authority (or the Environment Agency) has the power to remove fly-tipped waste from private land and to recover the costs of doing so from the perpetrators, where they can be traced. The Department for Environment, Food and Rural Affairs is responsible for the policy on fly-tipping. There are no plans to require local authorities to remove fly-tipped waste as such a requirement would provide an incentive for unscrupulous operators to fly-tip waste in the knowledge that it would be removed at no cost to them. Local authorities are already required to remove abandoned vehicles. It would therefore not be appropriate to impose additional requirements on the City.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Deputy Prime Minister what estimate he has made of the differing regional take ups of working families tax credit before deciding that it would be appropriate for working families tax credit to be used in the education formulae of the local government grant. [94636]

Mr. Raynsford: Ministers are aware of the difficulties caused by differential take-up rates and that, as a new scheme, the working families tax credit might be particularly affected. They considered, however, that the benefit to the education formula of broadening the measurement of social need considerably outweighed any drawbacks.

WALES

Bmibaby (Cardiff)

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had regarding the services offered by the airline Bmibaby from Cardiff airport. [90751]

Peter Hain: Services at Cardiff airport frequently arise in my discussions. The growing range of destinations now being offered by Bmibaby represents a substantial improvement in local customer choice, as well as a welcome contribution to the economy of South Wales.

Computer Misuse

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of computer misuse there were in his Department in each of the last five years, broken down by each category of misuse; and how many of those cases resulted in disciplinary action. [93048]

Peter Hain: One, since the establishment of the Wales Office on 1 July 1999. The individual concerned was given a formal warning.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what the running costs were of the Department in (a) 1997 and (b) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90753]

Peter Hain: The net running costs of the Wales Office in 2001–02 were £2.4 million. The Department was established in 1999.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many full-time equivalent staff are employed in the Department; and what the figures were for 1997. [90667]

Peter Hain: Since the establishment of the Wales Office on 1 July 1999, it has been staffed entirely by secondees mainly from the National Assembly for Wales. As at 1 January 2003, the number of full-time equivalents seconded to the Wales Office was 42 staff.

Higher Education Funding

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he had with the Secretary of State for Education and Skills on devolving to the National Assembly for Wales powers over tuition fees and maintenance grants over the weekend prior to the launch of the White Paper on Higher Education. [95229]

Peter Hain: I have regular discussions with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, including, most recently, the question of further devolution in this area to the National Assembly for Wales.

Industrial Action/Illness

Mr. Roger Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many working days have been lost in his Department owing to (a) industrial action and (b) illness in each year since 1997–98. [94282]

Peter Hain [holding answer 30 January 2003]: My Department was created in July 1999 and has lost no days to industrial action. In respect of illness I refer the hon. Member to the answer my predecessor gave to the hon. Member for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) on 23 May 2002, Official Report, column 514W.

Job Sharing

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the extent of job sharing in his Department. [90864]

Peter Hain: Job sharing is only one of a number of alternative and flexible working patterns that staff at the Wales Office are welcome to take up. The flexibility of the pattern is decided in consultation with management to suit an individual's need and the needs of their work. At the present time, the Wales Office has eight staff out of 49 who work a flexible pattern; none of these job-share.

Media Briefings

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what briefings he provided to the media in advance of the statement made by the Secretary of State for Education and Skills on higher education, 22 January 2003, Official Report, columns 301–19, in respect of reports that the National Assembly for Wales was to be given additional powers over student support in higher education. [93720]

Peter Hain: I gave no such briefings. However, my Department did field media calls on the issue. After the statement to the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Skills, I gave on the record interviews and issued a press statement.

Special Advisers

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many special advisers there are in his Department; what their cost was in each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [90099]

Peter Hain: I have two special advisers. Special advisers are paid on national salary scales that apply to all Government Departments; the basic scale currently ranges from £34,851 to £45,760.

WORK AND PENSIONS

Bank Accounts

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what identity verification requirements there are for the opening of a basic bank account; and if he will make a statement on the measures being taken to minimise fraud in relation to the payment of benefits into basic bank accounts. [94896]

Malcolm Wicks: When a customer opens a basic bank account of their choice, under the money laundering regulations, they will need to provide proof of who they are and where they live. The bank will tell them which documents they will accept as proof—typical things are a passport, full current driving licence, order book, utility bill and council tax bill.

The move to payment directly into basic bank accounts uses tried and tested technology already chosen by over 42 per cent. of benefit recipients to access their benefit payments via bank accounts.

Benefit Payments

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions what safeguards are in place to ensure (a) that the automated payment of benefits to bank accounts is to accounts in claimants' own names and (b) that such accounts are genuinely opened and operated by the claimant in question; in what circumstances he allows benefits to be paid to an account in the name of a person other than the claimant; and if he will make a statement. [94895]

Malcolm Wicks: Benefits are paid into the account nominated on the claim form by the claimant. The claims and payments regulations allow payment into accounts in the name of the person entitled to benefit, or their spouse (or partner), or a person acting on their behalf, or in the joint names of the person entitled to benefit and their spouse (or partner), or the person entitled to benefit and a person acting on their behalf. These are the options listed on claim forms or other relevant literature.

Correspondence

Mr. Gerald Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions when he intends to reply to the letter to him dated 11 December from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton, with regard to Mr. A. Ali. [94696]

Mr. Andrew Smith: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 30 January 2003

Empty Homes

Mr Geoffrey Clifton-Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Work and Pensions how many empty homes his Department (a) had five years ago and (b) has now, by region; if he will establish an empty homes strategy within his Department; and if he will set a target for reduction in empty homes. [92921]

Malcolm Wicks: This Department occupies approximately 1,800 buildings. Of those, only 6 contain living accommodation. One of the two flats which form a sub-lettable part of a DWP building in the London region is vacant at present. All such sub-lettable space is actively managed by the department's property advisers to minimise vacancies. We are currently looking at options for the future of the building as a whole.

In view of the numbers involved I do not believe the Department needs either a strategy or a target for reduction. Records that are available indicate that there were no unoccupied homes five years ago.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH

Afghanistan

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent progress has been made in the reconstruction of Afghanistan. [93013]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given her by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State at the Department for International Development, 27 January 2003, Official Report, column 574W.

China

Jane Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Chinese Government about the treatment of female prisoners in Drapchi prison, Tibet. [93949]

Mr. Rammell: We raised our concerns specifically about the treatment of both nuns and monks in Drapchi prison in the UK/China Human Rights Dialogue in 1998, 1999, 2000 and 2001.

An EU Ambassadors Troika delegation, led by the UK, as President, visited Tibet, including Drapchi prison in 1998.

Egypt

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning a court case challenging the constitutionality of the Hamayouni Decree, governing the construction of Christian places of worship in Egypt, which is due to open in Cairo on 28 January 2003; and whether he will be sending a human rights observer to monitor the trial. [93852]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Our officials at the British Embassy in Cairo have been monitoring the case challenging the constitutionality of the Hamayouni Decree in Egypt. The trial session on 28 January was the first trial hearing since the case was referred from the State Commissioners court. Our officials have learned that the case has been adjourned until 28 February for further examination of the case by the authorities. Our officials in Cairo will continue to monitor the trial.

Embassy Security

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much has been allocated to the increased protection of British embassies and consulates since 11 September 2001; and what general improvements have been made. [93616]

Mr. Rammell: The FCO embarked on a programme of physical security enhancements following the 1998 attacks on US missions in East Africa. After the attacks in the US on 11 September 2001, the FCO accelerated its investment in further securing both staff and missions. Over £25 million has been invested in physical security enhancements for British missions overseas. This work has included the installation of bomb blast windows, reinforcement of perimeter security and a variety of other physical security enhancements at a number of posts.

Gibraltar

Mr. MacDougall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the Chief Minister of Gibraltar; and what issues were discussed. [93557]

Mr. MacShane: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last met the Chief Minister during his visit to Gibraltar on 3 May 2002. They discussed a wide range of issues.

Visa Centres (India)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the new visa centres will open in (a) Gujarat and (b) the Punjab. [93879]

Mr. Rammell: We plan to open a visa application centre in Jalandhar (Punjab) on 3 February. New application centres will also open that day in New Delhi and Chandigarh. The new application centre in Gujarat will open on 24 February in Ahmedabad, as will the centres in Mumbai and Pune. We also plan to open application centres in Chennai, Bangalore and Hyderabad on 10 February and in Kolkata on 17 February.

The establishment of this network of 10 application centres is part of our continuing effort to improve visa services for our customers in India. Many will no longer need to make the often long and difficult journey to make a visa application, but instead can visit one of the conveniently located application centres closer to their home.

India/Pakistan

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent steps he has taken to encourage (a) India and (b) Pakistan to sign up to (i) the Test Ban Treaty and (ii) the Non Proliferation Treaty. [93426]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The UK supports the implementation of UN Security Council Resolution 1172, adopted on 6 June 1999, which calls upon both India and Pakistan to cease nuclear testing, to stop their programmes for the development of nuclear weapons and systems for delivery of such weapons, and to enter into dialogue to reduce (and ultimately remove) tensions between them. It also urges both states to accede to both the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty and the Comprehensive Nuclear Test Ban Treaty without delay and without conditions.

We regularly press both countries to abide by all the obligations placed upon them by this resolution.

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last made representations to his counterparts in (a) India and (b) Pakistan on their nuclear weapons programmes; and what the response was. [93899]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The issue of the nuclear weapons programmes of both India and Pakistan has been discussed at many meetings at both ministerial and official level, particularly since the crisis last September.

Iraq

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, what the country of manufacture is of the gas canisters discovered by UN inspectors in Iraq on 16 January; and if he will make a statement. [94148]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer of 30 January 2003]. UNMOVIC have not yet disclosed to us the origin of the goods discovered on 16 January.

Israel

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to present to the United Nations a proposed resolution to require Israel to destroy its weapons of mass destruction. [93895]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: We regularly urge Israel to resolve international concerns about its nuclear status by acceding to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty as a non-nuclear weapons state and to enter into a full safeguards agreement with the IAEA. We also use our bilateral contacts with them to raise the issue of Israeli accession to the Chemical Weapons Convention and the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention.

The UK has consistently supported a number of resolutions at the UN calling for the establishment of a Middle East Zone Free of Weapons of Mass Destruction.

Malta

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he voted in the Council of Ministers to allow the shooting of migratory birds in Malta for five years after the Maltese join the EU. [93580]

Mr. MacShane: As part of the package agreed during the EU accession negotiations, Malta was granted one transition period until the end of 2008 in order to phase out the trapping of seven types of finch and establish a captive breeding programme. Malta is also entitled, like existing member states, to apply a derogation under Article 9 of the Birds Directive which will allow the practice of the taking of quail and turtle dove in spring to continue. The Copenhagen European Council agreed, unanimously, to the global package on enlargement, including for Malta.

North Korea

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on how many occasions since 1990 the UK has raised its concerns in the UN about the North Korean missile development programme. [93425]

Mr. Rammell: The United Kingdom, as a permanent member of the Security Council, has raised the issue in informal and private consultations with other member states at the UN and with the UN Secretary-General on a number of occasions. The number of such representations made is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, the UK, as a Permanent Member of the United Nations Security Council, has been party to statements made by the President of the Security Council and a resolution in connection to North Korea's nuclear programmes since 1990. These include a statement to the media made by the President of the Security Council following consultations by the Council on 8 April 1993; Resolution 825 adopted by the Security Council on 11 May 1993, and three further statements made by the President of the Security Council on 31 March 1994, 30 May 1994 and 4 November 1994.

Publicity and Advertising

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much (a) his Department and (b) each agency and non-departmental public body sponsored by his Department spent on (i) publicity and (ii) advertising in each year from 1995–96 to 2002–03 (estimated); and if he will make a statement. [92229]

Mr. Rammell: The separately identifiable expenditure by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on the categories listed by the hon. Member are:

Expenditure by category

	Publicity	Advertising
1995–96	16,768,873	0
1996–97	14,104,569	0
1997–98	14,627,831	54,038
1998–99	11,919,392	1,029,850
1999–2000	13,545,306	54,498
2000–01	13,233,690	51,950
2001–02	10,682,233	49,581
2002–03[1]	10,061,313	14,926

[1] Estimated outturn.

The figures provided represent the expenditure of the FCO and not of Wilton Park, our only agency, or our 10 NDPBs; these details are not held centrally and cannot therefore be compiled without incurring disproportionate cost.

The figures in the table include expenditure on consular publicity but exclude expenditure on advertising for recruitment. The advertising figure for 1998–99 includes £1 million spent on a consular advertising campaign in the run-up to the 1998 World Cup held in France. In addition to the expenditure identified, there was minor additional expenditure in the United Kingdom and overseas during the years specified. This cannot be ascertained without incurring disproportionate cost. The Government are committed to using only cost effective channels to deliver the publicity necessary to support policy implementation. Paid advertising is only resorted to after careful consideration of the cost-benefits.

Saudi Arabia (British Detainees)

Dr. Pugh: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what advice is being given to British subjects travelling to Saudi Arabia about terrorist threats to their safety; and what precautions they are being advised to take following the recent bombing. [93704]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign Office's travel advice for Saudi Arabia warns British nationals that "Saudi Arabia is one of a number of countries where there is an increased threat to visible British institutions and organisations from global terrorism." It explains that "given the heightened tension in the Middle East region and the increased threat from global terrorism, UK nationals in Saudi Arabia should be vigilant, particularly in public places frequented by foreigners such as hotels, restaurants and shopping malls. Visitors and residents should follow political developments in the region; and observe the British Embassy's advice on personal and vehicle security." The travel advice also alerts British nationals to the recent series of bombings in Riyadh and Al Khobar where British nationals were among the victims.

Our travel advice is kept constantly under review. It is available on the Foreign Office website www.fco.gov.uk and the website for the British Embassy, Riyadh www.ukm.org.sa. The British Embassy in Riyadh also provides regular advice to British residents in Saudi Arabia through its wardens' network.

Sickness Absence

Mr. Laws: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what the rate of staff (a) absenteeism and (b) sickness was in his Department and each of its agencies and non-departmental public bodies in each year from 1990–91 to 2002–03; what the target set is for his Department; and if he will make a statement. [93503]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office sickness absence figures are listed in the table. Absentee rates and information on FCO non-departmental public bodies absences are not stored centrally so it is not possible to provide this information without incurring disproportionate costs. However all the FCO's 10 NDPBs are small, with virtually no full-time staff.

The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has set a Service Delivery Agreement to reduce sickness absence to 5.6 days by the end of 2003.

Year	Average number of days per officer
1997	8.9
1998	8.0
1999	N/a
2000	6.3
2001	6.6
2002	5.7

1. Figures for 1997 to 1998 have been uplifted to account for different recording practices in different parts of the Department and its overseas posts.
2. Figures for 1999 could be provided only at disproportionate costs, the method of recording changed part way through 1999.
3. FCO figures are recorded as total days (not working days).
4. It is not possible to provide figures prior to 1997 without incurring disproportionate costs.

United Nations (Global Terrorism)

Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of (a) the text of the Security Council Resolution and (b) a transcript of the Security Council Debate, on the International Community's response to Global Terrorism, held at United Nations Headquarters on 23 January. [94038]

Mr. Rammell: I have placed in the Library a copy of Security Council Resolution 1456 (2003) and the transcript of the Security Council Debate, on the International Community's response to Global Terrorism, which actually took place at United Nations Headquarters on 20 January.

TREASURY

Capital Modernisation Fund

Ann McKechin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 246W, what his Department's priorities were for funding under the Capital Modernisation Fund in 2001; and which of those priorities the application from Citizens Advice Scotland failed to meet. [95160]

Mr. Boateng: The criteria for the Capital Modernisation Fund include innovation, the improvements to the efficiency and effectiveness of the service delivered to the end-user, and the need for additional funds to deliver the service above normal departmental allocations. However, as the Fund is limited and is generally considerably oversubscribed, it is necessary to judge bids not just on their own merits, but on their relative priority against other bids.

Ann McKechin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 21 January, Official Report, column 246W, how many applications from Scotland were made to the Capital Modernisation Fund in 2001; and how many of those applications were successful in obtaining funds from his Department. [95161]

Mr. Boateng: As explained in my Answer of 21 January, the devolved administrations automatically receive a share of allocations made from the Capital Modernisation Fund for devolved matters, calculated according to the Barnett formula. There is no need for the Scottish Executive to submit bids to receive this funding.

Customs and Excise

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will place in the Library the information on release of posts from support for redeployment which was the basis of the report in the Customs and Excise Spring 2002 report, column 5427, on PSA 2000 target 7; and if he will make a statement. [90981]

(2) if he will place in the Library the formula for aggregating the underlying data into the performance indicator of the Customs and Excise Spring 2002 report; and if he will make a statement. [90982]

John Healey: The Customs target to release posts from support to activities which directly contribute to PSA/SDA outcomes covers the three years of the SR2000 period. It therefore applies until 31 March 2004. The Spring 2002 Report was based on support activity remaining at around 17 per cent. of total activity, even though additional support posts had been added to baseline to begin implementation of the Department's e-Business programme. An update on the target was provided in the Department's "Annual Report and Accounts" for 2001–02 (Cm5671). I am placing the formula for aggregating underlying output and input data in the Library.

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his estimate is of total public spending on HM Customs and Excise in each year from 1990–91 to 2004–05 (planned) in real terms using 2000–01 prices; and if he will make a statement. [91725]

John Healey: Information on past total public expenditure on HM Customs & Excise is in the Department's Annual Reports (specifically—in the Financial Statements until 1998–99, and from 1999–00 in the Departmental Resource Accounts) covering each year 1990–91 to 2001–02. Copies are available in the Library. Planned out-turn for 2002–03 and 2003–04 was published in June 2002 in the Department's Spring Report. High level data for the period through to 2005–06 was published in the 2002 Spending Review White Paper. Prices can be adjusted to 2000–01 levels by applying the GDP deflator, which can be found on the Treasury's website under Economic Data and Tools. More up to date and detailed information on the Department's spending plans will appear in the Departmental Spring Report 2003.

Mr. Nick Hawkins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the cost to the public purse will be, including compensation payments, of the collapsed prosecutions by Customs and Excise referred to in the Economic Secretary's statement of 23rd January, including cases to be withdrawn in the immediate future. [93960]

John Healey [holding answer 28 January 2003]: Following the decision of the prosecution to offer no evidence in the London City Bond abuse of process hearing in November last year, the Commissioners of Customs & Excise and the Prosecution Group of Customs' Solicitors Office (who are now accountable to the Attorney General) commenced a review of the safety of the convictions in all LCB- connected cases. The decision of the prosecution not to oppose the appeal in the case of R v Grant and others (known as the 'Stockade' case) in the Court of Appeal was the outcome of part of that review.

As I explained to the House in my Statement of 23 January, twenty further cases are being reviewed, and there have been eight in which no evidence was offered against defendants, or in which convictions have been overturned by the Court of Appeal. The cost of instructing Prosecuting Counsel in these eight cases was 4.3m, out of the total prosecution legal costs in all the LCB cases of £7.4million.

Estimates are not available for other costs, such as legal aid costs for defendants. Claims for compensation under the statutory miscarriage of justice scheme are for the Home Office, and it is not known whether any such claims will be made, or whether they will be successful. Claims for common law damages against Customs will be resisted, and are not expected to be successful.

Financial Services

Mr. Steve Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis, and on what date, the value of the assets of a financial institution are valued for purposes of calculating the level of compensation available under the Financial Services Compensation Scheme; and if he will make a statement on the way in which the scheme would apply to policy holders of a life assurance and pensions provider in the event of the company becoming insolvent. [93357]

Ruth Kelly [holding answer 27 January 2003]: The valuation of assets of a financial institution does not affect the level of compensation available under the Financial Services Compensation Scheme (FSCS). The FSCS can pay compensation when an authorised financial institution is unable, or likely to be unable, to meet the claims against it and the valuation of the assets of the institution may be a relevant factor in the FSCS's decision.

The basis on which claims against a financial institution are valued are set out in the Financial Services Compensation Scheme's Rules.

How the Scheme would apply to policyholders of an insolvent life insurer is also covered in the Scheme's Rules.

The Rules are written by the Financial Services Authority (the FSA), and form part of the FSA Handbook under 'Redress, Compensation'. The Rules are readily available, and can be viewed by accessing the FSA website, www.fsa.gov.uk.

Inland Revenue

Mr. Laws: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many Inland Revenue computers have been (a) lost and (b) stolen in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [91718]

Dawn Primarolo: The following totals of PCs and Laptops that have either been lost or stolen come from the Inland Revenue's Security Incident Reporting database.

	Laptop		PCs
	Lost	Stolen	Lost	Stolen	Total
1998	1	6	0	26	33
1999	0	29	0	51	80
2000	3	43	0	56	102
2001	3	56	0	201	260
2002	2	32	0	52	86
Total	9	166	0	386	561

The Inland Revenue operates a proactive security risk management system. All office managers are required to carry out regular security reviews of their buildings and report annually through line management to the Chairman of the Board. The Department has it's own team security advisors to assist managers and audit the process.

Private Finance Initiative

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to hold an overall review of the Private Finance Initiative process; [92770]

(2) what reforms (a) he has made and (b) he intends to make to the procurement process of the of the Private Finance Initiative [92773]

Mr. Boateng: The Government keeps all aspects of procurement policy under review in order to ensure that high quality public services are delivered on the basis of value for money.

Starting with the abolition of compulsory testing and the development of Treasury Taskforce guidance on PFI, the Government has introduced a number of reforms to spread best practice, including revised guidance on standardised contracts; the launch of a new Green Book on project appraisal; the launch of a Code of Conduct on the refinancing of early PFI projects; and the piloting of batched procurement.

Public Services Productivity

Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer pursuant to his answer of 22 January, Official Report, column 420W, on Public Services Productivity, if he will list the members of the Public Services Productivity Panel that attended each meeting since January 2000; and if he will make a statement. [94375]

Mr. Boateng: The Public Services Productivity Panel is a small group of senior business people and public sector managers that meets occasionally to assist with the development of policy. The Panel have met nine times since January 2000. All of these meetings were well attended.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Assaults on NHS Staff

Tim Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions took place last year against people who assaulted NHS staff; and what range of penalties was imposed. [92618]

Hilary Benn: As the hon. Member will be aware, a cross-Government NHS zero tolerance zone campaign was launched in October 1999 to tackle violence against staff working in the NHS. The campaign aims to get the message to both NHS staff and members of the public that violence against NHS staff is unacceptable and the Government are determined to stamp it out.

The specific information requested is not collected centrally by the Home Office.

Departmental Running Costs

Mr. Andrew Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the running costs of (a) the Department and (b) each of its sponsored agencies were in (i) 1997 and (ii) the most recent year for which figures are available. [90710]

Mr. Blunkett: The Home Office running costs are set out in the Departmental Annual report and placed in the Library.

Departmental Secondments

Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff from his Department are on secondment elsewhere; and where they are seconded. [93300]

Mr. Blunkett: Secondments are part of the Interchange initiative, which promotes the exchange of people and good practice between the civil service and other organisations. All sectors of the economy are involved: voluntary, education, health, public and private. Interchange provides opportunities for civil servants to learn new skills, widen their experience and develop ideas. It also brings in skills and experiences from other sectors.

A total of 539 members of staff are seconded outside the Home Office, including 429 to Centrex (formerly National Police Training) which used to be part of the Home Office.

Details of organisations are set out in the following table.

Drug/Alcohol Addiction

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the change in real terms in spending on drug and alcohol addiction was over the three years to 2005–06. [94012]

Mr. Bob Ainsworth: Allowing for inflation, the Government's annual planned expenditure on proactively tackling drugs is:

2003–04—£1,216 million: a 19 per cent. increase on the current year;

2004–05—£1,281 million: a 25 per cent. increase on the current year; and

2005–06—£1,383 million: a 35 per cent. increase on the current year.

The majority of the funding for alcohol treatment is spent via the general budgets of primary care trusts and local social service departments, which is consistent with provision being determined following a local consideration of need. This method of funding means that it is not possible to give details of spending on alcohol treatment, but latest estimates indicate that around £95 million is spent each year on treatment in England, and that most of this funding is provided by the Government.

Prison Budgets

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the relationship between the budget of individual prisons and the number of educational and vocational qualifications obtained by their inmates. [94490]

Hilary Benn: From 2001, the core budget for prison education has been ring-fenced and is administered jointly by the Home Office and the Department for Education and Skills, through the Prisoners' Learning and Skills Unit. At the time of ring-fencing, education budgets were historically based, but from 2002–03, part of the education budget has been linked to achievement of basic skills qualifications. We will develop further the links between funding and educational and vocational qualifications as we increase funding for prison education to £125 million by 2005–06. The recent review of prison education funding and procurement also identified opportunities for introducing other relevant achievement measures and we are considering these.

Prison Governors

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those prison establishments in which there have been changes at governor level, including changes involving those acting as governor for one month or more, in the last five years; when each such change took place; and who (a) the governor leaving and (b) the replacement was in each case. [91370]

Hilary Benn: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Prison Officers/Police Officers

Dr. Murrison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the (a) prevalence and (b) causes of occupational stress (i) among prison officers and (ii) in the police. [93666]

Hilary Benn: The Prison Service carried out an audit into the causes and extent of stress among prison officers and other staff in 2001–02. The audits were conducted at a number of representative prisons and at headquarters. The results suggest that stress is common among prison staff and is due to a wide range of causes. As a result of this work, the Prison Service is developing a policy for preventing stress together with a range of initiatives aimed at supporting those who may be suffering from stress.

Figures for police sickness absence showed an average loss of 11.5 working days per officer in 2001–02 and an average of 12 working days per support staff member. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary has not previously recorded exact figures on what proportion of that absence relates to stress, although stress and musculo-skeletal disorders are unofficially recognised as the two main contributors.

From April 2003, all forces will have begun measuring sickness absence according to new data collection arrangements. This was released in June last year by the Police Numbers Task Force and will ensure that sickness absence is broken down into categories, including stress-related illness. The new data collection arrangements will enable forces to target the types of sickness absence that have the most effect on them.

There has been much discussion by occupational health professionals both inside and outside the Police Service regarding the causes of stress. As yet there is no one prevailing view on the subject. Some forces have already conducted internal stress audits/and begun to target the causes of stress at local level.

Probation Service

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received concerning (a) workloads and (b) resources in the Probation Service. [94486]

Hilary Benn: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, through the National Probation Directorate, has received representations as follows:

(a) In respect of workloads, representations were made by the Trade Unions and staff representative bodies which led in January 2001 to a Joint Agreement on Priorities and Employee Care between the Home Office, probation employers, Trade Unions and staff representative bodies. This agreement identified the areas for concern raised by all signatories and a joint framework for improvement. The National Probation Directorate is leading the project to design and implement a Workload Measurement Tool, and has provided a Workload Prioritisation Framework.

The National Association of Probation Officers is undertaking a campaign in respect of workloads which has led to a formal dispute. Local agreements to settle this dispute have now been reached in 34 of the 42 areas of the National Probation Service for England and Wales, and negotiations continue in the remaining eight areas.

(b) In respect of resources, 16 Probation Boards have expressed views about their budget for 2003–04.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the (a) pay and (b) career development rewards available to probation officers for personal success in reducing re-offending by offenders assigned to them; and what plans he has to change them. [94492]

Hilary Benn: Probation officers are paid on a range in accordance with a nationally negotiated salary spine as part of the national agreement on pay and conditions of service.

(a) The current salary spine for probation officers is from a minimum of £19,443 to a maximum of £26,226.

(b) Probation officers are eligible for merit increases when they reach the maximum of the pay spine with a current maximum of £28,686.

The National Probation Directorate, in conjunction with the Probation Boards Association and the trade unions representing staff in the National Probation Service (NPS), is currently reviewing the structure of pay and reward for staff in NPS, including probation officers. The objective of this re-evaluation of the current system is to see that the NPS has an appropriate pay and reward strategy that properly rewards staff for high performance and ensures the recruitment and retention of a highly skilled and motivated work force.

Restriction and Restraining Orders

Mr. Malins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many travel restriction orders have been made by the courts under the Criminal Justice and Police Act 2001; [91016]

(2) how many restraining orders for sexual offenders have been made by the courts pursuant to the provisions of the Criminal Justice and Court Services Act 2000. [91017]

Hilary Benn: Restraining orders for sexual offenders were introduced on 1 June 2001, but none was reported to the Home Office Court Proceedings Database as having been made in the period to 31December 2001.

The orders were introduced alongside a wide range of other measures. We expect the number of orders to increase as the courts become more familiar with the orders and how they can be applied.

Travel restriction orders were brought into force on 1 April 2002, and statistics for 2002 are not yet available.

Information for 2002 is due for publication in the late autumn of 2003.

Service Delivery Agreement

Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when his Department's service delivery agreement for 2003 to 2006 will be published. [94120]

Mr. Blunkett: The Home Department's service delivery agreement for 2003 to 2006 will be published in the next few days.

Special Branch

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to create a national special branch co-ordination unit; [94130]

(2) what plans he has to create a single UK special branch; and if he will make a statement. [94129]

Mr. Blunkett: We welcome plans being considered by the police service to strengthen special branch along regional lines. Even closer co-operation between neighbouring special branches will build on and improve effective working relationships.

The form that such re-organisation might take-including whether there is a need for a national co-ordinator of special branch-is currently the subject of discussions within the police service, and between my Department and the police service.

INDEX TO THE PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 398

SESSION 2002–03

20th January—31st January 2003

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
    - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
    - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
    - References ending in 'ws' indicate written statements.
    - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting, is a written statement or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
    - Chamber Debates (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
    - Debates Westminster Hall Debates (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
    - Written Statements (consisting of ministerial statements issued in writing); and
    - Questions (which includes all written, oral and private notice questions).

ABBREVIATIONS

The following abbreviations are used in connection with the progress of bills:

- 1R=First reading
- 2R=Second reading
- Com=Committee stage
- Rep=Report stage
- 3R=Third reading
- res=resolution
- amendt(s)=amendment(s)
- *=matter taken formally without debate or division
- (HL)=Bill starting in House of Lords
- (SP)=Bill in Scottish Parliament.

Parliamentary background

- The Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk contains a range of information about Parliament and the full text of some Parliamentary papers and proceedings including Hansard.
- Information on current Parliamentary business is provided in the House of Commons Information Office Weekly Information Bulletin, available on the website and from The Stationery Office (020 7873 8499).
- Further information on Parliamentary proceedings and procedures is available from the House of Commons Information Office (020 7219 4272).
